DIURETIC STIMULANT TO THE KIDNEYS

Mrs. A. L. Crawford, Medfield, Mass., writes: "When the doctors pronounced my case Bright's Disease, I was in such a serious condition that they could not do anything for me. I kept getting worse. My limbs from my ankles to my knees swelled and my eyes were so swollen that I couldn't see. As a last hope I thought I would give Dodd's Pills a trial. I gradually improved and kept on taking them. I was greatly benefited.

Have System of Levels to Reveal Altitude

Altitudes are obtained by a system of levels for the taking of which one requires considerable engineering knowledge and a set of instruments. There is also a method of estimating altitudes by means of tables worked out on the basis of the reading of the barometer. Differences of temperature affect the density of the air, and consequently exert a certain influence upon an aneroid barometer. This influence has to be taken into account when differences of altitude are being determined by the aid of this instrument. The table, showing allowances that must be made for temperature, most generally used is that prepared by Professor Airy, late astronomer royal of Great Britain, in which 31 inches of pressure represent the zero of altitude, assuming that the temperature is 50 degrees Fahrenheit.

Women's Employment

Among the many trades women have taken up for a livelihood in Great Britain is that of breeding goldfish. An Irish girl gets a living by breeding goats; Lady Rachel Byng breeds Angora rabbits. There are several women "masters of foxhounds," a woman has chosen "tea tasting" for a living, another is a cattle judge and one young lady puts in her whole time as a master of harriers. A college girl has become "a scribe and heraldic illuminator," two others jointly earn a living by jam making on a large scale, two sisters run a small upholstery business, another is a builders' merchant.

Statesmen Nowadays

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, brilliant and downright, said at a recent dinner in New York:

"We have nowadays too many statemen resembling the chap who was out after the governorship. This chap ended all his important speeches with the words:

"'And so, gents, them's my sentiments, and if you don't like 'em I'll change 'em.'"

SPECIAL POINTERS ON CARVING MEAT

Good Work Results in Neatly Severed Joints.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Some men like their wives to carve, and others won't let them attempt it. Some like to carve standing up, and some believe it is a breach of etiquette to do so. Common sense decides the matter in most households, for much depends on who is considered the best carver, the length of his or her effective reach, the height of the chair usually occupied, the tenderness of the meat or poultry to be carved, the sharpness of the knife, and the previous experience of the carver.

Above all things, the carving knife should be sharp. It should be of the best size for the kind of meat to be carved—the small, light type for chicken or steak, and the larger, heavier size for roasts. Carving must be quickly done, before the meat has a chance to chill, and a sharp knife is an aid to speed as well as to the appearance of the food. Good carving results in neatly severed joints, flesh cut across the grain, thin appetizing slices or portions dispensed so that everyone at the table has at least a bit of the choicer cuts and no one is left with only the undesirable parts.

The illustration, which was taken by the United States Department of Agriculture, shows how to carve a leg of lamb. Notice that the fleshiest side of the meat is uppermost and that the carver steadies the roast with the carving fork held in her left hand, while she slices across the muscle at right angles to the leg bone. Cutting the meat parallel to the bone, as one often sees it done, results in stringy portions, difficult to chew. A ham, smoked or fresh, is carved in the same way as a leg of lamb. Thin slices are to be preferred for all of these meats.

A rib roast of beef is carved horizontally—that is, across the grain. A standing roast of beef is placed with the ends of the ribs to the left of the carver. The butcher, in trimming the roast, should remove any bone at the upper or right-hand end that is likely to interfere with carving. The meat is sliced very thinly across the grain until the knife reaches the bone. When several slices have been cut, the point of the knife is run along the edge of the bone to separate the slices from the ribs.

The first step in carving a steak with a T-bone is to trim this bone out. The steak is then cut into sections about an inch wide, beginning at the upper or broad end and cutting at right angles to the former position of the bone, through both tenderloin and large portion. In this way both tenderloin and ordinary steak are served to each person.

A shoulder of lamb presents more difficulty in carving than almost any piece of meat, because of the irregular position of the various bones. If the shoulder blade is removed by the butcher and the cavity stuffed or simply skewered together, the problem is simplified. The lines of the chops can be followed as far as they go.

The art of carving poultry varies with each kind of bird. The skillful carver is the one who knows exactly where to find the joints. In carving most poultry it is well to remove the leg and wing from one side first so as to slice the breast conveniently. The leg of a large bird may be cut into two or more pieces.

Proper Care of Washing Machine of Importance

More and more homemakers are coming to realize that suitable household equipment can save them much needless drudgery. In no case is this more true than with the laundry work. A washing machine is almost indispensable if large washings are to be done at home. In addition to the saving of time and labor the clothes generally last longer if washed in a good machine than if rubbed on a washboard.

Most types of washing machine are simple in construction, strongly built, and easy to care for if properly used and lubricated. In a recent publication on home laundering the United States Department of Agriculture makes the following suggestions concerning the use and care of washing machines:

Wash the correct amount of clothes in your machine as specified by the manufacturer. Overloading is hard on the clothes and the machine. The water line is marked on most machines. Too much water causes excessive splashing and in many instances cuts down the efficiency of the washer greatly.

After using rinse the machine thoroughly with hot water, operate it for a short time, drain and dry. Leave the drain faucet open and prop the lid up an inch or two to allow free circulation of air during the time it is not in use. Cylinders should be removed and thoroughly dried. Drying metal tubs will prevent much discoloration.

Study the booklet furnished by the manufacturer of the machine and oil the machine according to his directions. Lubrication is necessary for every mechanical device, and is a most important point in the proper care of a washer.

If an electric machine is used, pull out the electric plug when leaving the machine between wash days and coil the connecting cord where it will not collect moisture or dirt. Do not lubricate or adjust any part of the washer while the cord is connected to the current source.

Fruit Gelatin Desserts Quite Easy to Prepare

Pure fruit gelatin desserts take only a few minutes to prepare. The proportion is one quart of liquid to one envelope or ounce of gelatin. The gelatin is usually softened in about half a cupful of cold water or fruit juice. If sugar is needed, and as most fruit gelatins are improved by adding the juice of half a lemon, some sugar will be necessary—put it into one cupful of hot water or less and bring it to the boiling point. The amount of sugar depends on the acidity of the fruit juice. Half to three-fourths of a cupful is often needed. Add the softened gelatin to the hot sirup, then add 2¼ cupfuls of uncooked fruit juice—orange or grape or pineapple—whatever you have. Stir thoroughly and strain into molds. In this way the flavor of the uncooked fruit juice is retained, and its vitamins are not destroyed by heating. In warm weather reduce the amount of added water somewhat.

Fabric and Pattern of Best Drapery Material

The fabric and pattern of drapery material should be dignified and simple enough to suit all tastes. If the rug and wall paper are figured or the upholstery decidedly patterned, a plain-colored rep, sateen, lightweight denim, sunfast or casement cloth would be the wisest choice. If all the surfaces of the room are plain, figured materials would relieve the monotony and create a "homey" appearance. Avoid flower designs that look too natural and are in brilliant colors. Carefully blended tones and dignified conventional designs are more suitable.

Leading Food Products

The three leading food products canned commercially are corn, tomatoes and peas. The total pack of these three products in 1925 in round numbers is estimated at about 60,000,000 cases. Since there are two dozen cans to the case, this makes a total of 120,000,000 dozen cans or over one dozen to every person in the United States.

Funeral For Snake

Some time ago a rattlesnake was captured in the Blue Ridge foothills by wood haulers. The reptile became domesticated and docile in his tame surroundings. The whole tannery force turned out for his brief but well-attended funeral services.

A SAFE, DEPENDABLE LAXATIVE

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 89

A Child's Laxative Which Mothers Can Rely On

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he constantly advised mothers to give only a harmless laxative which would help to establish natural bowel "regularity."

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin mothers have a regulating laxative which they can depend upon whenever a child is constipated, bilious, feverish or sick from a cold, indigestion or sour stomach. All children love its pleasant taste.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself how perfectly it cleanses and regulates the bowels of infants and children.

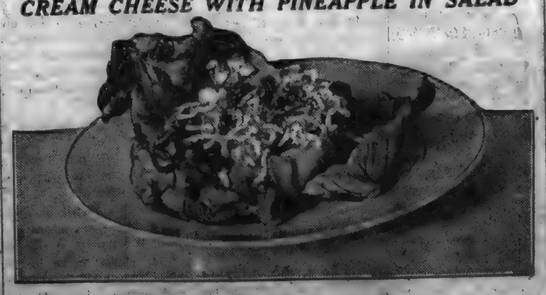
CREAM CHEESE WITH PINEAPPLE IN SALAD



An Excellent Spread for Sandwiches.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The flavor of pineapple combines unusually well with that of cream or neufchatel cheese. So-called Honolulu salad is familiar to most people in the form of a slice of canned pineapple on a bed of lettuce, with a ball or cube of cream cheese in the center, and mayonnaise dressing. Sometimes the cream cheese is seasoned with salt and mixed with chopped nuts or green pepper or pimento, and sometimes it is rolled in one or the other of these flavoring garnishes. The United States Department of Agriculture suggests as a variation that the cheese be put through a potato ricer and dropped on the sliced pineapple arranged on a bed of lettuce. Season with a little salt and paprika pepper.

Finely chopped pineapple mixed with cheese makes an excellent spread for sandwiches or for toasted bread or crackers for afternoon tea.

WORLD INTER-DEPENDENCE CALLS FOR SERIOUS THINKING

REV. WM. G. EVERSON, Brigadier General, U. S. A. Pastor First Baptist Church, Muncie, and Commander of U. S. Forces in Italy During War

Our entrance into the World War changed the map of the world. The American fighting spirit was unleashed with characteristic drive and energy. Our man power, Womanhood, chidren—all gave the limit of patriotic devotion to win the war that was to end war.

Some advances have been made, but the world still thunders back, "there is no peace!" In spite of our sacrifices and prayers, Europe is full of suspicion, China is torn in civil strife, Italy dreams of empire restoration, Japan seeks outlet for a growing population, Mexico keeps diplomats awake, and scores of friction spots demand attention.

Resolutions, protocols, treaties have their place, but war has torn to pieces all bits of paper. A desperate enemy can not be regulated nor controlled, for he defies the laws of both God and man. Even in times of peace, friendly Nations have ignored and trampled on sacred rights. It is easy enough to resolve that war shall never come, an altogether different thing to enforce that resolution.

No man, unless he is a fool, wants another war. No ex-service man wishes conflict. He knows the terrible, unspeakable experiences. Statistics remind us of the billions of dollars in property losses and the unbelievable thousands of killed and wounded, and the story has never been half told. But, here's the other side of it. Suppose we had lost the war, our forces trampled under iron heels, our women and children left to the mercy of a foreign despot, democratic government wiped from the face of the earth. The United States entered in a furious effort to save our own institutions and to shatter the force that threatened the rights of the whole world. The cost was apalling, but my God, suppose we had lost.

Our military policy has never been one of conquest. We seek no territory, raw materials, rights nor lives of people in any part of the world. We have wealth, happiness, a glorious future, and there is no cause for military advancement to possess that which belongs to any other Nation. Our history shows that the United States flag has been carried to foreign battle fields only in defense of a weaker people whose rights were in danger. We asked nothing for ourselves out of the World War—only that humanity be bound together in the bonds of brotherhood.

The question of self-defense is with nations as with individuals. An individual will defend his honor, rights, possessions and person to the last drop of his blood. A nation is but a bundle of individuals with common rights and possessions. Our people have much to consider, much to defend in case of an unexpected emergency. The Bank is constantly ready to protect as is also the City with its police and fire machinery. So must the United States be in a reasonable position for the protection of coast lines, industries, possessions and people. We are a peace loving people, but that does not require us to be cornered where we must take dictations from any Nation on top of the earth.

Our army has been organized as a defensive machine with minimum of money and soldiers. Hence, the organization of the army into three components; the Regular Army, the National Guard, the Reserve Divisions. To the small Regular Army and National Guard has been assigned the mission of organizing and defending the first line and the Reserve Divisions will be expanded as required. This calls for a small professional organization and places the burden on the civilian soldiers.

We hope this old world has learned the lesson that war is a terrible thing and that some day international disputes should be settled without the loss of life and property. But, I am afraid that the nations in general are not yet ready habitually to respect one another's wishes and rights, and to accept legal decisions that go against them. The time has not come for the elimination of reasonable defensive military organization. The reduction of armies and navies is not enough. We must get underneath and grapple with the problems of raw materials, transportation, boundries, temperament, governments, etc., out of which friction and wars come. I sincerely hope we never get into another war, but if it must come, here's my wish that our flag be on the side that wins.

Victories are not won by soldiers alone, but by the united loyalty and support of a great people. In other words, the strength of an army is not measured by its width but by its depth. No army can be successful without its depths of reserves, together with the industrial, social, educational, religious and political support of all whose possessions and lives are being defended. It is a serious thing to disarm a soldier in the presence of an enemy, a still more serious thing to send him forward untrained and hopeless. It is bad enough to knife a man for being a soldier ready to defend his home and Country, but still worse to spread disloyalty and unpatriotism in the depth.

"Long may our land be bright,
With freedom's holy light;
Protect us by thy might,
Great God our King."

DESCRIBING A TORNADO

Tornadoes frequently visit sections of the United States but so vast is our country that few of us have ever seen one of these monsters in action. We doubt if any reader of The News wishes to have any closer acquaintance with these demons of the wind but an interesting description of the recent tornado which killed scores of people in Texas and injured many others is worth reading.

One witness tells how he approached Rock Springs, seeing "a sinister, funnel-shaped cloud racing ahead of me. There was a greenish yellow tinge to the main cloud, set in a background of inky blackness. The cloud dipped and seemed to grasp the city."

It is well known that tornadoes travel in great bounds and, hitting the ground, like a huge, bouncing rubber ball (twist and tear to pieces what happens to be on the spot.) The terrific power of these natural phenomenons appall. The witness later gained access to safety under the heavy timbers, which had fallen. He says:

"I had seen trees, human beings, houses and larger buildings hurled about like chaff. Scantlings were lifted and driven through the bodies of victims. The streets resembled a battlefield."

Later, the bounding agency of destruction approaching McCurtain, Oklahoma. According to an eye-witness, it was deflected by a mountain. Mr. E. H. Blackford, a newspaper man of Stigler, watched the whirling black cloud:

"As it approached the mountain near McCurtain, it apparently gained momentum, hit the mountain side, then fell back. It made another assault, then a third, before it reached the crest. As it struck, trees and housetops shot into the air. The mountain seemed to alter its course and it passed a short distance from McCurtain."

RED CROSS MAKES PLAN, FOR DRIVE

Quota of $1,525 for Flood Sufferers Must Be Raised By Next Sunday

Again the apeal has come to the people of DeKalb county for help in time of disaster. Again, as has been done in times past, the people of DeKalb county will no doubt respond generously.

The quota for this county for flood sufferers has been placed at $1,525. Toward this amount $287.72 has been sent to National Red Cross headquarters. Fifty dollars was wired Saturday. Two hundred and thirty-seven dollars and seventy-two cents was wired Monday. One hundred and fifty dollars was appropriated out of the DeKalb County Red Cross Chapter funds. $87.72 which was left from the summer camp fund last summer was added to this amount.

This money was Red Cross money taken from the funds of the organization. Two hundred and eighty dollars is not enough. More must be sent quickly. Men, women and children are in dire need of help. Human lives are at stake. Thousands upon thousands of homes have been abandoned because of the floods in the Mississippi valley and tributary streams. Many have been drowned. Millions of dollars in property loss has been reported.

We in DeKalb county do not realize the awful calamity which is visiting human beings in the wake of the most terrible flood which this country has ever known. We do not appreciate the situation.

Here in DeKalb county we have been fortunate. We do not know what the devastation from floods means. We have been asked for only a little money—a little from each one. We will, we must respond. We will not see fellow humanity suffer, starve, die.

A public appeal is being made for money in DeKalb county. The appeal is nation wide. In common with other communities, DeKalb county will have a drive for funds. From now until next Sunday inclusive the drive will be carried on unremittingly.

A meeting of Red Cross workers was held Monday morning in the Red Cross rooms of the court house in Auburn.

Although detailed plans were not formulated at the meeting, a start was made. Individuals, organizations, factories and churches will be asked to contribute generously to the disaster relief fund. Each factory as a factory will be asked for money. At Garrett on Sunday, the ministers of the churches solicited funds at the Sunday services. In Auburn the Rotary club will be solicited, also at a meeting of the Commercial club directors donations will be asked. The city will be zoned and business men will be visited by relief workers. The Hickory club, Tri Kappas and Alpha Beta Gammas will be asked to lend their aid in the work of solicitation. Next Saturday will be tag day.

Everyone will be asked. Red Cross workers in every city, town and township in this county will help in the work.

Mrs. Hattie Widney has been made chairman for the drive and a number of helpers will be appointed to assist in the solicitation of funds.

INSPECTORS START IN DEKALB COUNTY

Twenty-five inspectors in groups operating under three supervisors Monday started inspection of fields in six counties in Northeastern Indiana for the purpose of controlling the European corn borer and preventing its spread in Indiana.

The work, which will be carried on under the direction of Frank N. Wallace, state entomologist and the Indiana department of conservation, will continue indefinitely.

Auburn has been designated as the headquarters of the department and from this point all of the activities of the campaign of control will eminate.

It is proposed to operate government tractors and pulveridors in every infected township in the six counties. Forty-four were in the infested area Monday to continue with the pulverizer aid. Eighty-four tractors and pulverisors have been sent here by the federal government. Fourty-four are still available.

The machinery sent here is not intended for custom work but for compulsory clean-up where farmers refuse or ignore instructions. It is not the intention of the department to stop farmers in the area from doing their own work. The purpose of everyone connected with the clean-up is to encourage and help the farmer and to protect other farmers who are willing and are showing a disposition to cooperate. Those in charge of the fight believe that farmers can do their own work more cheaply than the field men. Where they go on a farm and clean up the corn fields as a compulsory measure the farmer is charged for the actual labor and the land owner or tenant is not entitled to any compensation.

Because of unfavorable weather conditions the work has not progressed as rapidly as hoped for. An abnormal amount of rainfall has caused considerable delay. Only a part of the plowing of stubble fields has been done. All of this is not satisfactory and will not pass inspection until additional work has been done on it.

The supervisors and inspectors who commenced Monday with their work in the six infested areas in Northeastern Indiana were as follows:

DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL

The people of our community who have had to help solve the problem of our Daily Vacation Bible School are feeling good over the results so far. So many of the pupils are having the measles but we have an average of 64 for the past week. The children take a great interest in this work and are on time each morning eager to begin the day's work.

Mrs. C. R. Price gave two very interesting stories last week, the story of Ezekiel's vision was given in a dramatic way. Mrs. Lena Meek gave the story of David on Wednesday, on Thursday Mrs. F. R. Bowman the story of Joseph and on Friday Mrs. J. F. McKnight gave a missionary story. These stories are all so good that it would be difficult for adults to judge which was the best and each one has held the atention of the pupils during the entire period.

The children are memorizing all their songs that are used during the worship period.

Our little kindergarten department is doing fine. They have already memorized a little morning prayer, part of the commandments good night prayer also their song. This department is taught by Miss Cleota Morr assisted by Mrs. Lora Leighty.

The primary room is starting at the foundation of their knowledge of the Bible, learning the divisions and names of the books also the ten commandments and many memory verses which will be helpful to a life's work. The teachers are Mrs. Belle Woodcox and Mrs. Edna Perkins, who are also stressing fairness in their play periods.

The Junior department taught by Mrs. L. E. Nicholson for the girls and Rev McKnight with the boys. These 28 Juniors are doing a good work. Each one is endeavoring to live up to our motto: "I will do the best I can, with what I have, where I am; for Jesus sake today."

Our commencement will be held Sunday afternoon, May 22, at 2:30 in the High School and Community building

SILVER MOON DANCE HALL BURNS

Six brick fireplaces are all that remain today of the Silver Moon dance pavilion, located on state road 27, between Auburn and Waterloo.

Fire early Sunday morning completely destroyed the structure, which cost the owner, J. Rofland Muhn, of Auburn, $18,000 to erect. The building was insured for $10,000.

Local authorities are convinced that the building was set on fire from the fact that the fire started at the northeast corner of the pavilion. The wind, blowing from the northeast had a clean sweep through the building which fanned the flames with such intensity that everything burned in its path.

The fire was discovered shortly after 2:30 o'clock Sunday morning by a passing motorist.

Albert Fowler, assistant in the Arson Division of the State Fire Marshal's office, is making an investigation.

H. S. GIRLS VISIT COUNTY INFIRMARY

Twenty of the High School girls acompanied by three of the teachers, Frank Curie and Ed Leighty, visited the County Farm, Tuesday afternoon. All report a very enjoyable as well as profitable afternoon and wish to pay tribute to "Mack" and his old folks by saying that DeKalb county has a just right to be proud of its county farm. The girls were especially impressed by the orderliness and immaculate condition of the place, few having realized before that fifty-six rooms, to say nothing of the numerous compartments of the barn could be kept in such neat order at all times.

DRIVE ON TO AID IN THE CARE OF FLOOD VICTIMS

In the matter of the Red Cross drive now on, we believe every citizen of our township wishes to do that which is right and just between man and man, our nation has been visited with the worst flood ever known. Men, women and children who yesterday lived in happy and contented homes today are destitute, years of savings gone and they have only shelter, clothing and food as we provide. Are we willing to give a share of our possessions to help the Red Cross, who is actively engaged in the field of feeding and sheltering as fast as the victims can be rescued from the flooded area. Our first call was made up the larger centers of population, but the second call comes to all residents of our county and Concord township is asked to do her share. Will you respond? Not only personal response is asked but every organization is also solicited.

The following persons have been appointed to canvas the township:

Byron E. Widney
Ralph Sechler
Marie Trostel
E. R. Kinsey

NEWVILLE BOY HAS ONE OF LEGS SHORTENED

Ora Pattee, 14-year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Bert Pattee, of near Newville, DeKalb county, underwent an operation at the Sacred Heart hospital at Garrett this week for shortening of one of his legs, both of which were amputated six years ago.

When the lad was eight years old he was playing in a field where his father was cutting corn. He hid in some corn stalks and the father, not knowing the boy was there, cut the stalks down, severing both his feet. He soon learned to use artificial feet and attended school and took part in the play of his classmates. An abscess on one of the legs necessitated the operation.

What a splendid thing it would be if people who lost their tempers were unable to find them again.

NO SLACKNESS TOLERATED

An English paper tells this story of a certain martinet of an army captain who was shortsighted, but would not wear glasses.

He was inspecting kits in the barrack room of his company. Someone had left a floor mop leaning against the head of a cot. The captain's eye caught it.

"Sargeant!" he roared,

"Yes, sir," replied the sargeant, saluting.

"See that that man has his hair cut at once," said the captain, pointing to the mop.

SALARY OF ASSISTANTS IN COUNTY SURVEYOR'S OFFICE

The salaries of the assistants to the county surveyor, Calvin C. Kain, were fixed by the county commissioners Wednesday in compliance with the new law under which they will be paid directly from the county treasury.

Mr. Kain made a showing that he had appointed C. P. Hamman as his first deputy, Kenneth Smith and Charles Miser as assistant surveyors and Beulah Hess, stenographer, as an unqualified assistant.

The board fixed Mr. Hamman's salary at $175 a month. Mr. Smith and Mr. Miser will be paid $150 a month each and Miss Hess $4 a day, each to be paid for all time necessarily consumed in the work. Additional unqualified assistants employed to be paid $3 a day.

The salary of the surveyor is fixed by the new law at $3,000 a year. The county council made which the salaries will be paid for the balance of 1927. A new appropriation for next year will be made at the annual meeting of the council in September.

The county will be reimbursed by the various projects handled.

Mary turned away and looked down. All the excitement had gone out of her face. It was pale when she turned back to her mother.

"Mother! You were going to Loren Rangeley! Promise me you won't."

"Mary Johnston!"

"Don't you think I know? I've known right along that that pale, cold, bloodless—yes, I know he's a great banker, but he looks like a money-lender. I know he wants to marry you. Oh Mother! If you go to him, he'll ask you, and if you do, just to be comfortable, I'll never forgive you. I'd rather work for you myself, all the days of my life!"

"Mary!" Mrs. Johnston sat up against her pillows and regarded her daughter as though she were a stranger. "I didn't know you felt so strongly, or that Mr. Rangeley's motives were so evident. Don't worry. When he hears I'm practically penniless, I won't seem so desirable in his eyes. Mary, stop crying. I never knew anything so—so silly."

"It isn't silly, not so very," Mary sniffed, trying to regain her self-control. "I've hated him good and hard for a long time, and I just loathe seeing him with you."

Her mother patter Mary's shoulder. "I only thought of him—for your sake."

"You'd lose me," Mary told her firmly. "I'd go and work anywhere first—even in Dabbs' grocery store."

Her mother started. "There won't be any question of that. Bother, there's the car. Send that boy away, Mary."

"Wouldn't it do you good to go out?"

"No it wouldn't. Leave me alone with my thoughts and my novel. I want to go over everything by myself, calmly. We'll tackle the jewel problem tonight, after I've had my think."

"Then I might as well motor," said Mary.

Mrs. Johnston frowned.

"I don't like it. But go and ride with your idealized grocer's clerk, if you want to. Remember, always, that Mother's wary eye will be upon you when you return. I'd forbid you, of course, if I didn't know you'd do it anyway and never tell me the interesting details."

They smiled the smile of perfect understanding.

"And, of course," Mrs. Johnston admitted nobly, "I want to know everything. Don't cheat me of a single thrill, Mary."

Mary kissed her. Mrs. Johnston raised herself on a firm white elbow and called to Mary's back: "Ride on the rear seat, Mary, and don't forget that you're poor now, very poor, indeed."

Mary could visualize the impish smile on her mother's face that accompanied this remark.

She had fully intended at least beginning the drive on the rear seat, but after that, and hoping her mother was at the window to see, she climbed to the seat beside Ned, announcing:

"Mother's not coming, and you're to please take me a different route today."

Mrs. Johnston was not at the window. Her face was set and hard as she tried to make up her mind whether she would let this grocery shop situation develop before she bolted to New York, or bolt now. It was puzzling, but to go now might solve Mary's problem and her own. The solution, however, was very difficult, through lack of available funds.

In his office, C. M. Dabbs, once more embarked on his difficult task of composition, wrote, tore up and rewrote, all afternoon. When he finally ceased writing he had completed a short note, which he thrust into his pocket, carefully destroying the others. He still could not decide whether or not to send it.

Dorothy Selden, having waited in vain for some sign of just anger, or at least indignation, from Ned, had again the privilege of seeing him ride by, happy and contented, with Mary Johnston seated serenely beside him. It was not to be borne. Dorothy threw herself suddenly, but gracefully, into the chair at the writing desk, and seizing a telegraph blank and pen, wrote rapidly. When she had finished, the message read:

"Ned here under assumed name. What shall I do?

"Dorothy Selden."

It was directed to Loren Lorimer Rangeley.

* * * * * * *

The village saw Ned and Mary ride by and snickered. "Dabbs' nevvy was [illegible] and after a settlement."

The snicker was meant to call attention to Ned's folly and presumption, but it was also a jibe at Mary. "She must be hard up for a man," was the comment.

The pair under observation, engaged in the most absorbing game in the world, hastened toward Great Cold spring, one of the beauty spots of the countryside.

Although the road was as new to Ned as to Mary, he discoursed learnedly on its history, its Indian name, which he was compelled to admit he had forgotten and couldn't pronounce anyway. Mary listened, interested and amused, especially as Ned informed her that he had just "boned up" on the subject this morning. "Uncle Claude supplied me with the local color," he told her honestly. "It isn't at all in my line, but I thought Mrs. Johnston might expect something like it from her 'hired man'."

"Mr. Carter," asked Mary suddenly, "was your mother Mr. Dabbs' sister?"

Ned started. "Oh no, Claude Dabbs is really no relation to me at all. I'm fond of him, and I call him Uncle, that's all."

His Coat Was Off and He Was in the Pool.

"Oh, I forgot you told me you were 'adopted'," and Mary lapsed again into silence. She saw only one thing very clearly, and that was Ned's profile. She liked it.

The Great Cold spring, Ned told her, was just a quarter of a mile away. As he spoke they came in sight of a placid little lake, fed by the spring.

Some distance up the road, beyond the lake, was a great old farmhouse, which appeared deserted. As they neared the spring, Mary exclaimed with pleasure. Simultaneously the rear tire blew out.

Ned's exclamation was not one of pleasure. He stopped the machine at the side of the road and made ready with jack and wrench. Mary went toward the spring. The pool was deep, but did not look so.

Ned had the tire on in record time. As he stooped to gather up his tools, Mary stepped off the planks to gather some flowers at the edge of the pool. Ned thought he heard a faint cry. It was such a tiny, muffled sound that he didn't think it important and would have gone about his business had he not seen that Mary was no longer there! No longer anywhere in sight!

He ran at a tremendous rate of speed, such a spurt as he had never accomplished in all his university days.

The pool was muddy and disturbed. He couldn't see Mary, but there was a long streak in the muddy edge that showed where her foot had slipped.

His coat was off, and he was in the pool. Groping, his hands came in contact with her dress. He put forth all his strength and rose to the surface, dragging Mary with him.

Now that he held the motionless girl in his arms, he wondered if this was the end. He knew, in the same dim uncertainty, that if it was he would go mourning all his days for what had been denied him.

He put the girl down on the grass and still in a daze of mingled effort and dream, began to work to restore her breathing, and as he raised and lowered her arms kept repeating, "Oh, my dear, don't die!"

He must have said it aloud, for her long lashes lifted, the blue eyes looked straight at him, and Mary said, "I won't. Do stop and—let me up, please."

Ned helped her to her feet.

"Oh, I'm so ashamed," breathed Mary.

Ned, not yet able to speak, or look at her for very long at a time, took her hand and tried to hurry her to the farmhouse. Though it looked deserted, Ned thought he could see signs of life. Mary was so hampered by her wet garments, which were plastered to her with mud, that he picked her up in his arms, refusing to listen to her protest. After the initial request to be put down, Mary simply let her head rest on his shoulder and shook with cold.

At least that was Ned's belief until he looked down at her face. She was quivering with laughter.

"I can't help it," she gasped. "I'm grateful for your saving my life, and all that, but I can think of nothing but how much I want to wipe your face. It's—it's so streaky!"

Ned put her down and laughed. "You ought to see what you look like. You look exactly like a mud baby," he told her as he felt in his pocket for a handkerchief.

Gravely, Ned divided the handkerchief and gravely Mary accepted it. Laughter still trembled about the corners of her mouth, however, as she took this opportunity of wringing some of the water from her garments.

"Come," Ned commanded, "we can't stop for that. Now then, let's see what the farmhouse holds for us."

"I hope it holds just one woman, no matter how old or fat, because I'm so waterlogged and mud-plastered I can scarcely lift one foot after the other."

"I hate to blast your hopes, but I see approaching us an ancient man with whiskers. He has the look of a hermit. No, cheer up. He's calling Phoebe, and by all the gods, she's young."

She was. Phoebe Sayer was fourteen, but for all that she kept house for Uncle Nate, and miser though he was, he loved Phoebe.

Now, though he had growled something in his tattered whiskers about having a "passel of half-drowned rats" on his clean kitchen floor, Phoebe, who had scented excitement, and fallen in love with Mary, ordered him out to the barn with a pair of clean overalls for Ned. Though it cut Uncle Nate to the heart, she made him take with him a shirt and a pair of socks.

Phoebe was just fourteen, a little short, if anything, and hers were the only feminine garments in the house. Slowly, and with much hilarity, Mary was inducted into "the longest things I've got."

When Ned emerged from the barn and brought the car up to the door, the blinds were up and Phoebe was throwing the wet garments, whose dainty fineness she marveled at, into a washtub near the door. She saw Ned and called back to the open door, "Say, Miss Johnston, your young man's ready for you."

Ned, wondering how Mary would take this classification, looked with interest at the doorway as Mary emerged. She was clad in Phoebe's dark blue dress, a one-piece garment that ended above her knees. She had on Phoebe's best black cotton stockings, which didn't quite reach those knees, so Mary had rolled them. She had tied back her dark hair with a blue ribbon and she looked like a charming actress ready to play "Alice-in-Wonderland."

Woman Auto Driver Had Much to Learn

Here's a good one about a woman automobilist that a storekeeper told me recently. The woman's machine stopped a short way from this man's store, which is in North Salem, and she came in to get some gas from his outside pump. She would have liked to have had him go with her, it appeared. He did not know why until about ten minutes later and then he had a good laugh.

Anyhow, he provided her with a jug in which she could carry the gasoline. She disappeared and he heard nothing, nor saw nothing of her afterward. As the minutes rolled by he commenced to wonder if he was going to get back his jug, or if something else was the matter. The answer came when a man dropped in with the jug. He told the storekeeper that when he came along the woman had the radiator cap off and was just about to pour the gas in, when he stopped her.

He volunteered to aid the lady, who had an expensive car, by the way, and did so. He poured the gas in where it belonged, tipped his hat in answer to her profuse thanks, and went his way, taking the jug back to the store man. Can you beat that? I thought people who owned and drove cars were supposed to know something about them until told this story, which Mr. Storekeeper avers is the gospel truth.—Salem News.

Society's Handicap

"I guess we may as well give up," sighed the president of the antiprohane society. "What's the trouble now?" asked his secretary. "I just read they are making more fountain pens than ever," he explained.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The War at Close Range Described in a Remarkable Series by an Officer of the Marines

Capt. JOHN W. THOMASON, Jr.

[Illustrated by the Author From Sketches Made on the Battlefield]

(©) by the Bell Syndicate, Inc.)

STORY FROM THE START

The author describes how the First battalion of the Fifth marines are quartered near Marigny during the first part of June, 1918, when they are suddenly sent up north to relieve the First division, bearing the brunt of the German offensive. Part of the Fifth wrest Hill 142 from the enemy and wait there for the German counter offensive they can see forming. A terrific German attack soon develops, wreaking fearful havoc among the marines, but not dislodging them. On the sixth of June the Fifth runs into bitter fighting in the vicinity of Champillon and drives out the Boche, but at great cost. Then came the Bois de Belleau and again the marines acquitted themselves marvelously. Replacements arrive to cover the heavy losses. The marines are relieved, but the respite is short-lived, as they are soon ordered to the Soissons sector, where a great German offensive is under way. On July 18, after a heavy barrage, the Americans, Senegalese and French foreign legion go forward.

Then, without being very clear as to how they got there, the lieutenant and his company and a great many others were at the Vierzy ravine, in the cross-fire of the machine-guns that held it.

The ravine was very deep and very precipitous and wooded. A sunken road led into it and, while the riflemen stalked the place cannily, a tank came up and disappeared down the sunken road. A terrific row of rifles and grenades arose, and a wild yelling. Running forward, the marines observed that the tank was stalled, its guns not working, and a gray, frantic mass of German infantry was swarming over it, prying at its plates with bayonets and firing into such openings as could be found. One beauty of the tank is that, when it is in such a difficulty, you can fire without fearing for your friends inside. The automatic-riflemen especially enjoyed the brief crowded seconds that followed. Then all at once the farther slope of the ravine swarmed with running Boches, and the Americans knelt or lay down at ease, and fired steadily and without haste. As they passed the tank a greasy, smiling Frenchman emerged head and shoulders and inquired after a cigarette. There were very many dead Germans in the ravine and on its slope when they went forward.

Wearily now, the exaltation dying down, they left the stone towers of Vierzy to the right, in the path of the regulars of the Ninth and Twenty-third. On a line northeast of it they halted and prepared to hold. It was a lonesome place. Very thin indeed were the assault companies; very far away the support columns. . . . "Accordin' to the map, we're here. Turn those Boche machine-guns around—guess we'll stay. Thank God, we must have grabbed off all their artillery, 'cept the heavies. . . ."

"Lootenant, come up here, for God's sake! Lord, what a slew o' Boches!" Beyond rifle-shot a strong gray column was advancing. There were machine-guns with it. It was not deployed, but its intention was very evident. . . . Here were thirty-odd marines and a few strays from one of the infantry regiments—nobody in sight, flanks or rear—

But to the rear a clanging and a clattering, and the thudding of horse-hoofs!—"Graves, beat it back an' flag those guns." Graves ran frantically, waving his helmet. The guns halted in a cloud of dust, and a gunner lieutenant trotted up, jaunty, immaculate. He dismounted, in his beautiful pale-blue uniform and his gleaming boots and [illegible] spurs, and saluted the sweating unshaven marine officer. He looked with his glasses, and he consulted his map, and then he smiled like a man who has gained his heart's desire. He dashed back toward his guns, waving a signal.

The guns wheeled around; the horses galloped back; there was a whirl and bustle behind each caisson, and two gunners with a field-telephone came running. It all happened in seconds.

The first 75 barked, clear and incisive, and the shell whined away . . . the next gun, and the next. . . . The little puff-balls, ranging shots, burst very near the Boche column. Then the battery fired as one gun—a long rafale of fire, wherein no single gun could be heard, but a drumming thunder.

Smoke and fire flowered hideously over the Boche column. A cloud hit it for a space. When the cloud lifted the column had disintegrated; there was only a far-off swarm of fleeing figures, flailed by shrapnel as they ran. And the glass showed squirming heaps of gray flattened on the ground.

The gunner officer looked and saw that his work was good. "Bon, eh, Sixante-quinze—!" With an all-embracing gesture and a white-toothed smile, he went. Already his battery was limbered up and galloping, and when the first retaliatory shell came from an indignant Boche 155, the 75s were a quarter of a mile away.

The lieutenant wrote and sent back his final report: ". . . and final objective reached, position organized at . . ." and stopped and swore in amazement when he looked at his watch—barely noon! Sergeant Cannon's watch corroborated the time—"But, by God! The way my laigs feel, it's day after tomorrow, anyway!—" "Wake those fellows up—got to finish diggin' in—No tellin' what we'll get here—" Some of his people were asleep on their rifles. Some were searching for iron crosses among the dead. A sergeant came with hands and mouth full. "Sir, they's a bunch of this here black German bread and some stuff that looks like coffee, only ain't—in that dugout—" And the company found that Kriegsbrot and Kaffee Ersatz will sustain life, and even taste good if you've been long enough without food. . . .

That afternoon the Boche had the air. He dropped bombs and otherwise did the best he could to make up, with planes, for the artillery that he had lost that morning. On the whole, he was infinitely annoying. There's something about being machine-gunned from the air that gets a man's goat, as the flies remarked with profane emphasis. Much futile rifle-fire greeted his machines as they came and went, and away over on the right toward Vireay the lieutenant saw one low-flying fellow crumple and come down like a stricken duck. This plane, alleged to have been brought down by a chaut-chaut automatic rifle, was afterward officially claimed by four infantry regiments and a machine-gun battalion. Late in the afternoon the French brought up anti-aircraft guns on motor-trucks and the terror of the air abated somewhat.

As dusk fell, the French cavalry rode forward through the lines. The lieutenant thoughtfully watched a blue squadron pass— "If spirits walk, Murat and Marshal Ney an' all the Emperor's cavalry are ridin' with those fellows. . . ."

In the early dawn of the next day the cavalry rode back. One squadron went through the company's position. It was a very small squadron, indeed, this morning. Half the troopers led horses with empty saddles. A tall young captain was in command. They were drawn and haggard from the night's work, but the men carried their heads high, and even the horses looked triumphant. They had, it developed, been having a perfectly wonderful time, riding around behind the German lines. They had shot up a transport, and set fire to ammunition dumps, and added greatly to the discomfort of the Boche. They thought they might go back tonight. . . . They did.

The night of the 19th the galleys got up, and the men had hot food. Early in the morning of the 20th the division was relieved and began to withdraw to reserve position, while fresh troops carried the battle on. The First battalion of the Fifth marines marched back, in a misty dawn, across the ground they had fought over two days before. In the trampled fields, where the dead lay unburied, old French territorials were mowing the ripe wheat and shocking it up. The battle was far away. . . .

CHAPTER VI

Marines at Blanc Mont.

The battalion groped its way through the wet darkness to a wood of scrubby pines, and lay down in the slow autumn rain. North and east the guns made a wall of sound; flashes from hidden batteries and flares sent up from nervous front-line trenches lighted the low clouds; occasional shells from the Boche heavies whined overhead, searching the transport line to the rear. It lacked an hour yet until dawn, and the companies disposed themselves in the mud and slept. They had learned to get all the sleep they could before battle.

A few days before, this battalion, the first of the Fifth regiment of marines, a unit of the Second division, had pulled out of a pleasant town below Toul, in the area where the division rested after the Saint-Mihiel drive, and had come north a day and a night by train, to Chalons-sur-Marne. Thence, by night marches, the division had gathered in certain bleak and war-torn areas behind the Champagne front, and here general orders announced that the Second was detached from the American forces and lent by the Generalissimo as a special reserve to Gourard's Fourth French army.

The dawn came very reluctantly through the clouds, bringing no sun with it, although the drizzle stopped. The battalion rose from its soggy blankets, kneading stiffened muscles to restore circulation, and gathered in disconsolate shivering groups around the galleys. These had come up in the night, and from them, standing under the dripping pines, came a promising smell of hot coffee. Something hot was the main consideration in life just now. But the fires were feeble, and something hot was long in coming. This matter finally being disposed of, however, the men cast incurious eyes about them.

North from the edge of the pines the battalion looked out on desolation where the once grassy, rolling slopes of the Champagne stretched away like a great white sea that had been dead and accursed through all time. Near at hand was Souain, a town of the dead, a shattered skeleton of a place, with shells breaking over it. Beyond and northward was Somme-Py, nearly blotted out by four years of war. From there to the horizon, east and west and north and south, was all a stricken land.

The second-in-command, peering from the pines with other officers of the battalion, could see nothing that moved in all the desolation. Men were there, thousands of them, but they were burrowed like animals in the earth. North of Somme-Py, even then, Gourard's hard-fighting Frenchmen were blasting their way through the lines that led up to the last strongholds of the Boche toward Blanc Mont ridge, and over this mangled terrain could be seen the smoke and fury of bursting shrapnel shells and high explosives. The sustained roar of artillery and the infernal clattering of machine-guns and musketry beat upon the ears of the watchers. Through glasses one could make out bits of blue and bits of green-gray, flung casually about between the trenches. These, the only touches of color in the waste, were the unburied bodies of French and German dead.

Men Sought Means of Flying Centuries Ago

Flying in motor-driven airplanes had its birth December 17, 1903, on the sand hills near Kitty Hawk, N. C., when Wilbur and Orville Wright achieved the first authenticated flight in a heavier-than-air machine, but flying was in the minds of men centuries before that.

The story of man's longing to fly comes down in hundreds of legends, mixed with fact, about individuals who flew and those who tried it and died. Probably the original flying legend is the Greek story about Daedalus, who made a pair of wings with which he flew, and his son, Icarus, who took them out one day and came to grief when he got so near the sun that the wax wings melted.

Giovanni Baptisti Danti, late in 1400, is said to have flown across the Piazza of Perugia, Italy, in what seems to have been an authentic glider. It was about this time that Leonardo da Vinci began to study the possibilities of flight from the scientific angle and made a helicopter of paper, wire and springs that really lifted itself. Following this there were numerous experiments with gliders, some of them successful, but not until 1903 did the motor-driven plane conquer the air.—Milwaukee Journal.

No Scent of Graft

A widely known business man in Indianapolis had received his dinner check. As is his custom, he started to go over it to make sure there were no mistakes, explaining to the waiter that he always did this.

"Oh, that's all right, sir! That's all right. I always likes to have my customers atomise their bills!" was the waiter's reply.

Needed Space

Officer—What's the idea of opening your window and blowing that infernal horn of yours out of it?

Welch—I have to. It's a sliding trombone and there isn't room for it in my apartment.

Adrift With Humor

HOW THEY FEEL

"What do you think of the suggestion that bachelors be paid only half what married men get?" asked Mrs. Grouch.

"I don't give a whoop what they pay bachelors," growled her husband, "but I think married men ought to be paid 100 times more than they are unless they can get wives to want 100 times less than they do."

ONLY PINNING HIS PIN

First College Man—You are certainly not pinning your faith on a girl like her?

Second Ditto—Oh, no, just pinning my fraternity pin on her.

Ditch the Frown

When all the world looks wrong,
And nothing seems worth while,
The only thing to do
Is ditch the frown and smile.

Primitive Passions

Lora—This is a clever little confession story you've writtten, but why did you name the man Adam?

Dora—The editor wanted it written in the first person.—American Legion Monthly.

Any Old Protest

Jones—Will you join our indignation meeting tomorrow night, colonel? We want to make a strong protest.

Colonel Pepper—With pleasure, sir. Er—what's the protest about?

Answered

He (feeling his way)—Do you think one could marry on fifteen hundred a year?

She—One couldn't marry me.

Simple

Son—What's a niche in a church?

Dad—Don't be ridiculous. Like an itch anywhere else, except that you can't scratch it as well.

His Decision

She (after the proposal)—You know papa is not rich.

He—Yes, but I prefer to count on his chances than on mine.

BIG JOB FOR A WEAK MAN

He—(good-by—I think I'll take this street home.

She—Better think again—that's a big job for a weak man.

Sown His Wild Oats

When a fellow looks seedy,
It always promotes
The thought that indeed he
Has sown his wild oats.

Reason for Last Word

Husband (irritably)—Why is it that you women always insist on having the last word?

Wife (calmly)—We don't. The only reason we get it is because we always have a dozen arguments left when you stupid men are all run out.

Saving Money

Donna—You say you made that dress for $30?

Bell—Yes, the goods cost only $45 a yard.

Metamorphosis

"Let's see, you had a novel published last fall, didn't you?" said his new acquaintance.

"Well, I thought it was a novel," replied the author with bitter recollection of many sarcastic reviews, "but it turned out to be a gyved book."

No Wonder

Clarence—Your suit looks rather baggy.

Edward—Yeah. Phyllis' father used it for a punching bag last night.

PETER AT PENTECOST

LESSON TEXT—Acts 2.

GOLDEN TEXT—Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost.—Acts 2:38.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Preaches About Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Gift of Power.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Peter at Pentecost.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Source of Spiritual Power.

I. The Day of Pentecost Fully Come (vv. 1-13).

1. Significance of the day (v. 1).

Pentecost is from a Greek word meaning "fifty." It was the feast held fifty days after the wave sheaf offering (Lev. 23:16). The wave sheaf typifies the resurrection of Christ (I Cor. 15:20-23).

2. The gift of the Holy Spirit (vv. 2-4).

On this day the Holy Spirit descended upon the disciples. From that time forth He would work on a new basis, having the crucified, risen and ascended Christ to present to the world.

3. Upon whom the Spirit came (v. 1; cf. 1:13-15).

The twelve and others, both men and women to the number of one hundred and twenty, showing that the gift of the Holy Spirit was for all believers, not merely the apostles.

4. The marks of the Spirit (vv. 2-4).

These marks were external and internal.

(1) External.

(a) The sound of a mighty wind (v. 2). This is suggestive of the mysterious, pervasive and powerful energy of the Spirit.

(b) The tongues of flame (v.3). Each of the one hundred and twenty was crowned with such a tongue. Tongues show the practical purpose of the Spirit's gift—witnessing.

(c) Speaking in foreign tongues (v. 4). This was a temporary endowment for a special purpose.

(2) Internal.

This is seen in the transformation wrought in the disciples. Peter, who shortly before this, cowered before a Jewish maid, now with lion boldness stands before the chief rulers and declares that they had murdered their King, therefore guilty before God.

5. The effects (vv. 5-13).

(1) The multitude were filled with amazement and wonder. The gift of the Spirit transforms common men into men of power and influence.

(2) Some mocked and foolishly attempted to account for this remarkable occurrence. They accused the disciples of being intoxicated.

II. Peter's Sermon (vv. 14-47).

Peter's sermon is as wonderful as the gift of tongues. His analysis is perfect.

1. The introduction (vv. 14-21).

(1) Defense of the disciples against the charge of being drunk (v. 15). This he does by citing Jewish custom showing that they would not be drunk at such an early hour of the day.

(2) A scriptural explanation. He showed that this was a partial fulfillment of that which Joel predicted would come to pass (vv. 16-21; cf. Joel 2:28-32) before the messianic judgment, viz., an outpouring of the Holy Spirit and the salvation of all who call upon the name of the Lord.

2. The proposition, or theme (v. 36).

This was the messiahship of Jesus.

3. The argument (vv. 22-36). It was threefold.

(1) From Christ's works (v. 22). He was approved of God among the Jews by His miracles, wonders and signs which God did by Him in their midst with which they were familiar.

(2) From His resurrection (vv. 23-32). The Old Testament Scriptures had foretold the death and resurrection of Christ (Ps. 16:8-10). The disciples were living witnesses of Christ's resurrection for they had seen and talked with Him, and handled Him since the resurrection (v. 32).

(3) From His ascension to be on the right hand of God (v. 33). The proof that He had ascended on high was the wonderful miracle of the Spirit's operation in their midst; for He had said that upon His ascension into heaven He would send forth the Spirit.

4. The effect of the sermon (vv. 37-42).

Many people were convicted of their sins, some three thousand of whom repented and were baptized. The daily life of these believers was proof of the Spirit's gift.

(1) They continued steadfastly in the apostolic teaching (v. 42).

(2) They continued in fellowship with the apostles (v. 42).

Trusting God

An undivided heart which worships God alone, and trusts Him as it should, is raised above all anxiety for earthly wants.

Great "Teacher of Law"

Gamaliel, the grandson of Hillel, a reformer of the Pharisees, was himself a famous and liberal-minded Pharisee, and "teacher of the law." Among his pupils was Saul of Tarsus, known later as Paul, and known today as St. Paul, the Apostle to the Gentiles. In Acts 22:3, it is stated that before Saul became converted to Christianity he "sat at the feet of Gamaliel."

ADS ARE HONOR PLEDGES

If you got a letter from any merchant who advertises in this paper, signed with his own name, you would believe what he told you in that letter, wouldn't you?

Of course you would. You know our advertisers would not tell you an untruth in a letter.

Well, you receive letters from them every time you get an issue of this paper. For the advertisements they print in this paper are just as personal and are written with the same degree of honesty as if they were letters to you, written in ink.

Whenever a merchant signs his name to an advertisement, he pledges himself to back up every statement in that ad just as he would back up his promises made in a letter.

The only difference between an ad and a letter is that in an ad the merchants use our type and ink for writing you instead of using a pen and ink. It's quicker to address all our readers at one time. But the fact that we do the printing and mailing does not detract from the personal nature of the message.

A change has been made in the dates for the Hicksville fair this year. The board of directors at a meeting Thursday decided on September 13, 14, 15 and 16.

St. Joe won its first base ball game of the season on May 11, winning from Hicksville by a score of 10-9. The score was tied at the end of seven innings. Davidson brought in the winning run in the eighth inning.

The Butler citizens are taking an active interest preparing for the "Better Yard Campaign" which will be conducted during the months of June, July, August and September as outlined in the last issue of the Herald. The City Council is co-operating with the Better Yard Committee and have agreed to beautify the boulevard by planting shrubbery throughout. —Herald. And if St. Joe should start such a movement, would the Council agree to keep the lawn mowed about the city hall?

DeKalb farmers are busy this week, catching up with their work, which has been hindered the last several weeks by inclement weather. It is expected that with several days of sunshine, most of the spring planting will be completed. Planting of oats in most parts of the county has been delayed several weeks, but no great delay in the harvest will be noticeable, it is said, if the weather continues fair this week. Spring gardening has been set back several weeks, but most local gardeners already have planted their truck patches. Several days of warm weather and sunshine are needed. In spite of the inclement weather and the extra clean-up work that is being done, there seems to be a greater acreage of oats sown this year than has ever been known.

GET SUPPLY OF WALL-EYED PIKE MONDAY

The value of the Fish and Game Club has again been brought to our attention, when on Monday, 300,000 Wall-eyed Pike were placed in the St. Joe river near the cemetery, by the Division of Hatcheries and Game of the State Conservation Department, and more will be received during the summer of other species. The minnows were taken from the Tri-Lake Hatcheries. The Department of Conservation had the co-operation of the local Game Club and each year a request is filed for stock. The Isaac Walton League at Fort Wayne were also given 300,000 and placed in the river near Fort Wayne.

BURGLER LOSES $3.50 AT WOLFF HOME

Sherman Wolff reports a hair-raising experience, one night last week, shortly after retiring, someone came to his east window and attempted to get in, finding it well locked they went to the back door and tried to gain an entrance. At hearing the first noise Sherman bounced out of bed and armed himself with his long distance shooting rifle and wending his way to the kitchen, exclaimed, "Who's there?" The fellow wheeled about quickly and started to run across the back yard, when Sherman heard a noise, caused by the person falling over a board. The next morning he went out to see and sure enough the person had sprawled himself full length as was evidenced by the finding of $3.50 in change.

BEAUTIFY YOUR TOWN

The present is an appropriate time when time and thought and effort should be directed to the aid of nature by planting trees, flowers and shrubs. Just a little effort on the part of the citizens in the planting and culture of such ornaments and adornments, will bring certain joy and satisfaction.

It is manifestly unfair to ourselves and more particularly to those of the future, to fail to do that which will make this town more attractive. Nature is entitled to help from mankind.

Make this town so appealing that home shall be all that is desired and the town so attractive to the visitors that he can truthfully say that nature and man have united in a wonderful work. There is no easier and better way to accomplish this than the direct individual effort in the propagation of trees, flowers and shrubs.

Easily operated —positively regulated —wickless — valveless—absolutely dependable. Burns kerosene — one of the cheapest fuels known.

THE NEW MODEL embodies all the principles of the standard Florence Oil Stove and has a decided economy in the new over-sized, high-powered 15 inch Florence burner. It does the work of two standard burners in giving all the speed and efficiency necessary for the large, full-sized oven.

COOKING TOP OF CAST IRON GRID WORK is extra wide and entirely open. You can use every inch of the space—for cooking, directly over the burners; and for keeping food warm, on the surface adjacent to the burners. The whole top is perfectly flush—cooking utensils can be moved around with no danger of spilling their contents. A highly polished surface provides excellent heating contact.

Sun light, focused by window glass, on an old woolen cap, kindled a fire which did $25 damage to the house of C. E. Snider, 1016 Grove street, Defiance, Ohio, Saturday afternoon, before firemen put out the flames.

Stephen Rhodenbaugh, age 76 years, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Ora Lockwood on the Auburn-Fort Wayne road south of Auburn near the Grube bridge, Sunday morning at 9:30 o'clock. The immediate cause of his death was apoplexy.

The contract for painting the buildings at the county farm was awarded during the May term of the commissioners' court to G. A. Kinsey of St. Joe. The Auburn Hardware Co. was given the contract to furnish the paint. Three coats of white paint will be applied.

Mrs. Cleva May Franks, 29 year old mother of four children, died Monday morning at 5 o'clock from blood poisoning at her home six miles east of Auburn, after being sick three weeks. The funeral was held from Sawdust Church, four miles north of town on Wednesday afternoon.

Bids for the improvement of a highway in Jackson township, known as the James Carnahan et. al. improved gravel road, will be reveived by the county commissioners at the auditor's office and commissioners' room at the court house, Tuesday, June 7th at 10 A. M. The total cost is estimated at $12,212.40, the length of the highway being 15,856 feet.

Mr. and Mrs. H. S. Plotner spent Monday afternoon with Mrs. Geo. Walter, who has been quite sick for the past two weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Baker and family and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Stemen, of Concord, were Sunday afternoon guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Stemen.

Mrs. Estella Welch, who has been at the Sacred Heart hospital at Garrett for the past four weeks is reported as showing marked improvement. She is able to sit up a short time each day.—Star.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Huffman and daughters, Mildred Ellen and Margaret, Miss Sake Bartlett, of Chicago, Mrs. Mary Bartlett and daughter, Miss Bessie of Fort Wayne, were entertained in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Kees, Sunday. Mrs. Huffman and children are spending the week here in the Kees home.

Better farm equipment seems to be the one solution for the farmer today, to be able to handle his work in a speedy way and yet do it thoroughly. Lewis Cruse, of east of Auburn, one of the county's up-to-date and progressive farmers made a purchase last week of Wm. Curie, amounting to many hundred dollars, in order that he might be able to handle his farm work more scientifically. A tractor, plows and disc, complete equipment has been delivered to Mr. Cruse. More work with less help seems to be the solution and the farmer who can plan his equipment along this line is the one who will stay on the job.

TURN OFF THE SPOTLIGHT

Mary S. Stover

Elwin had run away. He was habitually prompt in returning from kindergarten, but this sunny day some lure of adventure and delight in the companionship of a certain mischievous little maiden had tempted him to go on to Betty Lou's home instead of turning at his own corner. There had been a glorious hour of play in her side yard before Elwin's frantic mother discovered the truant.

The small lad is so loving and tender hearted that he felt very sorry to have made his mamma anxious. At first, he was just as conscience-stricken and repentant as she wished him to be, but of course the edge of the child's remorse was somewhat worn off by afternoon, when his mother recounted the escapade in full detail to several callers.

Doubtless her chief motive was to deepen the good influence resulting from Elwin's tearful repentance, but the boy is human enough to "enjoy the spotlight" and to find pleasure in being so much the center of attention. His dramatic instinct evidently set him to living over that thrilling and not unpleasant episode; he was stimulated by a sense of his own importance. When one woman appeared but slightly interested in the tale, Master Elwin edged up and pulled at her gown. "I was away up North Street," he repeated impressively, with those bright, fun-loving brown eyes a-sparkle.

"Yes, and weren't you terribly ashamed of frightening me so?" his mother put in.

Elwin tried to look contrite, but how could a normal five-year-old fail to enjoy seeing himself in heroic size, when his exploit was thus "given the spotlight?" An action does not need to be held before a child's eyes as right in order to suggest his doing, or repeating it; merely holding it there serves as a strong suggestion—especially if we picture him vividly enough in relation to it!

Some natures respond more than others to such unintended suggestions, but there is danger in retailing before any child the anecdotes of his own misdoings. It may make him consider his little self a strange monster of iniquity; the more common effect is to arouse a sense of pride, pleasure and egotism.

It is but human for boys and girls to cherish the secret notion that a bad eminence is preferable to no eminence at all and to think that people find them more interesting and likable when a little naughty! Usually, too, the mischief led on or abetted by some enterprising young associate whom Mother is inclined to believe the one wholly to blame. Denunciation of that child may cast an alluring glamor over a tempter whose influence is thus strengthened instead of weakened.

There is wisdom in recalling times when our own chief wrongdoings were reported and discussed before us. While the effect was not in all cases the same, I believe that we shall find it always unfortunate. The frequently used analogy of a theatrical spotlight and posing under it conveys an idea of the morbid influence which undue publicity has upon persons of all ages. Children are particularly sensitive to such focusing of the attention.

So whatever the children may do our wiser course is to "turn off the sotlight" and thus avoid training them to preen and strut under the unwholesome glare of too marked attention to what they have done, be it excellent or blameworthy.

HEMLINES TAKE ON IMPORTANCE; SUITABLE FOR BOUDOIR OR BEACH

SEEING that the charm of the "sweetly feminine" is fashion's favorite theme, chiffons and kindred diaphanous fabrics have assumed a position of foremost importance for the making of afternoon and evening frocks. What a summer of airy fairy dresses these lovely sheer materials promise! In regard to the exquisitely dainty gowns in prospect for the days to come here is a gentle hint—watch the hemlines! Indeed, hemlines are one of the surprising discoveries of this day and age in the realm of fashion. We are being educated to a point of appreciation in regard to hemlines—now in themselves they have the power to take away or give youth to the silhouette. So it is that the stylist is manipulating these delightful lightsome sheer fabrics with every artifice, that their fluttering swaying hemlines may achieve enchanting grace.

Alluring Evening Dress of Black Chiffon.

Milady especially delights to dine and dance in filmy black touched with a flattering shade of pink. From the studio of a leading member of the Fashion Art League of America comes the alluring evening dress of black chiffon here pictured. Its intriguing hemline is wide-edged with lovely rose-pink chiffon, embellished with an exquisite hand-embroidery done in silver, crystal and rhinestones.

As to the sleevelessness of this gown, both sleeved and unsleeved receive the indorsement of the mode for the sheer dress. If a distinction must be drawn, it is the frock of gay-print chiffon which achieves its smartness through snug-fitting-to-the-wrist sleeves, also the transparent black lace modes. When it comes to the monotone chiffons, especially black, sans sleeves is the general rule.

One cannot overstate the favor for lace-trimmed chiffons and georgettes. The lace may be cream, beige or black, or dyed in perfect match to the fabric it trims.

A modern miracle—scenic beauty of National park, Grand canyon and other points of interest brought into one's own boudoir. If skeptical on the subject, just order sent to your home the very latest in lounging robes and see what happens. To your very door, posthaste, a parcel will be delivered amongst whose inner tissue wrappings reposes a gorgeous robe printed in realistic mountains, skies, trees and rivulets, just like the model in this picture. Yes, the coolie coat made of scenic printed silk crepe or satin is the "last word" for lounging robes and also for beach wear, for garments of this nature are playing just such a dual role this season.

Quite a charming effect, this gorgeously printed coat in the picture, worn with pajamas of black satin! For those whose taste runs to hand-blocked modernistic patternings rather than printed scenic views, the new collections contain many three-quarter length boudoir coats of this type, whose colors are most vivid.

Better still, why not "do as others do" and hand-paint your own house robe? There is no danger of coloring it too gorgeously gay, for Mistress Fashion dotes on bold patterning and daring color for both house and beach robes.

If you prefer to buy rather than to design your negligees then be sure to jot down on your shopping list one "gay-print pajama ensemble." See to it that the coat is styled after the model in this picture—that is, if you plan to let it also do duty for a beach robe, in which event it would be clever to order a parasol made out of the identical printed silk, for matching sets of parasol and three-quarter length coatees are very popular for the beach, if not in silk, then of cretonne.

In regard to negligees, some there are who prefer the fully feminine versions, and of these there are lovely styles being shown made of printed chiffon lined with chiffon in a solid tone.

A fascinating play on color is possible with tinted chiffon by placing one pastel color over another, suggesting a lovely rainbow effect. Quantities of filmy lace trims many of the chiffon negligees, with long wing-like sleeves, adding enchantment to their appearance.

Contrasting these aesthetic trailing tea-gown effects, are the sprightly youthful models now so much in vogue, which usually have a deep flounce. These are made either of printed chiffons or flowered voiles.

The DAIRY

PASTURE IS HALF OF FEED PROBLEM

The real value of a good pasture is so little realized that on only a few farms does the pasture play the part that it should in providing the year's feed for dairy cattle and other stock, says W. J. Fraser, dairy farming specialist of the college of agriculture, University of Illinois. A good productive pasture will feed the dairy herd for practically one-half the year and so is entitled to as much consideration as all the other crops combined that make up the winter half of the ration, he pointed out.

"A good pasture not only saves land and labor, but also provides for and stimulates production and has a fine conditioning effect on live stock, especially on milk cows in getting them in shape for the winter's production on barn feeding.

"One-sixteenth of the area of the farms in Illinois is untillable land and bluegrass is the pasture crop commonly used over this large area. It is a well-known fact that bluegrass gives a low yield of pasture in midsummer. For this reason the college of agriculture, University of Illinois, conducted a pasture experiment to determine the actual amount of feed received from bluegrass each week throughout the growing season, for four consecutive years. The result showed that bluegrass produced only about one-seventh as much feed a year as did the same area in corn or alfalfa; only one-half as much as oats, and one-fourth as much as red clover.

"The low yield is not the only trouble with bluegrass pasture. The worst of it is, it turns up its toes and stops growing entirely when the rains cease, because it is shallow rooted. And this drought usually comes when there is the greatest need of feed, because of the excessive heat of midsummer and the tortuous flies.

"One of the four years it would have required nine and one-half acres of bluegrass pasture to support a cow after June 1. Two years there were periods of three and a half to four months when bluegrass pasture was practically worthless as a crop to produce feed for stock, as it would have required 30 acres a cow to furnish barely sufficient feed. Now it is easily seen that when pasture is this poor it ceases to be a pasture and becomes merely an exercising ground.

"These tests and common experience show that bluegrass fails more than half the season and fails at the busiest time of the year, and when stock need the feed the worst. The most certain thing about bluegrass pasture is its uncertainty, and the loss that comes to the whole herd from lack of supplying sufficient feed during the hot dry weather of midsummer. The loss thus sustained in the year is almost beyond comprehension. It may easily amount to the difference between success and failure to the dairy farmer.

"The cow's requirement for feed is continuous throughout the summer, and in order to solve the pasture problem economically we must have some pasture crop that will furnish an ample and continuous supply of feed for the six summer months. The results on eighty-one dairy farms in Illinois show that three-fourths of an acre of sweet clover pasture is enough to support a cow during the six summer months. This is the average efficiency of sweet clover pasture, not in a few exceptional cases, but the common experience in all sections of the state and under all the varying conditions on these farms. The reason that sweet clover continues to grow in dry weather is because it has a large and deep root system, growing from four to six or more feet deep, while most bluegrass roots are in the top six inches of the soil.

"To show that cows will produce well on sweet clover pasture, it is only necessary to mention that I have had a cow on my own farm that produced 56 pounds of milk a day without grain. I have seen four other cows that produced between 65 and 75 pounds of milk a day on sweet clover pasture alone without grain."

Keep Cows Clean

Custom has long decreed that horses should be kept clean. The same custom should include the dairy cows. The body of the dairy cow, especially that part of the body, flanks and udder which are above the milk pail, may be the source of much of the contamination in milk. The best method of preventing contamination is to have the cows clean at milking time. It is much more important that the cows be properly groomed than the horse.

Quality Dairy Products

Prof. H. W. Gregory, of the dairy department, Purdue university, is responsible for the statement that one of the largest and oldest butter companies in Boston is to begin immediately to "feature pasteurized butter from tuberculin-tested herds." He states that this is an indication of the trend in the industry, and that if dairymen in the Middle West are to avoid having their product discriminated against, they must use care in putting out only a high grade product.

THEIR FIRST MILESTONE

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

LUCY CARTER in a red sweater was sweeping snow from the front steps and incidentally waiting for her husband to appear at the corner. Lucy was a wife of a year, gloriously in love with her big, handsome husband, who she felt loved her devotedly. Five minutes—ten minutes passed, and still no Trent. The smell of overdone meat came from the house and she hurried in just in time to save the roast from utter ruin. She burned her finger on the oven door. Just as she was beginning to fear some horrible calamity had overtaken her darling the door opened and he entered.

"Oh, I've burned my finger!" Lucy cried in her pretty, pouting way, expecting of course that Trent would kiss it to make it well as was his wont. But, to her astonishment, he did nothing of the kind. In fact, he seemed scarcely to hear what she said. "Any mail for me this morning?" he asked when they were finally seated at the pretty lunch table.

"No!" Lucy answered with a curious look at her husband's preoccupied face. "Just bills."

"U—um," Trent murmured. He ate hurriedly and without comment. Lucy was just setting a piece of tempting-looking lemon pie before him when the telephone bell rang. She rose to answer it and was surprised to hear the voice of an unknown woman asking to speak to Mr. Carter. Trent went to the telephone, but Lucy, listening, could make nothing of the conversation which followed. "Who called you?" she asked her husband when he returned to the table.

"A party on—on business," he answered. But he didn't explain. After eating his pie he caught up his hat and overcoat, gave Lucy a curt little kiss on the cheek and rushed from the house.

Lucy hurried to the window just in time to see him disappear round the corner. He was running at top speed. As she stood staring after him a painful thought came to her. She was torn by the dreadful doubt that comes of jealousy and suspicion. Another woman! That accounted for Trent's strange actions. How blind—foolishly blind she had been. A dozen incidents—little things she had passed by as trivial at the time became now in the revealing light of suspicion heart-breakingly clear. Trent—her husband—was carrying on an affair with some other woman!

For the rest of the day she suffered. Now she vindicated Trent, now she accused him.

After the mail was delivered that afternoon he telephoned. "Any letter for me?" Casually.

"I haven't looked," Lucy lied in as calm a voice as she could summon. Since two o'clock she had been looking for the postman only to have her vigilance rewarded by the daily paper and two or three open letters. She resolved to watch that mail box hereafter even if she never again stirred from her own front steps.

Trent's telephone message was a culmination. Worry and despair brought on a furious sick headache. Her heart sank lower and lower and her mind whirled round the devastating thought: "Trent—loves another woman—and who is she?"

When he came home at night Lucy was really too miserable to rise from the davenport. Her reproachful eyes followed him gloomily as he telephoned for the doctor and asked Mrs. Creet, their next-door neighbor, to come over.

When the doctor finally arrived he asked Trent if Lucy has been overworking or had received any shock or bad news. But Trent was sure she had received no bad news. As for overwork—why she might have been doing too much because she was expecting her mother in a few days for a visit.

Mrs. Creet made Lucy a cup of tea, and after she had taken the quieting medicine the doctor had left she felt much better. It looked as if she was well on the way to recovery when the door bell rang and Jack Coulter appeared.

"This letter came to my house by mistake," he said. "See! The direction looks like Coulter instead of Carter. And there's no number." He handed Trent a big white envelope. Flushing highly Trent took the letter. With a furtive look in Lucy's direction he crammed it into his pocket.

Immediately after Jack went away Lucy was seized with an attack of hysterics. It took the combined efforts of Mrs. Creet and Trent to restore her to anything like calm. While Mrs. Creet was getting her to bed Trent ran out and sent a long distance message to Lucy's mother demanding that she come at once.

It was noon the next day when Mrs. Post arrived. She was ushered into the darkened room where Lucy, smelling of camphor, was lying against pillows no whiter than her own face.

"Oh, my poor child!" Mrs. Post cried with all a mother's yearning sympathy as she gathered her daughter into her arms. "What a shame for you to be taken ill, and at this time of all others! Just when Trent was planning the grandest surprise for you—"

"Surprise—Trent!" Lucy gasped, sitting bolt upright in bed.

"Yes—" returned Mrs. Post. "And I don't know what the poor boy's going to do."

"Mother! You tell me at once what you're talking about," Lucy demanded, clutching her mother's hand.

"Well," chuckled Mrs. Post. "I must say my son-in-law is a wonder. He said he could and he has— Are you sure you've never suspected what was going on?"

"Oh, I've suspected!" Lucy clasped her hand. She began to feel a sickening sense of her own unworthiness.

"Well," said Mrs. Post. "He's bought the cutest little new bungalow on Orchard street. It belonged to a Mrs. Kneff. She and her husband have parted—she got jealous of him without a reason. She has gone home to her mother. Possession given immediately. She sent Trent final word last night that he could have it. You see this house has been sold and he didn't want you to know you had to move until he could tell you you were going right into a home of your own. He has promised to be out of this house in ten days. That was why I was coming—to help you move. But now you're sick. So I suppose nothing can be done." Mrs. Post, reading her daughter's face like print, smiled knowingly.

"Who says I'm sick?" Lucy was out of bed beginning to snatch her clothes.

"But, my dear!" protested Mrs. Post, smiling more and more.

"The idea of our having to move out of this house in ten days and me lying here just as if I hadn't a thing to do! I wonder where in the world Trent put my pumps—"

At that moment Trent entered. He had come home to see how Lucy was getting along. When he saw her wielding a powder puff he sat down and began to laugh weakly.

Lucy stamped her foot playfully. Then she flung her arms about his neck and kissed him.

Mrs. Post slipped from the room.

"What was the matter with you?" she asked her daughter a little later as they were packing.

"I was jealous of Trent," Lucy answered honestly.

"Jealous—of Trent!" Mrs. Post looked aghast. "The first milestone on the road of young married life! Well, who was the woman?"

"There wasn't any woman," Lucy gave a sob. "I—just imagined her. You never did anything so foolish, did you, mother, dear?"

Mrs. Post sighed and smiled.

"Don't we all?" she murmured.

Strategy of Cyrus That Won Babylon

Stories of the capture of Babylon by Cyrus the Great are so conflicting that it is difficult to arrive at the true account of the event. Details of two or three sieges seem to have been mixed up and it is impossible to disentangle them with any assurance.

There is an interesting tradition that Cyrus proved himself an engineering genius by thinking up an audacious scheme to humble Babylon. A big dike had been built up by the Babylonians to keep the Euphrates from running into the bed of an old canal that had long been dry. Since the walls of the city were unusually strong and a deep ditch outside them hindered the besiegers, Cyrus saw that the only way to enter the city was to divert the river to the old bed, then enter by way of the present bed when it was drained. He sent thousands of soldiers to dig out the dike one night and by midnight the Euphrates was flowing through the new channel. The drained river bed passed straight through the city and offered an easy means of entrance to the army of Cyrus.—Kansas City Times.

Off the Roll

Arthur Bourchier, the well-known London actor, while getting ready to assume the part of Henry VIII, cultivated a beard. One day when it was fully grown he went to his club and was challenged by the doorman, who did not recognize him.

"What name sir, please?" he inquired.

"Henry the Eighth," replied Mr. Bourchier without the flicker of an eyelid. The doorman consulted the list, ran his eye down the H's and closed the book with a bang.

"No longer a member, sir," he replied.

In Darkest Australia

Among the natives of the northwest coast of Australia cattle-killing and cannibalism have been reported at Perth, by a pioneer pastoralist, who decides that graziers are losing as much as from 25 to 30 per cent of their cattle through native slaughtering. Cannibalism, he says, generally occurs after a tribal fight, the victim being a girl. Hunger is not the motive of the sacrifice; it is a ceremonial practice.

Leaping Fish Lands on Boat

While en route from Thursday island to Townsville, in the South Pacific, a bonita, nearly five feet long, landed aboard the Sydney horse-ferry, Karakara. In the mouth of the giant fish was a flying-fish. The big fish had sprung for its prey and had been unable to check itself. It must have leaped a distance of 18 feet and a height of 8 feet to land aboard the ship.

YOUNG WOMEN MAY KEEP WELL

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Here is Proof

St. Paul, Minn.—"Here is a little advice I would like to have you put in the papers," Mrs. Jack Lorberter of 704 Dellwood Place wrote to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company. "If young women want to keep their health and strength for the next thirty years of their lives, it is best to start in right now and take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I have tried the Compound myself and received fine results from its use." In describing her condition before taking the Compound, she writes, "I was afraid in my own house in broad daylight, I used to lock the doors and pull down the shades so that nobody could see me." One day a booklet advertising the Vegetable Compound was left on her porch and she read it through. In so doing, she found a letter from a woman whose condition was similar to her own. "I bought Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound," Mrs. Lorberter continued, "and have had fine results. My condition made me a burden to my husband. Now I ask him, 'How is housekeeping?' and he says, 'It is just like being in Heaven!'" Are you on the Sunlit Road to Better Health?

The "ask me another" fad is the first definite successor of the crossword puzzle. Conversations overheard in public conveyances indicate that many of the "ask me's" are as intriguing as the puzzles over which enthusiasts worried far into the night. W. H. Stearn Gains 15 lbs. Appetite Keen As Razor

Respected Indianapolis carpenter suffered agony for six years. Could not eat or sleep. Weak, wornout and discouraged. Now, at 67, enjoys good health, exudes good cheer, enthusiasm and energy. Gives full credit to Tanlac

Mr. W. H. Stearn lives at 1211 No. Oakland Avenue, Indianapolis. At 67 years he works steadily as a journeyman carpenter, meeting the competition of men half his age, and holding his own with the best. But for six years he had a different story to tell. Here it is, in his own words:

"I was so rundown from indigestion that my system was completely shattered. When a big contract obliged me to speed up and work overtime, my day's work almost killed me. Sometimes I was actually too weak to raise my hammer or pull my saw. My head and back ached terribly, and when I tried to bend over my head whirled and I was too weak to stand on my feet. Constipation and sluggish liver bothered me and my hand trembled from nervousness. At night I tossed and rolled in bed. Though my work demands plenty of food, my appetite was shot to pieces and I hardly ate enough to keep body and soul together.

"Tanlac helped me so that I now eat and sleep normally again. I'm as energetic as a man of 35 or 40 and don't have to ask odds of younger men. My appetite is like the keen edge of a freshly honed razor and I digest my food like a boy back from the skating pond. The old dizziness, weakness, aches and pains never rack me now. I give all credit to Tanlac for my present fine health, and recommend all other sufferers to try it."

You can profit from Mr. Stearn's experience. If overwork or neglect has left its mark on you, get a trial bottle of Tanlac. It is nature's own tonic and body builder, made from herbs, roots and barks. Your druggist has it; start in on Tanlac today. Over 32 million bottles already sold.

Beethoven Memento

An interesting memento of Beethoven has been recently discovered near Vienna. It is a memorial tablet which is hitherto unknown announcing that the great composer once lived in the castle Brailten at Allenstrasse No. 9. This is a small one-story building erected in 1810 by the Polish scholar Ossolinski, in the empire style of architecture.

CHEESE TOAST MADE WITH CREAM CHEESE

Cheese Mixture Is Tender and Easy to Prepare.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Here's a new kind of cheese toast, made with cream or neufchatel cheese. The cheese mixture when it comes from the oven is golden brown and tender and is easier to prepare than the kind made with American cheese. The bureau of home economics has worked out this delicious recipe:

Cream or Neufchatel Cheese Toasted.

1 egg
¼ teaspoonful salt
¼ teaspoonful baking powder
1 teaspoonful tabasco or worcestershire sauce

Cream the cheese and add the beaten egg yolk, the salt, and enough tabasco, worcestershire, or any other highly seasoned sauce to give flavor. Mix well, fold this into the beaten white of egg. When thoroughly blended add the baking powder. Toast thin slices of bread on one side. Cover the untoasted side with the cheese mixture. Brown slightly under slow heat and serve at once garnished with crisp bacon. This is an excellent luncheon or supper dish when served with bacon, or may be used on small rounds of toast or on crackers for afternoon tea.

RHUBARB SERVED DIFFERENT WAYS

Good Filling for Tarts, Cobblers and Shortcake.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Many housekeepers seem never to think of serving rhubarb except in pie or in sauce. Rhubarb is a good filling for tarts, cobblers, and shortcakes. A "cobbler" is baked in an earthenware or glass baking dish with the fruit on the bottom and the biscuit dough on top. A rhubarb shortcake is made exactly like a strawberry shortcake. The biscuit dough is baked in a single large round layer, which is split and generously buttered while hot. Hard sauce is better than cream with either of these rhubarb desserts because of the acidity of the fruit.

Try also a rhubarb betty while "pie-plant" is in season. You can make it with either rhubarb sauce or raw sliced rhubarb. To a quart of sweetened sauce or raw sliced rhubarb and sugar, allow a quart of fine dry bread crumbs, combined with three or four tablespoonfuls of melted butter before they are put with the fruit. Fill a greased baking dish with alternate layers of sauce and buttered crumbs, and sift cinnamon over the top. If the rhubarb is cooked, bake for about 15 minutes in a moderate oven. If raw rhubarb is used, sprinkle each layer well with sugar, and cover the baking dish during the first part of the cooking so that the rhubarb will steam tender. Cook for 25 minutes or more and then remove the top and allow the crumbs to brown. Serve rhubarb betty hot with or without hard sauce.

The United States Department of Agriculture furnishes the following recipe for making rhubarb pie with a crisp undercrust:

Rhubarb Pie With Crisp Undercrust.

2 cups raw sliced rhubarb.
1 cup sugar.
⅛ teaspoon salt.
1 tablespoon water.
2¼ tablespoons flour.
2 slices orange cut into sixths.
Pastry dough for 2 crusts.

Line the pie pan with pastry dough and bake it in a hot oven until it is delicately browned. Meanwhile cook the rhubarb, sugar, salt, and water together until the rhubarb is tender. Remove three or four tablespoonfuls of juice and when it is cool, mix with the flour, add this and the orange to the cooked rhubarb, and cook until the mixture thickens. Pour the filling into the baked crust, moisten the rim, lay the top crust in place, and tuck in the edge carefully so that the juice will not leak out. Bake the pie in a hot oven (about 450 degrees F.) for 20 minutes. By this method the undercrust is crisp, but some of the fresh flavor of the rhubarb is lost.

Constituents of Milk

The mineral constituents of milk that are especially important to the body are phosphorus, iron and lime. Milk is much richer in lime, the chief constituent of bones and teeth, than are most other foods, and this is one of the reasons why it is an excellent food for children.

Meat Keeps Indefinitely

The federal meat inspection service states that properly sterilized meat packed in hermetically sealed cans will keep indefinitely, provided air is not admitted through breaks or punctures in the cans due to rough handling or erosion from rust or similar cause.

Rhubarb Conserve Liked as Accompaniment to Meat

By a "conserve" is usually meant a fruit preserve containing such ingredients as oranges and lemons, nuts, raisins, and various other additions to the fruit from which the conserve takes its name. A conserve is liked as an accompaniment to cold meat, or as a luncheon sweet with bread and butter, biscuits, cookies or plain cake.

Here is an excellent conserve made from rhubarb. The recipe is furnished by the United States Department of Agriculture:

4 cups rhubarb cut fine.
4 cups sugar.
2 oranges, juice and grated rind.
¼ teaspoon salt.
2 lemons, juice and grated rind.
1 cup blanched almonds cut in small pieces.

Combine all the ingredients except the nuts. Heat the mixture slowly until the sugar is dissolved; then boil rapidly until it is clear. The time of cooking depends on the tenderness of the rhubarb but do not cook the conserve too long and so lose the attractive pink color and fresh flavor of the rhubarb. Add the nuts, stir well, and let the mixture cool before pouring into clean jelly glasses. If it is put in hot the nuts will rise to the top. This amount will fill about eight jelly glasses. If desired the nuts may be omitted.

The rings left on the fabric around the place from which a stain has been removed are usually due to an accumulation of the sizing or dressing placed on the cloth by the manufacturer. This dissolves in the solvent used in cleaning and "runs" into the outer edge of the circle of moist fabric. Often this can be avoided by gently "working" the solvent into the fabric with a piece of cheesecloth or a sponge, having a blotter or cheesecloth pad underneath to absorb the soiled solvent as it passes through the fabric. In this way the dressing may be scattered into the surrounding fabric where it will not show. A very bad case of ring formation can only be remedied by dipping the entire garment in a solvent such as gasoline. This is not a wise thing to do in the home, however, as the danger of fire not only from open flames, but from electric discharges between parts of the garment is very great.

Vitamins and Minerals

Vegetables and fruits are rich in minerals and vitamins and these are food substances that children especially need for building strong, healthy bodies. Children need two servings of fruit and one or preferably two servings of vegetables every day in addition to potato, so the child specialists say. Though practically all kinds of fruit and vegetables are good for children, they recommend that oranges, grapefruit, tomatoes and green-leaf vegetables be given most frequently.

Poor Use for Abandoned Well

Do not use an abandoned well for a cesspool. Such practice may pollute near-by wells or distant downhill wells, and is prohibited by law in many of the states. Methods of safeguarding wells are explained in two Farmers' Bulletins, "Farmstead Water Supply" and "Sewage and Sewerage of Farm Homes."

Food Label Requirement

The only positive label requirement in the federal food and drugs act is that all canned food labels shall bear a correct statement of the net weight of the contents of the can. If other statements are made on the label, they must be true and must not be false or misleading in any particular.

Dutch Cocoas Different

Dutch cocoas have a somewhat different color than some of the other varieties. This is because of the addition of a small amount of alkali, which makes the cocoa darker and keeps it suspended in the liquid better. This treatment does not affect in any way the food value of the cocoa.

Too Big

T. D. Green, president of the American Hotel association, said at a banquet in New York:

"They are copying us in Europe now, and you often see 500-room, 500-bath hotels over there. That is mammoth, it's colossal, for Europe.

"It's too colossal altogether in some cases, too colossal for perfect cooking.

"A waiter in a new Paris hotel of the 500-room, 500-bath style was heard to mutter to his assistant in the restaurant one day:

"'The fat party at the window table has ordered fresh-made coffee. Be sure to keep him waiting 25 minutes.'"

D.A.R. Head Urges National Defense by U. S. as Aid to Peace.

One of a series of Articles written by Indiana Citizens, Soldiers and Men of Letters for the American Legion, Department of Ind.

MRS. CHARLES W .ROSS
State Regent, D. A. R.

The National Society, Daughters of the American Revolution, with a membership of 157,863, divided into 2,179 chapters, and increasing at the rate of over a thousand a month, is one of the Nation's greatest organized feminine groups, an acknowledged asset in maintaining patriotic ideals and those helpful law-abiding endeavors which contribute to the well being of the individual, and to the stability of the country.

President Coolidge in an address before the thirty-fifth Continental Congress said:—

"Truly a wonderful force for good in our country is such a body of high minded women, with such a heritage of sacrifice and devotion to an ideal. What possibilities for future service rest in such a devoted body of citizens."

Believing that our Republic gives to its citizens greater opportunity and under it they have achieved greater blessings than have come to any other people, the Daughters are pledged body and soul to cherish, maintain, and extend the institution of American freedom, to foster true patriotism and love of country, to aid in securing for mankind all the blessings of true liberty.

They believe in the soundness, virtue and essential completeness of the Federal Constitution. In naming their new Auditorium in Washington "Constitution Hall," the Daughters of the American Revolution intended it to serve as an eternal protest of the patrotic women of America against destructive attacks on this immortal document. They feel that it should be jealously guarded against radical attacks and attempts at subversion of its fundamental principles, that we have not outgrown it, that it has not served its full purpose in the world, that it has yet before it a far and fair goal to be attained, not by frequent changes and amendments, but through steadfast adherence to the principles laid down by the framers.

The Daughters are fully alive to the dangers that beset our beloved country by enemies from within and without. They realize that the plan for destructive revolution in the United States is not a myth but a proved fact, that emissaries of the Red International are working unceasingly to spread their propaganda by insidious, effective and well-defined methods, that the Moscow Communist organizations are increasing at a tremendous rate and sweeping thousands of unsuspecting pacifists into co-operation with communists program-camouflaged as measures of peace for the purpose of appeal, but in reality paving the way for Red revolution. The Daughters at their thirty-fifth Continental Congress adopted the following resolution:

"That the National Society Daughters of the American Revolution in thirty-fifth Congress assembled recommend a definite intensive campaign to be organized in every State to combat the work of the Moscow International Communist organization."

This resolution was adopted unanimously.

The President General, Mrs. Alfred J. Drosseau, at once appointed a National Chairman for National Defense, a State Chairman in each State and a Chairman in each chapter, whose business it is to carry on a campaign of education, that the people may know what is going on in our country. This includes Russian recognition, "Peace" propaganda, Total Disarmament, Destruction of Courts, Indiscriminate attacks on government and officials, the organization of Communist Units within our Army and Navy personel and of Young Worker's Leagues to create and develope class consciousness and hatred.

There are none in the country who stand more firmly for peace, or who realize the awful horror of war more fully than the Daughters, but they want peace with honor. As a society we have gone on record as expressing our entire sympathy with the Citizens' Military Training Camps and all other means necessary for our security and defense. So long as there is no means of preventing war, there must be preparation against war. Nothing could be farther from the aim of our society than to commit our nation to a militaristic program, but it is the duty of every citizen to support and maintain land, sea and air forces for our reasonable protection. To this policy Daughters of the American Revolution are solemnly committed.

In the memorable words of Daniel Webster, let me remind you that "God grants liberty only to those who love it and who are always ready to guard and defend it."

Through adequate preparedness shall we best contribute to the peace of the world, keep faith with those who sleep in Flanders and its kindred battlefields, and righteously maintain the strength and glory of this Republic.

MANLESS TRACTOR PLOWS TWENTY-ACRE FIELD ALONE

Lincoln, Neb., May 9.—A "manless" tractor, controlled by an electric device, plowed a field successfully this week before a crowd of farmers, professors of agriculture and business men.

Unguided by a human hand, except when the first furrow was plowed to make a guide row, the machine, equipped with an automatic guide invented by F. L. Zibach, of Grand Island, Neb., plowed a twenty-acre field on the College of Agriculture farm of the University of Nebraska near here.

The tractor runs in an irregular circle, rounding the corners. Except for replenishing the gasoline and oil, it needs no attention. The electric control stops the machine should it leave the furrow, and when the work is completed.

The invention first was tried in 1921, Zibach said. Tiring of riding a plow, he attached the device to his tractor, filled the machine with gasoline, and turned it loose.

The locomotive "President Washington," No. 5300, will pass through St. Joe Thursday afternoon at about 2:00 and will be on exihibition at Garrett from 3 to 4 o'clock.

This locomotive is one of twenty purchased from Baldwin Locomotive Company each bearing the name of a President of the United States down to and including President Arthur. These engines are painted olive green with gold and maroon stripes to harmonize with the standar d train color. The name is in three inch gold letters on each side of the cab. Steps and platforms for easy entrance to the cab will be provided. The "President Washington" as well as the other nineteen locomotives are known as the Pacific type passenger locomotives, numbered 5300 to 5319, being among the largest in service second only to the "Lord Baltimore" and the "Philip E. Thomas" mountain types, both of which were built at Mount Clare shops, Baltimore.

General description is as follows: Pacific type, technically known at the P-7-4-6-2 (number of wheels.) Built March, 1927, by Baldwin Locomotive Works, Philadelphia, Pa. Length, over coupelers, 87 feet 10½ inches. Weight of locomotive and tender 525,000 pounds or 262½ tons.

Tractive power, 50,000 pounds. Two cylinders, with 27 inch diameter and 28 inch stroke. Driving wheels, 80 inches in diameter, or 6½ feet. Tender, gallons of water, 11,000, tons of coal, 17½. Culinder, H. P., 2820.

WHEAT FIELDS EXEMPT FROM CONTROL MEASURE

St. Joe News,
St. Joe, Indiana.
Dear Sir:—

I have just received a letter from L. H. Worthley, administrator European Corn Borer Control of United States Department of Agriculture, stating that wheat fields in the areas containing less than 1% infestation are exempt from compulsory control measures. This action was taken due to the lateness of the season and consequently the wheat has started to joint in some sections causing damage to the fields where the grain is in this condition.

This decision will exempt all of the wheat fields of the infested area of Indiana. The farmers who have already cleaned up their fields so that they will pass inspection will receive the payment of not to exceed $2.00 an acre for the extra labor per acre done by them on such fields. This ruling does not exempt anything else but such seeded fields and all other corn fields, barn lots, feed lots and other seeded fields must be cleaned up.

I now have machinery in the field doing some compulsory cleanup and I expect to push the compulsory cleanup as fast as possible where the individual refuses or is making no effort to do his own work. No compulsory work was started the first week of May as I felt the farmer should be given a chance during this first week of good plowing weather to do his own work.

Very truly,
P. T. Ulman.
European Corn Borer Control.

OBITUARY

Lucinda Monroe was born in Stark county, Ohio, August 16, 1848. Departed this life May 8, 1927. Age 78 years, 8 months and 22 days.

In early life she came to Indiana and settled on a farm in DeKalb county.

She united with the M. P. Church at Concord when still a young woman later she transferred her membership to the M. E. Church at Spencerville. Although confined to her home constantly for thirty-six years in caring for her invalid daughter, she never lost that spark of Divine love and died with a smile of the glory that sustained her all through life.

In the year of 1866 she was united in marriage to George Howey. To this union was born eight children: Frank Howey, Guthrie Center, Iowa; Alvin Howey, Guthrie Center, Iowa; Clara Clark, Ft. Wayne, Ind.; Wallace Howey, Auburn, Ind.; Edward Howey, Richmond, Ind.; M. H. and Myrtle Howey, Spencerville, Ind. Besides her grandchildren and great grand children. Two brothers, Lewis Monroe, of Corunna and Riley Monroe of Butler. Three sisters, Mrs. Emma Groves of Altona, Ind.; Mrs. Jane Brown of Auburn and Mrs. Bina Strow of Colorado, who remain to mourn their loss. One brother and one infant son having passed on to the realm from which no traveler returns.

She left us on Mother's Day and it was a fitting climax to a life that hath been devoted to her children.

The funeral was held May 10th, Rev. Roy S. Brown, officiating. Interment in White City cemetery, E. R. Kinsey, funeral director.

Alva Sylvester Coburn, son of Russell and Mary Ann Coburn, was born in DeKalb county, Ind., near the Coburn's Corners Church January 13, 1861. His childhood and early manhood was spent on the farm where he was born. He spent a short period of his life in Michigan, where he was employed in a lumber camp.

In the autumn of 1903 he was married to Annetta Murphy, who preceded him in death, March 31, 1915, at Hicksville, Ohio. After her death he returned to the home farm to reside. Later his stepson, Mark Murphy with his wife, located there and together resided here until they located on the farm where he departed this life as the evening shades were falling on May 6, 1927, aged 66 years, 3 months and 19 days. Besides the stepson he is survived by one brother, Warren Coburn of Fort Wayne, and two sisters, Mrs. Elsie Sturtevant and Mrs. Hattie Sturtevant, of Hesperia, Mich. Besides these there are thirty-five nieces and nephews and a host of friends.

Mr. Coburn was of a quiet, unassuming nature and was honored and respected by a host of neighbors and acquaintances.

The funeral was held from the Coburn's Corners Church Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock with Rev. Aldrich, officiating. E. R. Kinsey funeral director. Burial was made in the Alton cemetery.

Anna Jane Keffer Pepple, the youngest of five children of William and Mary Keffer, was born in Washington County, Pensylvania, January 22, 1838 and passed away very peacefully at the home of her son, George Pepple at Waterloo, at the age of 89 years, 3 months and 10 days.

She was united in marriage to George Pepple in 1856 at Mansfield, Ohio. While still living in Ohio their son, William, was born.

In the year of 1862 the husband brought his family to Waterloo, Indiana and settled on the Abe McInterf farm on the Auburn-Waterloo road. Later they moved to Waterloo, where they built a hotel on the site where the Public Library now stands, running the same for three years. While living in Waterloo their son, George was born. Later the family located on a farm three and one-half miles south-east of Waterloo, where they lived for twenty-five years. At the death of the husband and father, who passed from this life March 22, 1899, Mother Pepple moved to Auburn where she resided till old age compelled her to leave her home and reside with her children.

While living at Waterloo she confessed Christ as her personal Saviour and joined the United Brethren Church. When she took up her residence at Auburn she to the Auburn Methodist Episcopal Church where she remained a member till her death.

She leaves to mourn her departure two sons, William, of St. Joe, and George, of Waterloo, three grand children and five great grand children, a host of relatives and friends.

She was a kind and loving mother. As an nvalid for three years she bore her affliction with great patience, always having a smile and kind words with all that came in contact with her.

Her life was long and useful and she was always ready to minister and assist all who were in distress and need.

She lived and died in the Christian faith. Her Saviour was precious to her. She loved her Bible and she loved to pray and talk of things eternal. Mother is absent from the body and at home with the Lord, she has gone to meet Christ her Saviour and loved ones over there. The loved ones still remaining will miss Mother's love, but may they submit to His righteous will and be comforted in their sore bereavements and say "the Lord gave and the Lord has taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord."

The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon at three o'clock in the Evangelical Church at Waterloo, Rev. Hubbartt, of Auburn, officiating. Burial in Waterloo cemetery.

Color Highly Important

In the house on a small city lot we should want to use as much yellow as possible, just as much as we should in any small dark room. For a room exposed to the south with plenty of sunshine, we should use blue, mauve or gray; while for one exposed to the cold north, yellow, golden brown or rose. Also the size of a house, the distance from a street, the size of a room or the height of ceiling would constitute important factors to be considered in our selection of color backgrounds.

Pays to Take Expert Advice

Too much individuality expressed in terms of houses unfits the structures for general consumption; and unless one expects to spend his entire life in the thing and looks on it as an indulgence and not as an asset, perhaps he would do well to modify his desires and listen to expert advice from those who are learned in the lore of building.

One Must Have Some Fun

Of course, work shortens life, but it seems to afford some people their only pleasure.—San Francisco Chronicle.

TO ALL HOLDERS OF SECOND LIBERTY LOAN BONDS

NOTICE OF REDEMPTION

All outstanding Second Liberty Loan 4 per cent bonds of 1927-42 (Second 4's) and all outstanding Second Liberty Loan Converted 4¼ per cent bonds of 1927-42 (Second 4¼'s) are called for redemption on November 15, 1927, pursuant to the terms of their issue. Interest on all Second 4's and Second 4¼'s will cease on said redemption date, November 15, 1927.

Holders of Second 4's and Second 4¼'s will be entitled to have the bonds redeemed and paid at par on November 15, 1927. Such holders may, however, in advance of November 15, 1927, be offered the privilege of exchanging all or part of their bonds for other interest-bearing obligations of the United States. Holders who desire to avail themselves of the exchange privilege, if and when announced, should request their bank or trust company to notify them when information regarding the exchange offering is received.

Further information may be obtained from any Federal Reserve Bank or branch, or from the Commissioner of the Public Debt, Treasury Department, Washington.

MONEY THAT WORKS

A MAN visited our bank a few weeks ago who had just sold some property.

HE WAS not ready to invest the money again for a few months but he did not want the money to 'loaf' and earn nothing for him during that time.

SO HE wanted to know what he could do with the money to make it earn some profit and be available in case he needed it.

OF COURSE we suggested a Certificate of Deposit. You can have a "C. of D.," for any amount and continue it as long as you wish. It pays a nice profit, too.

THERE IS no better plan for your money that is not otherwise employed. Let us tell you more about this plan.

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL HOLDS COMMENCEMENT

Entire Comunity Asked to Attend At Community Gymnasium On Sunday Afternoon

Our Daily Vacation Bible School is progressing very well. The little folks are on time each one in their place eager to learn some new truths each day.

The stories have been a large factor in our worship period, they are brought to our little folks in a very pleasing and instructive manner, in well chosen language that the smallest children can understand it. We had stories last week on obedience, temptation, charity and missionary. These messages were brought by Mrs. Mabelle Thornton, Mrs. C. R. Price, Mrs. Estelle Baker and Mrs. J. F. McKnight. Each story was well prepared and the little folks as well as the adults appreciate them very much.

Three new members were enrilled last week.

The following program will be given at the Community Building Sunday, May 22, at 2:30 P. M.

Processional, children marching in under the National and Christian flags.
Salute to National Flag.
Song, America the Beautiful.
Salute to Christian Flag.
Song, Fling out the Banner.
Salute to the Bible.
Song, Holy Bible.
Stories of hymns and hymn writers.
Song, Break Thou the Bread of Life.
Scripture memory work, I Cor. 13.
Prayer and Response.
Song, God is Goodness God is Love.
School Motto.
Story period, Mrs. C. R. Price.
Exercise by Kindergarten pupils, under Miss Cleota Morr and Mrs. F. B. Leighty.
Class yells and memory work, Primary pupils under Mrs. C. C. Woodcox and Mrs. Carl Perkins.
Junior department, anthem The House that Fell. Matt. 7: 24 to 27.
Junior Dept, Memory work.
Junior Dept., Song, The Banner of the Cross.
Short talk by Mrs. Chas. Koch, chairman of Daily Vacation Bible School.
Presentation of Certificates by Mrs. E. L. Nicholson, Principal of school.
Short talk by Mrs. Nora McDonald, of Corunna, County Superintendent of Educational Department.
Short talk by Fred B. Leighty, President of County Council of Religious Education.

ADDING NEW IMPROVED MACHINERY

The Spencerville Lumber Co., is making some wonderful improvements in their yard service by the installation of a modern planer, which will take a piece of timber eight inches thick. There is also a growing demand for boards to be ripped and with the installation of the new saw, with tilting table, and attachments for mitering at any angle, they will supply a long felt need to the carpenters of the community, who will then be in a position to make their special casings and frames. As soon as the equipment is in operation, the company expects to show the machines in their advertising. Some other equipment is being anticipated which will be a great benefit to the contractors.

THE LOUD SPEAKER ISSUE NUMBER TWELVE

Made its final appearance this week for the school year, and if the plans carry, the Seniorsnext year will continue to publish it every two weeks. The little paper this year carried items of interest concerning the school activities and it afforded an opportunity for every department of the school to be represented.

The class of '27 is to be congratulated upon their successful issuing of the paper, and the merchants who suported them with their ads, sure did a good thing to encourage the class in their undertaking.

The commencement issue was a credit to the class, and the managers are to be congratulated.

COMMENCEMENT PROGRAM GIVEN TONIGHT

Spencerville High School Commencement, Thursday evening, May 19, at the Lutheran Church at 8 o'clock. A special program will be rendered and Rev. A. J. Folsom of Fort Wayne will deliver the address. Hart's Orchestra of Hicksville furnishes the music. Please come. 20t1.

BARN BURNS WHEN GASOLINE EXPLODES

Edwin Guthrie, 36, is in Amaden hosital at Hicksville, seriously burned over the body, and the barn and woodshed on his farm in the Coletown neighborhood, one mile south and one mile east of Coburntown Church, are ash heaps, as the result of an explosion which occurred Thursday at 8 A. M.

George Brown, his farm helper, is also burned, but not seriously.

The blast occurred when the men saturated corn cobs with gasoline, placed them under the manifold of a tractor they were attempting to start, and touched a lighed match to them.

Guthrie, who recently recovered from a serious case of blood poisoning, is burned about the legs, feet and right arm. His clothes were burned off. He did not inhale the firey fumes, hence physicians hold out some hope for his recovery. Brown's burns are on the face. Jay Hart, a near neighbor was present, but escaped injury.

The damage is placed between $800 and $900. The wodshed was filled with wood and the barn contained two loads of hay, besides the tractor which was destroyed. The horses and cows were removed to safety.

The St. Joe fire department responded to the call for help and gave protection to the house. The other buildings were too far gone to be outened.

MEMORIAL DAY MUSIC

The director of the Memorial Day program, Mr. William Curie has issued a call to the three church choirs to unite to furnish the music for the day's program in St. Joe.

Through Mr. Curie's efficient efforts the programs of recent years have made this a red letter day for our community and attracts visitors from all over the county. Will you members of the musical organizations please make a special effort to do your part and duty to make this year's program the best ever?

We have new music, especially arranged for this occasion. Will ask you to rehearse but two times and I promise to make them snappy, entertaining and worth your time and you will have the satisfaction of knowing that you have done your duty.

The first rehearsal will be on Wednesday eve, May 25th at the Lutheran church at eight o'clock.

PLEASE COME.

C. A. Woodcox.

What is Your Opinion?

PICKED UP ABOUT TOWN

"Some fellows have a single aim in life," declares Elgin Curie, "and that is to stay single."

It's also a fine thing for the treasury of this country that the auto came in when the saloon went out.

"I never yet saw a man who made a dollar growling at the weather," says S. S. Widney, "but I've seen money lost by not letting it take its course."

Some fellows are so mean to their wives they wouldn't be king if they could because their wives would then be queens.

Paul Curie says half of the women are trying to develope and the other half are trying to rub out the development.

Our idea of government "red tape" is getting something done in six months that action could have accomplished in two hours.

"A woman may be able to keep some secrets," asserts Chas. Koch "but when she gets into a modern evening gown she's making a clean breast of it."

'I always feel that spring is the best time of year," declares Ray Reasoner, 'until I bump into somebody who wants to tell me the apple crop's killed."

BEATRICE STORER FINDS CORN BORER

Ten-year-old Beatrice Storer picked up stalk remnants on the Erick farm operated by her father, Ed Storer of Spencer township, Wednesday found a worm that looked to her small eyes like a corn borer. The children picking stalk remnants had been told to keep their eyes peeled for borers. When Beatrice found this worm, she immediately put it into a pint can and sent it to the corn borer control office, in charge of P. T. Ulman, where careful examination showed it to be a corn borer.

"This shows how carefully the fields must be picked up in order to keep from harboring the borer" said Ulman.

But Beatrice would not part with the worm. She insisted that it be reurned to her in the glass can where she is going to keep it and watch it go through first the pupal stage and then emerge as the corn borer moth. As soon as she sees the gossamer wings of the moth, it will be destroyed. Here is a chance for some of those stout hearts who have been wanting to bet a hundred dollars there wasn't a corn borer in Spencer township to get one for the price.

Two B. & O. signal gangs are located here for a few weeks, besides men are arriving to work on the new bridges, which will take several months to replace.

AUBURN CHURCH ACCEPTS RESIGNATION OF PASTOR

The membership of St. Mark's Lutheran church at the morning service on Sunday accepted the resignation of thepastor, Rev. P. A. Sorensen. A special executive session was called which was presided over by Samuel Collins, the president of the council and the resignation was presented. Rev. Sorensen has accepted a call from the congregation of St. Mark's Church at Ottumwa, Iowa, and with his family will leave Auburn the first of June. He will preach his last sermon here the last Sunday in May. No arrangements have as yet been made by the local congregation to extend a call for a successor to Rev. Sorensen. The call will have to be made to the president of the synod before any invitation to another pastor can be made.

CAPTAIN SPRINGER SPEAKER

Plans for Memorial Day services are being made by Wm. Curie, as chairman, and he is able to announce that Captain H. C. Springer, of Butler, will deliver the address. Full details as to the day's program will be given next week.

Insects Unabated

It is estimated that the total damage every year in the United States caused by a few species of insects amounts to more than $1,250,000,000, notwithstanding our increasing knowledge of the habits of insects and investigations of new methods of controlling the injurious species. The economic loss due to insects seems to be increasing, in spite of the intelligence of man.

Nothing to Worry About

"Some women," an Indiana paper thinks, "are unhappy because their husbands overdo the job of trying to make them happy." Some, perhaps, but not enough to worry about.—Capper's Weekly.

HARRY GOSHEN GOES TO WAWASEE

After serving the people at St. Joe for eight months as agent at the B. & O., Harry Goshen has been assigned the work at Lake Wawasee for thesummer, and will move his family the first of June. Mr. and Mrs. Goshen have made a wide circle of friends here in their few months stay, and while we dislike to have them leave, yet we wish them well wherever they are located. The St. Joe job is temporary and Harry feels it is a case of move some of these days and the position given him is a four months job, but good pay, and then he will move to some other assignment.

SIGNS OF WIND STORM

Being in the path of the tornado last week, the wind mill on the Curie farm was torn down across the wood shed and the brooder house with 150 chickens, was blown over and over and alighted in the barn yard, being tosed over a fence desides. The oil heater and lantern were in operation to furnish heat. Mr. and Mrs. Koch were eating breakfast and saw the mixup, so they hurried out and found that only ten chicks were killed. The Case woods across the road show signs of a severe wind.

CAPTAIN HART, WINNER

For the past few weeks the membership campaign of the Fish and Game Club has been on with Clarence Hart and Lester Coburn as captains, starting with a membership of sixteen on each side. The count Monday evening revealed that Coburn had turned in twenty-one new members while Hart and his men made a record of fifty-two, making the membership of the club now 106. The losing side will entertain the winners at a date to be announced later.

THE PROBLEM OF EYE HEALTH

Is a very important one. It applies to all classes of people of all ages and both sexes. It is known that most eyes are not normal, so this subject should have an appeal to thousands who never give it a thought. By rights EVERYONE should have his eyes examined and if a defect is present it should be given attention. Always at your service.

LACE COMES INTO ITS OWN; STYLING OF HATS DIVERSIFIED

LACE has come into its own. For several seasons past the air has been rife with rumors of a coming vogue for lace. The long-looked-for has happened! Lace in its every phase will glorify the summer costume. Not only does this apply to lace as a trimming, for the vogue of the all-lace frocks is also destined to sweep through all fashionland. Nor is the lace-mode confined to evening wear, indeed no! The very latest idea is that of the plaited all-over lace skirt, attached to a lace-trimmed chiffon blouse, over which is worn a matching lace jacket or bolero with long sleeves. This ensemble is carried out in either black, beige or light gray.

As to the sleeved black lace dress, its name is legion. Here's a suggestion: Buy several silk underslips, a black one, a white one and several favorite tones or tints, thus enhancing the value of the frock as ready for every occasion. Why not have the sleeves made detachable, thus again scoring a clever move?

So much, and much more for the daytime frock of lace, but what of the ravishing evening gowns all of lace which have entered the summer fashion panorama!

No need to be in a quandary as to what to choose for the next party dress, for lace is the answer. The gown in this picture suggests a pretty styling for lace of any color. The gypsy girdle of taffeta is a smart detail.

Here's a really-and-truly story about a new hat, as laughingly related by a certain well-known club woman, who seeing the humor and psychology of it, thought it too good to keep from her friends. "Soon after donning a new chapeau," said she, "I met a dear woman friend who exclaimed, 'How becoming that new hat is to you!' Later on a friend of the sterner sex met me with a 'Good morning! How well you are looking, what have you been doing to yourself—you seem to have found the fountain of youth—look ten years younger than when last I saw you!'" The man of it, the woman of it! Anyway it is a fine argument in favor of becoming millinery.

A more diversified styling of hats seldom has been recorded, as exists this season. Perhaps this is because the modish compose idea so encourages imagination to soar to very heights. Not only in terms of combination of color but of materials does the milliner create. Especially are fine straws and crochet viscas partnered with taffeta, faille and ribbon.

The hat to the right at the top shows a wide side crown of hand-sewed pedaline with a voluminous drape of faille silk.

Belting ribbon in two colors is picoted about a milan crown for the model in the center. Note how ribbon ends are brought up through openings in the crown.

Handsomely tailored is the large leghorn hat which goes fifty-fifty with black crepe faille in its designing. Wide brims are surely coming in!

The last model features sand-colored milan with a crown basket woven of narrow grosgrain ribbon in string color with tan.

Time-Saving Way of Tinting

(Copyright 1927)

For perfect tinting of dainty underwear, dresses, etc., the easiest way—and by far the best way—is the use of real dye. It tints in cold water, you know; just dip the garment and it takes whatever tinge you wish to give it. A matter of minutes.

Real dyes will get such smooth and even tones as shame the streaky, wishy-washy work of synthetic preparations for the purpose! Diamond dye in original powder form is only fifteen cents at the drug store. Do your own diluting. Then dip to tint—and you'll have an effect that's beautiful. And if you want the tint permanent, just use boiling water!

Diamond dyes do a perfect, "professional" job of dyeing, too; the druggist has sample shades and simple directions. For a book of endless suggestions, in full color, request a free copy of Color Craft of DIAMOND DYES, Dept N32, Burlington, Vermont.

Rose to Fame, but Had Unhappy Life

William Cowper, the English poet, who died a century and a quarter ago, had some unfortunate experiences in his illustrious career. His mother died when William was six years old, and he was placed in a boarding school.

The homesick boy was oppressed to such an extent that his health failed and he was taken home. That experience made him a bitter opponent of the educational system prevailing in England in his day. Cowper also was unfortunate in a love affair because of the opposition presented by the girl's father.

The girl was Cowper's cousin, and this and other considerations caused Ashby Cowper to decline to sanction the marriage of his daughter, Theodora, to William. The tradition is that to obey this injunction the young people sacrificed their happiness and never saw each other again.—Kansas City Star.

Mary stooped and kissed her little hostess and thanked her warmly, promising to be back to visit her soon.

"Oh, if you'd do that, that would be wonderful! Jest to have some one come in and see me. I don't ever want for anything," she said proudly, for the Sayers were an old family and Phoebe never forgot it. "Uncle Nate's got plenty, and he's so kind to me. But I do love company."

Uncle Nate looked up at the sky and said: "You'd better hurry home; there's a shower coming."

Ned realized that Uncle Nate did not wish Phoebe to know of a certain financial transaction, in which wear and tear to his barn and kitchen and the loan of dry clothing had been duly and minutely calculated.

They said very little. They had both been shaken out of the groove in which they had been comfortably existing at the beginning of this drive. Ned was no longer a merely amusing grocer's clerk. He was a man who had held her in his arms, who had called her "dear" and had saved her life. As for Ned, there was no longer any need for question. Mary might be still vague about her feelings toward him, but he knew now what she meant to him. He had known it from the moment he came up out of the water with her in his arms. She was the one girl, the only girl for him. Dorothy Selden, and her predecessors, were pale shadows in the long ago. Mary was what he had been searching for, longing for.

He knew it now. It was wonderful. It was romance; romance come upon suddenly in the midst of common, every-day life.

"There's mother, waiting," exclaimed Mary, who had been longing to smooth down his hair which had dried thoroughly, but rampantly, in the breeze. "Oh, I do hope she's not anxious."

CHAPTER VIII

Mrs. Johnston was not only anxious, but annoyed, and was prepared to show her annoyance. Then she caught sight of Mary's wet hair and strange clothes. Instantly she eliminated from her world everything but Mary, until she had her in her arms and was convinced that she was safe and sound.

Then, and only then did she include Ned in her gaze, and for a moment Ned wished he were invisible. The mother's eyes were like those of a tigress who has recovered her cub and sights the hunter who tried to take it away. They softened, almost instantly, when Mary told her all she owed to Mr. Carter.

The tigress disappeared utterly as Mrs. Johnston hurried Mary into the house, with instructions as to a hot bath and bed. Then she turned to Ned and ordered him home as fast as he could go. He might come tomorrow.

She held out her hand and thanked him gratefully and sincerely, and yet dismissed him back into the shades of the grocery shop from which he came.

Ned drove away with no thought of bitterness in his heart. Mrs. Johnston was absolutely within her rights. Mary was a precious possession. Besides, though Ned did not consciously formulate this thought to himself, it made the game so much more exciting to have opposition. An implacable mother was almost as exhilarating as a rival.

This latter thought brought Ned up with a sudden start. It dawned upon him that he was dreaming wildly, with very little foundation for his dream. He knew absolutely nothing about the girl. But when has that fact discouraged a lover?

Claude was at the entrance of the store when Ned drove up. After the first glance he hurried Ned within. Ned noticed with amusement that Claude pursued the same tactics as Mrs. Johnston, ordering Aunt Lyddy to see that Ned had a hot bath immediately, and also mentioning bed. He agreed to the first, but scorned the latter. Later he told his story.

"Jiminy!" Claude exclaimed. "Lucky you were there, and I'm glad it wasn't more serious. Did you see Mrs. Johnston?"

"Mrs. Johnston? Oh, yes! You couldn't help seeing Mrs. Johnston—if she was around. Awfully fond of Mary. She isn't a bit like Mary—er—Miss Johnston."

"No," said Claude, dryly, "apparently not. You didn't notice anything else did you? Wasn't there a single eerie thing about this Mrs. Johnston that marked her out from any other pleasant-spoken, red-headed woman you've seen?"

"Her good looks," Ned admitted, blowing a cloud of smoke to the ceiling. "They were extra."

"Oh my G—d! Ned, you are an exasperating youngster."

Ned studied Claude's perturbed countenance. Then it slowly dawned upon him that there might be a reason for this excess of feeling. "Not—not trying to check up your red-headed Polly girl with her, are you?"

"And if I am," declared Claude, shaken out of his usual good-humored acceptance of things as they are, "a lot of help I'm getting from you!"

"What was your—Polly's name?"

"Mary—Polly—Johnston."

Ned whistled.

"If it was the daughter—this Mary girl now, I suppose I could get details and like as not she's twice as ordinary as the mother."

"Nonsense!" Ned rose to the defense of his lady. "Mary—Miss Johnston, I mean, has the most extraordinary blue eyes!"

"Jiminy, Ned! Have I got to hear that again? I got blue eyes myself."

Ned looked at Claude and gasped. He leaned toward him and said: "They're the same color as Miss Johnston's."

Claude Melnotte Dabbs rose, his lips compressed. "Ned, you've had a hard day and I've come darn near losing you, so nothing on earth will make me pick a fight now. But if you want to do me the greatest favor—take a nap, and wake up able to say one single sentence straight through without dragging that girl's eyes in."

He left the room abruptly. "All the same," Ned told himself as he reached for a book, "their eyes are very much alike."

Mary Johnston slept the sleep of exhausted youth, and woke refreshed, to find her mother sitting at her bedside.

"Why, Mumsy," Mary stretched out a slim, warm hand to her mother, "have you been worrying about me?"

Mrs. Johnston stooped and kissed her. "You are all I have in the world, so you're rather precious to me. You're not to get up. I've had my dinner, and yours is on the tray ready to bring up."

"Mother!" Mary lay still and wondered. "You get a dinner! Why I never even dreamed you knew how!"

"There's lots of undiscovered country about mother, though you've known her all your life, Mary. You'll find it out some day."

Mary finished her dinner and when she relinquished the tray, said: "Mother, couldn't we sort over the jewelry tonight?"

Mrs. Johnston agreed and went from the room with the tray. Mary lay back on the pillows and contemplated the ceiling, a little frown between her brows. If it was not having to sell the jewelry and being poor, what was it that was worrying mother? Surely she was not worrying about this—this Mr. Carter?

At the same moment Claude Dabbs, still at his desk, also frowning, looked up from his writing as Ned came into the room.

"C. M., aren't you rather jumping at conclusions? 'Johnston' is far from being an uncommon name, and 'Mary,' with 'Polly' for short, is far from being uncommon either; therefore the combination really tells you nothing."

Claude nodded. "I told myself that, too, at first, but—"

"All the same," Ned continued reluctantly, "I will tell you something I've noticed about Mrs. Johnston. She has a little black mole on the lobe of her ear. Rather fetching, like the dark stone of an earring. And behind the same ear she has a single lock of pure white hair."

"A bit like a thumb-mark and just behind the ear?"

"Yes."

Claude rose, excitedly, then sat down suddenly. "Polly—or I'm a Dutchman! Do you suppose she's got her suspicions about me, and came here to verify 'em?" demanded Claude.

"Never heard her mention your name," Ned declared. "Certainly never asked me any questions."

"All the same, I don't like the way things look," Claude said doggedly. "There's something behind it. I'm going to be on the safe side."

Ned looked at him curiously, and a little uncomfortably. What safe side could there be for a man in C. M.'s position, if his utterly absurd deduction that lovely Mrs. Johnston was his "Polly" had any foundation in fact.

"I'm going to send her back the money," declared Dabbs. "Going to send her back her cursed five hundred and feel that my soul's my own. I scraped and saved that money the first year I was clear of debt, and I've held it all this time just for—just for this chance."

He opened a small drawer in his desk, and reached for a roll of bills with a rubber band about them, wrote a few words on a sheet of paper, sealed it with the money in an envelope, directed it, then went to the store door.

Although the store was closed and shuttered, there was a light in its dim recesses. Young John Slater, an assistant, was there.

"John," called Claude, take this letter up to the White House. You can take the car. I don't care how late you come back, if there's no answer."

Young John grunted assent and disappeared with the note, whistling at the thought of having the car to himself as late as he wished.

On Mary's bed lay two empty jewel cases. Mary sat propped up against the pillows and her mother sat at the foot of the bed. Between them was a heap of glittering things. If Mary said: "Bother that old ring. You don't want to keep that," her mother would say: "Mary, you gave me that ring when you were only twelve. How can I part with it?"

In the middle of an animated discussion about an old jade bracelet, the doorbell rang. Mrs. Johnston, after waiting for some one to answer it, suddenly realized that she was the only some one available, and went down stairs.

Young John Slater stood waiting impatiently. "Mr. Dabbs, he asked me to give this note into your hands, and if they was any answer to wait."

Mrs. Johnston managed to indicate that he might wait in the hall, and went swiftly into the library, shut the door and held the letter as though it was a deadly explosive. Presently she opened the letter. Five one hundred dollar bills fell out. Mrs. Johnston picked them up, together with the note which had been folded around the bills. The note began without preamble.

"If you are the Polly Johnston who married me in New Brunswick, some twenty years ago, you will know why I am returning the money. I have felt worse than the devil about it for more years than I like to remember. For God's sake don't refuse me the chance to get financially straight. I won't intrude otherwise, without your permission. If you are not my Polly Johnston, send it back and excuse

"Claude Dabbs."

Polly Johnston gave a low whistle. "It's a godsend," she said aloud as she put the money in her desk. She threw the note on the fire, watched it burn and went into the hall.

"Tell Mr. Dabbs there is no answer."

Young John went out into the night and Mrs. Johnston went up to Mary, arranging her story as she climbed the stairs.

Mary, fingering the jewels, yawned a little. She idly planned several beginnings for the next chapter of her life in Clover Hollow. They were all different, yet each began with the morning's interview with the grocer's clerk. She thought this was odd, but concluded that poverty and the country were narrowing her horizon. She looked up as her mother entered the room.

With a sudden movement of her hand, Mrs. Johnston swept the "for sale" jewels into the box.

"We won't have to bother with them yet awhile. I've had a telegram from New York. We're to go there and negotiate a loan on the land. I want you with me, of course. I couldn't leave you here alone. We'll have to take the first train tomorrow. It's the 9:30, I think. Will you be feeling up to that, Mary-girl?"

"I feel perfectly all right, Mother. It's only a bit sudden, and I can never care about the city in this weather But I'll be ready."

Kanakas Left Record of Engineering Skill

In bygone days the natives of New Caledonia displayed an astonishing knowledge of engineering.

Because the valleys where they lived were too narrow to support a growing population, they carved the sides of the hills into great terraces. These were carefully graded so that mountain streams could be made to flow smoothly along each terrace and down to the next in zigzags, each half a mile or so long, says a writer in Adventure Magazine. If there was no spring on the hillside, they brought water from neighboring slopes along viaducts made of hollowed-out tree trunks. They gauged levels with a nicety modern engineers might envy.

Few of these terraced hillsides are cultivated today. The white man has changed all that.

The native population is decreasing, the survivors are apathetic and indolent; they work on plantations or cattle ranches, and on Sundays they get drunk when they are not attending church.

Mileage of Engines

The average passenger engine, if traveling on good roads, covers approximately 35,000 miles in one year. The average distance which a freight engine travels in a year is approximately 25,000 miles on good roads.

FARMER COMES TO TOWN

Her Come-Back

He—Now that we are married, perhaps I might venture to point out a few of your little defects.

She—Don't bother, dear. I am quite aware of them. It was those little defects that prevented me from getting a much better man than you are.

Enough Said

Mr. Brewer—You had beauty and brains when I married you, Jane.

Mrs. Brewer—Well, I had beauty, but I couldn't have had brains, John.

PETER HEALS THE LAME MAN

LESSON TEXT—Acts 3:1-4:31.

GOLDEN TEXT—Neither is there salvation in any other for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.—Acts 4:12.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Heals a Lame Man.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Gifts That Money Cannot Buy.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Giving Our Best for Others.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Gifts That Are Better Than Money.

I. Peter Healing the Lame Man (Acts 3:1-10).

1. The place (vv. 1, 2).

Peter and John were on their way to the house of worship. This man had been placed at the entrance of the place of worship where he might receive the sympathetic attention of worshipers.

2. The man (v. 2).

This beggar was infirm from his birth. He was now more than forty years old (4:22) and had brought his ailment with him into the world. When he saw Peter and John he asked alms.

3. The method (vv. 3-8).

(1) The man's attention gained (v. 4).

Peter and John commanded him to look on them.

(2) Peter commanded him in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth to rise and walk (v. 6).

(3) Peter took him by the right hand (v. 7),

This was meant to give impetus to his faith—not strength to his ankles.

4. The man's response (v. 8).

Strength came to his feet and ankle-bones at once. He stood, he walked, he leaped and shouted praises to God.

5. The effect (vv. 9-11).

The people were so filled with wonder and amazement that they ran together to behold this wonderful thing. Note:

(1) This helpless beggar had to be carried to the temple gate. Men and women out of Christ are so helpless that they need to be brought where the light of God can be applied to them.

(2) Peter taking the man by the hand shows the manner of helping the lost.

II. Peter Witnessing Before the Multitude (2:12-26).

Though this miracle directed the attention of the people to Peter and John, Peter immediately turned their attention from himself to Christ. He told them that it was faith in Jesus Christ whom God had glorified and whom they had deliberately betrayed and crucified that had healed this man.

III. Peter in Prison for Christ's Sake (4:1-4).

It was his fidelity to Christ that brought him this persecution. Observe:

1. The leaders—priests and Sadducees—in this persecution (vv. 1, 2).

The priests were intolerant because these new teachers were encroaching upon their functions.

2. The result (vv. 3, 4).

Though they were held in bondage by chains, Christ continued to work. The number of believers had greatly increased.

IV. Peter Witnessing Before the Sanhedrin (4:5-21).

1. The inquiry (vv. 5-7).

This inquiry admitted the reality of the miracle. They wanted to know what it signified.

2. Peter's answer (vv. 8-12).

Being filled with the Holy Spirit, Peter calmly and graciously answered. He showed them that they were not on trial as evildoers but for doing good to the helpless and needy man. Since they could not deny the miracle he boldly declared that it had been done in the name of Jesus Christ whom they had crucified and God had raised from the dead.

3. The impression upon the Sanhedrin (vv. 13-22).

(1) They marveled (vv. 1-13).

They saw that Peter's behavior and words were as unusual as the miracle.

(2) They took knowledge that Peter and John had been with Jesus (v. 13).

(3) They forbade them to speak in Christ's name (v. 18).

(4) Peter and John's reply (vv. 19, 20).

They expressed their determination to obey God rather than men.

(5) Their release (v. 21).

Seeing the people were on their side, there was no way to punish them.

V. The Church at Prayer (vv. 23-31).

As soon as Peter and John were set free, they hastened away to their fellow disciples and told them their experience. They praised God for deliverance and prayed for boldness to speak the Word of God.

Seek Help From Ladybug

To wage war against the greenfly and so protect foodstuffs the British ministry of agriculture has granted money for an experimental station to provide winter homes for ladybugs. For several years English farmers have been collecting the pretty insects by hand to save them over the winter so that there will be plenty of ladybugs to start an early spring campaign against destructive larvae.

Must Be Healthy Spot

In the parish of Pouilly-sous-Charlerol, France—a place of about 2,000 inhabitants—was recently celebrated an unusual event during which the village church was filled by a still more unusual congregation.

The event was the celebration of the one hundredth birthday of one of the women parishioners. She was escorted to the foot of the altar by a group of thirty-four of her friends, not one of whom was under eighty years of age.

THE JAY-WALKER

The jay-walker, who used to like to cut across the street diagonally between corners, or walk in the center of a public highway, is fast disappearing from our midst. But there are still enough of his kind to worry motorists, and to help fill up the papers with auto accidents. The jay-walker is a menace both to himself and the motorist. He is always in the wrong place at the right time, making brakes grind and forcing auomobiles into curbs, fences or trees. His practice is both unnecessary and dangerous. There is no excuse for it, and it should be as natural for a man to remain in a safe place along a rural highway as it is in a town or city street. They invite trouble when they dodge across the street, or cross anywhere except at a regular crossing. And public sympathy is fast turning to the motorist instead of the jay-walker when a fatal accident occurs. There is danger anywhere you cross a street. But there is far less danger when you cross it at the place where it is intended and expected that you will cross.

THE BUSY BRUSH

The busiest brush in all the land today is the whitewash brush. Its effect is being seen and felt in every section—seen because it is attractive to the eye and felt because it is one of the surest disease-prevention customs to which Americans are addicted. Any time of year is a good time to use the whitewash brush, but right now, while St. Joe residents still have the spring-cleaning fever is the most appropriate time. Not everyone, however, knows how to mix the best whitewash, though anyone can apply it. So we're going to give you what the government says is the best whitewash recipe known. Here it is—use it liberally and let your neighbor copy it: "Carefully slake 38 pounds of good quicklime; strain the paste, while still thick, through wire fly screen and add about four gallons of hot water. While stirring vigorously pour into the lime mixture a solution made by first dissolving 12 pounds of salt and 6 ounces of alum in about four gallons of hot water and then adding one quart of molasses. Thin with water. Apply the mixture with an ordinary whitewash brush. Jesse Loftus has given his trees an application and is perhaps the first.

BUYING FREAKS

We see by some of our exchanges that the old "mummy wheat" fake has bobbed up again, and we suppose it is only natural that some of our friends around St. Joe will be answering the ads—and getting stung. This is a revival of the yarn started every year or so by some fake seed merchants. They claim to have a "limited supply" of wheat or corn seed discovered in an ancient Egyptian tomb, and declare the grains are 4,000 years old. They tell of an Australian farmer planting some "mummy wheat" seed and raising many times as many bushels to the acre as can be grown from American seed wheat. It is an old yarn and many have squandered their money on it in the past. But that "there's a sucker born every minute" is proven by the fact that these smooth mail-order advertisers are trying to put it over again. And the worst part of it is they'll succeed in finding many victims.

EARLY BUT TIMELY

In our mail comes a request from that great organization down at Washington City known as the American Automobile Association, an organization made up of the 850 secretaries of auto clubs in every section of the United States. It may seem a little early to be sending it out, and yet when we consider the value of its timely advice it deserves attention right now.

"Please caution your readers around St. Joe who expect to use their automobiles for driving into strange territory and along roads unfamiliar to them to use a little extra caution this spring and summer," reads the bulletin. "In all parts of the country auto travel is now growing heavier. New roadside stands for the sale of food and new sources of drinking water supply are being offered on all sides. The driver on a strange road takes a long chance in eating and drinking just anything he can get his hands on. Many deaths occurred last year as a result of it. Won't you help us to keep down this unnecessary death rate by warning your people to be sure that the food they get at roadside stands is pure and wholesome and the water they drink along the road is not contaminated with disease germs?"

And that is the purpose of these few lines. To urge any of our citizens who may be driving strange roads, now that pretty driving days are here, to guard against unnecessary disease by making sure that what they eat and drink is pure.

WATER AND WIND

Events of the past few weeks indicate that it is next to impossible for this country to pass through the spring season without catastrophes and disasters. Scores of lives wiped out in a violent Texas tornado and millions of dollars in property damage along the Mississippi river must be written into the history of the year 1927.

There is really no lesson to be taught by these disasters, unless it is to remind us that this is a mighty big country in whnch we live, and that it is pretty hard for the elements to treat all of it kindly. Some parts of it must have sunshine while other parts have rain; some parts must have wind while other parts have calm. We can never tell in what part the water and the wind is going to come next. No section is immune from tornadoes and cyclones, and even though a town may be inland, cloud-bursts have a way of making themselves felt in places where there is never any danger from rising rivers.

Water and wind at this season of the year is natural and we have to take what comes. St. Joe and surrounding community are as safe from death and property damage by storm and flood as any other section of the country, and yet our turn to suffer may come tomorrow. About the only thing to be done is to invest as heavily as we possibly can in insurance, since that is really the only protection left us and the only assurance that we can build our home back over our head if we are unfortunate enough to lose it. There is but one way to profit by the calamaties that have just beset the people along the Mississippi and the Texas tornado belt. That is not to stand by idly hoping that this section will be spared, but to see to it in advance that there will be money enough forthcoming if our property is destroyed to reconstruct it when the storm has passed on or the waters have subsided.

The Bunco-Club was entertained at the home of Mrs. Avis Staman, Friday evening. Two guests, Mesdames Annie Mumaw and Ann Sechler, were present. Those having high score for the evening were Mesdames Blanch Leighty, Pauline Jordan and Edna Perkins. After the evening playing the members enjoyed a marsh-mallow and weiner roast.

Some damage was done in a fire at the William Heyler residence at Auburn at 4:30 o'clock Monday afternoon. The fire started from an electric iron which was left setting on the ironing board in the kitchen. The ironing board was burned half in two, falling on the floor and burning a hole in the floor four feet square and falling through into the basement.

Mrs. Martha Grosh, of Cedarville, passed away at her home Monday morning at 2 o'clock quite suddenly. After eating heartily of the evening meal Sunday, Mrs. Grosh retired at 10 o'clock and at 2 o'clock Monday morning she was found dead. Mrs. Grosh had not been in particularly poor health except that she was apparently recovering from the effects of a broken hip which she sustained the latter part of November last.

A transcript has been filed in the DeKalb circuit court in the petition in the county commissioners' court by Emanuel E. Culler and others for a road in Wilmington township. The petition has been on file since 1924. The reviewers assessed damages in favor of W. H. Pepple for $150 and in favor of Ira Wingard for $125, but the commissioners held that the road was not of sufficient importance to the public to warrant payment of damages from the county treasury. An appeal to the circuit court was taken by Mr. Wingard.

Easily operated—positively regulated—wickless—valveless—absolutely dependable. Burns kerosene—one of the cheapest fuels known.

THE NEW MODEL embodies all the principles of the standard Florence Oil Stove and has a decided economy in the new over-sized, high-powered 15 inch Florence burner. It does the work of two standard burners in giving all the speed and efficiency necessary for the large, full-sized oven.

COOKING TOP OF CAST IRON GRID WORK is extra wide and entirely open. You can use every inch of the space—for cooking, directly over the burners; and for keeping food warm, on the surface adjacent to the burners. The whole top is perfectly flush—cooking utensils can be moved around with no danger of spilling their contents. A highly polished surface provides excellent heating contact.

Mrs. Wayne Trostel, of Lima, Ohio, is here the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Abner Trostel and family for a couple of weeks.

CELEBRATE SILVER WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Saturday evening, at their home, Mr. and Mrs. Abner Trostel celebrated their silver wedding anniversary, forty-three persons being present. The guests included members of a Sunday School class, the R. H. C. and their husbands, Mr. and Mrs. Will Maxwell, Mr. and Mrs. Meade Baker, Mrs. Wayne Trostel, of Lima, Miss Mildred Gee and Dale Trostel.

The rooms were decorated with silver crepe paper, cut flowers and ferns. The program consisted of a piano selection by Mrs. Perry, talks by Mr. Clyde Hart and Mr. Wilder and a reading by Miss Gee. The prize for a bridal contest was won by Mrs. Saxe Hadsell. The host and hostess served ice cream and cake and silver wrapped candy.

The guests left at a late hour after wishing the couple many more happy anniversaries.

On Sunday, Mrs. Trostel's parents, sister, brother and their families of Roann, and Mr. and Mrs. C. U. Bowers, of Garrett, came to help celebrate the occasion.

Mr. and Mrs. Trostel received many nice pieces of silverware.

THEY SAVE YOU STEPS

Has it ever occurred to you that the advertisements of local merchants are step-savers, time-savers, worry-savers?

Well, they are. For when a local merchant tells about something in his ad, it saves you the trouble of shopping around until you find what you want.

Going shopping in response to an ad is quite different from going shopping for something you are not sure you are going to find. It's the difference between traveling as an arrow and wandering around like a skipper. What a satisfaction it is to see something advertised by a local merchant, go directly to his store, get it and be home again in no time. How different from running all over town at a waste of time and patience, and then, perhaps not finding just what you want.

There never was a woman who wansn't busy, probably, and therefore every minute counts with them. That's why the wise ones read the ads of local merchants and do their trading direct, like this: From newspaper advertisement to store and home again—well pleased.

LOW RATES for time payments on these cars

ANY FAMILY entitled to credit may buy a General Motors car and pay for it while using it, under the GMAC Plan.

When time payments first became an accepted form of car purchase, General Motors organized its own finance company, the General Motors Acceptance Corporation, to make sure that the sale of its cars on time would be in the buyer's interest and that the finance charges would be fair.

GMAC rates have always been low; and the last reduction has saved General Motors' customers more than $12,000,000.

The General Motors line includes "a car for every purse and purpose"—a suitable model for every income. You can buy it out of income, paying no more than the cash delivered price, plus only the low GMAC financing charge. And the whole transaction is so conducted as to keep your goodwill and satisfaction.

CLIP THE COUPON

USE THE GMAC PLAN to enjoy a new car now. Use it to get a better car for what you plan to spend. Have General Motors quality. Share in the economies of volume production. Look over the list of General Motors cars below. See which car suits your purse. Then check and mail the coupon. We will send you full information about that car and about the fair, low-cost GMAC Plan of paying for it out of income. Don't wait. Clip the coupon and mail it TODAY.

PROGRESS OF CORN BORER CLEAN-UP

A great deal of headway has been made in the cleanup work by the farmers in the territory infested with the European Corn Borer. With the advent of good weather, the farmers have gone ahead with their plowing and only a few corn fields remain that work has not been done on them.

In order to make an absolute cleanup, it becomes necessary to establish a dead line when this work must be started or it will be necesary to place Government machinery where the individual has not started work on his fields. Government machinery will be placed on such fields and cleaned up just as soon as equipment is available. It is not the intention to stop a man from doing his own work after this date but rather he will be encouraged to go ahead and finish it up.

Government equipment has already been placed in many fields where the owner is unable to get the work done or has refused to do anything. The above date has been set because a few farmers have promised to do the work but keep putting it off.

The owner or tenant will not be allowed any extra labor compensation from the Government where the corn ground has to be cleaned up by the Federal Government.

The time when the European Corn Borer emerges from the corn stalks and starts laying eggs will soon be here and it is absolutely imperative that all fields be cared for before that time. This ruling is not made to work a hardship on any individual but to protect those men who have already cleaned up.

A survey of the territory has been made and it is estimated that 95% or more of the farmers are making a real effort to clean up their own corn fields. Some hand picking is necessary on many of the fields and this is especially true where there are low wet spots in the field and the stalks did not plow under very well. These fields should be cleaned up at the first opportunity.

Notes From Sunday Service

The evening service was the Baccalaureate for the graduating class. Their class motto is "Life is what we make it." The minister took their motto for a text and developed the fact that tho we can not control the conditions of life yet we can, by the help of God, rise above them and make our lives what we will. He further stated that our lives were either a slavery to conditions or a victory over heritage and environment. Then challenged the class thus: You are now full of ambition—what for? To be great? To be rich? To be mighty? Or to be worth something to the Creator and to man?

HOME BUREAU NEWS

The Home Bureau Ladies will please take notice that the time of the May meeting has been changed from next Friday the 20th to one week from Friday the 27th. The change having been made because of the school house being in use for that day. The meeting on the 27th will be an all day meeting. Watch next week's paper for further announcements.

Spencer Township Ladies Home Bureau most delightfully entertained the Ladies Home Bureaus of DeKalb county last Wednesday at the Community Hall in Spencerville. About thirty members of the Concord Township Home of the Concord Township Home Bureau were present. The hall was tastefully decorated in the Spencer Club colors and the seats arranged in groups around tables which contained most centerpieces of flowers.

A welcome from Spencer Township was given by Mrs. Goldsmith and responded to by Mrs. Lola Carper. Roll was called of the different townships of the county and each responded with an entertaining number which altogether made up a fine program.

Refreshments consisting of brick ice cream, angel food cake and coffee were served by Spencer township after the program.

To say the St. Joe ladies enjoyed the afternoon would be putting it very mildly, and all voted Spencer township ladies royal entertainers.

This photograph, made at the instant of the explosion, shows the actual dynamiting of the Mississippi levee in St. Bernard parish when that and adjoining parishes were sacrificed to the flood waters of the Mississippi river to save the city of New Orleans. Afterward it was necessary to blast other openings in the dike and the operation was successful so far as New Orleans was concerned, but, of course, the farm and trapping lands between there and Lake Borgne were inundated and the loss there was considerable. All the inhabitants had been evacuated.

NUMEROUS KINDS OF SALAD FOUNDATIONS

Springtime Salad With French Dressing.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Salads at this time of the year appeal most when the ingredients are chiefly crisp, uncooked vegetables, bright with red slices of tomato, or whole radishes, set off by glistening bits of green peppers or watercress, which contrast well with the paler shades of lettuce, endive, sliced cucumbers, or celery. Winter salads must often be made partly of canned vegetables and fruit, and with them the tendency is to serve a rich mayonnaise dressing. There is a feeling of delightful freshness and daintiness about spring salads, with their gay colors, crisp texture, and the zest of a plain French dressing.

Numerous Foundations.

No rules for combining these salads can be given. Put together a little of this, a little of that—whatever you can get. There are numerous kinds of salad foundations available in city markets, such as escarole, romaine, or chicory, in addition to lettuce. Use some of these from time to time, with watercress for its peppery tang, chopped celery for its flavor and crisp texture, and now and then a few very thin slices of cucumber. Those who like onion may include it in the form of large shaved rings, or as whole spring onions with two or three inches of stem. Or, lacking onion, rub the salad bowl with a clove of garlic—just to give a "soupcon" or suspicion of garlic flavor. Sorrel and other wild greens usually eaten raw may be put in the salad.

Tomatoes are generally scalded a minute and peeled before slicing for salad. Radishes are often cut in such a way that the red skin turns back in points, suggesting petals. If you can't get fresh tomatoes or radishes, use a slice or two of pickled beet or some canned pimento for red color—but don't use both reds in the same salad! Grated raw carrot brightens up a green salad, and adds to the supply of vitamines for which the dish is especially valuable. Rutabaga turnip may be used in the same way.

Make French Dressing.

The bureau of home economics tells how to make French dressing. Use the following proportions and make any amount you need: Half-teaspoonful of salt, a few grains of cayenne, paprika if desired, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar, six tablespoonfuls of oil. Add vinegar sparingly and beat the ingredients together until they are well blended. If you have a cruet, or other bottle with a tight stopper, you can keep French dressing on hand all the time, simply shaking the bottle vigorously when ready to use it. Many people like a tablespoonful of chopped pickle added to French dressing for a salad of this type. If you use it, add it just at serving time.

CANNED RHUBARB FOR WINTER USE

Fine Flavor Developed by Baking, Then Canning.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Sometimes a slight variation in a detail of method in preparing a given food makes considerable difference in the flavor and quality of the product. This is especially true with respect to canning certain fruits and vegetables at home. While there are general rules to be observed in connection with all canning, it is worth while to know what particular treatment will bring out the best flavor in the product with which one is working.

Rhubarb may be mentioned as an example. While it is entirely possible to stew rhubarb and then can it, it has been found that a much finer flavor is developed if the rhubarb is first baked and then canned. The stalks are washed and cut into half-inch lengths. One-fourth as much sugar as rhubarb, by measure, is added and the rhubarb is baked until tender, in a covered dish. No water is added. The cooked rhubarb is then packed hot into hot jars, and processed for five minutes in a hot-water bath. By a hot-water bath is understood any covered vessel of sufficient depth for the jars or cans, when set on a rack or false bottom, to be completely immersed while processing.

What is called the "hot pack" is now considered by the United States Department of Agriculture the best method of canning for all vegetables and a number of fruits. Certain fruits may be packed cold if boiling sirup is poured over them in the containers and the processing is continued for 20 minutes or more, according to the product. Rhubarb may also be canned in this way, if processed 20 minutes, but the other method, in which the rhubarb is baked without water and packed with only the sirup developed by the baking, is better flavored.

Farmers' Bulletin 1471-F, "Canning Fruits and Vegetables at Home," gives the fine points in handling each of the products commonly canned at home. It may be obtained, while the supply lasts, by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C.

Remedy for Wet Cellar

Drainage is the surest and often the simplest remedy for a wet spot in the cellar. From a nearby depression or ditch lay four-inch drain tile to and along the outside bottom of the cellar wall, thus intercepting the ground-water before it seeps into the cellar.

Chocolate Pudding Old Favorite With Family

Of course the family enjoys a chocolate pudding once in a while, especially if you can serve a little plain or whipped cream with it, or a soft custard sauce. The recipe given here by the United States Department of Agriculture requires only one egg.

The ingredients are:

- 4 cupfuls milk.
- 1½ squares unsweetened chocolate.
- ⅓ cupful sugar.
- 1 egg.
- 6 level tablespoonfuls cornstarch
- ¼ teaspoonful salt.
- 1 teaspoonful vanilla.

If you have no unsweetened chocolate on hand, a very good pudding can be made by using a tablespoonful of cocoa for each cup of milk. Mix the cornstarch and sugar thoroughly, and also the cocoa if you are using it. Otherwise, melt the chocolate in a pan over hot water. If melted directly over the fire, chocolate is likely to scorch. Combine it with the milk and salt in the double boiler. Pour some of this warm milk into the cornstarch and sugar. Return to the double boiler, stirring until thickened; then cover and cook for about 20 minutes. Beat the egg until light, and after pouring the hot pudding into it, beat well again. This gives the pudding a light, fluffy texture. Add the vanilla and pour at once into a wet mold and chill thoroughly. This could also be used for the filling in a chocolate "Washington" pie, which is really not a pie but a two-layer cake.

Why Sweets Are Harmful to Children's Teeth

Sweets may be harmful to children's teeth in two very different ways. In the first place, children who have the habit of eating a great deal of sweets, in the form of large amounts of sugar on cereals, or as desserts, or as candy between meals, are very likely not to get the building foods they need. Children who have acquired a taste for candy and sweets are not so fond of cereals, eggs, milk and simple vegetable dishes which are not highly seasoned. These foods are very necessary in the diet, because of the calcium they contain. The calcium builds good health and good teeth.

In the second place, children who eat sweets may have acid saliva in the mouth, caused by slight fermentation of the sugar in solution around the teeth. In time, this acid saliva tends to affect the enamel covering of the teeth. Furthermore, sugar in the mouth serves as a good food for bacteria which are normally present in the mouth. As the bacteria multiply in number, the chances for decay increase. Recent knowledge of mouth hygiene indicates, however, that poor diet has by far the greatest influence on poor teeth.

TWO WOMEN FOUND HELP

Their Sickness Banished by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Mrs. Nina Matteson, Box 206, Oxford, N. Y., writes—"If it had not been for your medicine, I could not have done my work as it should have been done. Mother told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I had read in different papers what it had done for different women. She wanted me to try it, so my husband got me one bottle at first; then I took two others. Now I am feeling quite strong again."

Mrs. Ernest Tanguay of Adams, Mass., says she was ill for four years and could not sleep nights or go out on the street. She read about the Vegetable Compound and decided to try it. After taking eight bottles she was able to do all her work and go anywhere and is quite herself again.

This dependable Vegetable Compound is a household word in thousands of homes. The fourth generation is now learning the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than half a century, this reliable medicine has been used by women with very satisfactory results. If the Vegetable Compound has helped other women, why shouldn't it help you?

Johnson's "Odd" Habit Proved His Greatness

According to the greatest of all biographers, Boswell, Doctor Johnson, upon entering a library, "ran eagerly to one side of the room, intent on poring over the backs of books, says a writer in "Private Book Collectors." Because of this custom a contemporary once called him "odd," to which accusation Johnson replied:

"Sir, the reason is very plain. Knowledge is of two kinds. We know the subject ourselves, or we know where we can find information upon it. When we inquire into any subject the first thing we have to do is to know what books have treated of it. This leads us to look at catalogues and the backs of books in libraries." No wonder that such a man knew so well how and where to tap the sources of knowledge and give the world a great and unique dictionary.

Bathers "Conservative"

You can introduce a bath into a village, but you cannot make the villagers bathe in it, is about the conclusion drawn by Rev. Gordon Smythe, rector in the village of Stow St. Mary, England. The community of four farmers and their hundred workers raised $1,000 for a new schoolhouse, and the enterprising rector collected a sufficient amount in addition to install two modern baths. Tubs have been the only bathing places of the villagers, and they were "conservative," as the rector explained, about using the new tubs. He, however, has hopes of inducing some of the leaders to encourage their children to take a bath at the schoolhouse and thus start the fashion.

The War at Close Range Described in a Remarkable Series by an Officer of the Marines

Capt. JOHN W. THOMASON, Jr.

(Illustrated by Author from Sketches Made on the Battlefield)

(© by the Bell Syndicate, Inc.)

STORY FROM THE START

The author describes how the First battalion of the Fifth marines are quartered near Marigny during the first part of June, 1918, when they are suddenly sent up north to relieve the First division, bearing the brunt of the German offensive. Part of the Fifth wrest Hill 142 from the enemy and wait there for the German counter offensive they can see forming. A terrific German attack soon develops, wreaking fearful havoc among the marines, but not dislodging them. On the sixth of June the Fifth runs into bitter fighting in the vicinity of Champillon and drives out the Boche, but at great cost. Then came the Bois de Belleau and again the marines acquitted themselves marvelously. Replacements arrive to cover the heavy losses. The marines are relieved, but the respite is short-lived, as they are soon ordered to the Soissons sector, where a great German offensive is under way. On July 18, after a heavy barrage, the Americans, Senegalese and French foreign legion go forward. All enemy positions are taken, though at fearful cost, and the First battalion of the Fifth marines are withdrawn for rest and replacements.

"So this, Slover, is the Champagne," said the second-in-command to one of his non-coms who stood beside him. The sergeant spat. "It looks like hell, sir!" he said.

The lieutenant strolled over to where a French staff officer stood with a knot of officers in the edge of the pines, pointing out features of this extended field, made memorable by bitter fighting.

"Since 1914 we have fought hard here," he was saying. "Oh, the French know this Champagne well, and the Boche knows it too. Yonder"—he pointed to the southwest—"is the Butte de Souain, where our Foreign Legion met in the first year that Guard division that the Prussians call the 'Cockchafers'. They took the Butte, but most of the Legion are lying there now. And yonder"—the Frenchman extended his arm with a gesture that had something of the salute in it—"stands the mountain of Rheims. If you look—the air is clearing a little—you can perhaps see the towers of Rheims itself."

A long grayish hill lay against the gray sky at the horizon, and over it a good glass showed, very far and faint, the spires of the great cathedral, with a cloud of shell-fire hanging over them.

"All this terrain, as far as Rheims, is dominated by Blanc Mont ridge yonder to the north. As long as the Boche holds Blanc Mont, he can throw his shells into Rheims; he can dominate the whole Champagne sector, as far as the Marne. Indeed, they say that the kaiser watched from Blanc Mont the battle that he launched here in July. And the Boche means to hang on there. So far, we have failed to dislodge them. I expect"—he broke off and smiled gravely on the circle of officers—"you will see some very hard fighting in the next few days, gentlemen!"

The second-in-command and the captain, that afternoon, were huddled under a small sheet of corrugated iron, stolen by an enterprising orderly from the French gunners. The captain was very large, and the other very lean, and they were both about the same length. They fitted under the sheet by a sort of dovetailing process that made it complicated for either to move.

A second-in-command is sort of an understudy to the company commander. In some of the outfits the captain does everything, and his understudy can only mope around and wait for his senior to become a casualty. In others, it is the junior who gets things done, and the captain is just a figurehead. In the Forty-ninth, however, the relation was at its happiest. The big captain and his lieutenant functioned together as smoothly as parts of a sweet-running engine, and there was between them the undemonstrative affection of men who have faced much peril together.

"As for me," remarked the captain, drawing up one soaked knee and putting the other out in the wet, "I want to get wounded in this fight. A bon blighty, in the arm or the leg, I think. Something that will keep me in a nice dry hospital until spring. I don't like cold weather. Now who is pushin'? It's nothin' to me, John, if your side leaks—keep off o' mine!"

So the last day of September, 1918, passed, with the racket up forward unabated. So much of war is just lying around waiting in more or less discomfort. And herein lies the excellence of veterans. They swear and growl horribly under discomfort and exposure—far more than green troops; but privations do not sap their spirit or undermine that intangible thing called morale. Rather do sufferings nourish in the men a cold, mounting anger, that swells to sullen ardor when at last the infantry comes to gripe with the enemy, and then it goes hard indeed with him who stands in the way.

On the front, a few kilometers from where the battalion lay and listened to the guns, Gouraud's attack was coming to a head around the heights north of Somme-Py and the strong trench systems that guarded the way to Blanc Mont ridge. Three magnificent French divisions, one of chasseurs, a colonial division, and a line division with a Verdun history, shattered themselves in fruitless attacks on the Essen trench and the Essen hook, a switch line of that system. Beyond the Essen line the Blanc Mont position loomed impregnable. Late on the 1st of October, a gray, bleak day, the battalion got its battle orders, and took over a mangled front line from certain weary Frenchmen.

Gathering the platoon leaders and non-coms around them, the captain and the second-in-command of the Forty-ninth company spread a large map on the ground, weighting its corners with their pistols.

"You give the dope, John," ordered the captain, who was not a man of words, and his junior spoke somewhat in this manner.

"Here, you birds, look at this map. The Frogs have driven the Boche a kilometer and a half north of Somme-Py. You see it here—the town you watched them shell this morning. They have gotten into the Prussian trench—this blue line with the wire in front of it. It's just a fire trench, mostly shell-holes linked up. Behind it, quite close, is the Essen trench, which is evidently a humdinger! Concrete pill-boxes and deep dugouts and all that sort of thing—regular fort.

"The Frogs say it can't be taken from the front—they've tried. We're goin' to take it. On the other side of that is the Elbe trench and a little to the left the Essen hook, and in the center the Bois de Vipre—same kind o' stuff, they say. We're to take them. You see them all on the map. . . . Next, away up in this corner of the map, is the Blanc Mont place. Whoever is left when we get that far will take that, too. . . . Questions? . . . Yes, Tom, we ought to get to use those sawed-off shotguns they gave us at St. Mihiel—though when we get past the Essen system, we'll be in the open, mostly. . . . The old Deuxieme division is goin' in tonight—it's goin' to be some party! Move out of here as soon as it's dark. That's all."

The road here was screened on the side toward the enemy by coarse mats of camouflage material erected on tall poles. Through this screen the German flares, ceaselessly ascending, shone with cold, greenish whiteness, so that men saw their comrades' faces weirdly drawn and pale under their helmets. The flies talked as they went—

"I've seen the time I'd have called those things pretty—but now—reckon hell's lit with the same kind of glims!" . . . "Remember the flare that went up in our faces the night we made the relief in Bellew woods? Seemed to me like everybody in the world was lookin' at me." "Bois de Belleau! mighty few in the battalion now that remember them days, sonny. . . ."

The road passed into desolation and wound north, kilometer after kilometer. Presently the camouflage ended and the battalion felt exceedingly naked without its shelter. Then a slope to the left screened the way, the crest of it sharply outlined as the flares ascended. Beyond that crest the machine-guns sounded very near; now and again the air was filled with the whispering rush of their bullets, passing high toward some chance target in the rear.

"Those Sawed-Off Shotguns They Gave Us at St. Mihiel."

The upper air was populous with shells passing, and the sky flickered with gun-flashes, but the road along which the battalion went enjoyed for the time an uneasy immunity. The rests were all too short; the sweating files swore at their heavy packs; the going was very hard. Presently the road ceased to be a road—merely a broken way across an interminable waste of shell-holes, made passable after a fashion by the hasty work of French engineers, toiling behind the assault of the infantry.

The files plodded on each side of the tumbled track, and as they neared Somme-Py a pitiful stream of traffic grew and passed between them, the tide of French wounded ebbing to the rear. They were the debris of the attacks that had spent themselves through the day—walking wounded, drifting back like shadows in stained blue uniforms—men who staggered and leaned against each other and spoke in low, racked voices to the passing files; and broken men who were borne in stretchers, moaning—"Ah, Jesu!" . . . "Doucement, doucement!! . . ." Farther back the ambulances would be waiting for them.

The column went quickly through the town of Somme-Py, into which shells were falling, stumbling over the debris of ruined walls and houses. There was a very busy French dressing station there, under the relic of a church. It was too dark to see, but each man caught the sound and the smell of it. They cleared the town and went on to a crossroads. French guides were to have met the battalion there, for the line was just ahead, but the guides were late. There was a nerve-racking halt. The next battalion in column closed up; a machine-gun outfit, with its solemn, blase mules, jammed into the rifle companies.

The Forty-ninth was the leading company, just behind the Battalion Headquarters group, and the second-in-command went up to where the major and his satellites were halted.

"Crossroads are always a dam' bad business, Coxy," the major was observing to his adjutant. "Just askin' for it here—no tellin' how late our Frog friends will be—get the men moved into that ditch off the road yonder—Ah! thought so!"

A high, swift whine that grew to a shrieking roar, and a five-inch shell crashed down some fifty yards to the right of the crowded road. Everybody except the mules were flat on the ground before it landed, but wicked splinters of steel sung across the road, and a machine-gunner, squatting by his cart, collapsed and rolled toward the edge of the road, swearing and clutching at his thigh.

CHAPTER VII

Furious Fighting by the Essen Hook.

The men moved swiftly and without disorder, to the ditch, which was a deep communication trench paralleling the road. Another shell came as they moved, falling to the left, and then another, closer, this time between the road and the trench. A mule or two reared and plunged, stricken; a marine whose head had been unduly high slumped silently down the side of the trench with most of his head gone.

More shells came, landing along the road, between the road and the trench, and one or two of them in the trench itself. Cries and groans came from the head of the column; stretcher bearers hurried in that direction; the battalion lay close and waited. Then the shelling stopped. Up forward the major drew a long breath. "Just harassin' fire on these crossroads. I was afraid we were spotted. Now, those guides—" A little group of Frenchmen arrived panting at the head of the column and the men were quickly on the move again. "If Brother Boche had kept flingin' them seabags around here, he'd a-hurt somebody. Where do we go from here?"

Said the major, coming to the head of the Forty-ninth with a French guide—"Francis, we're takin' the regimental front—division's putting four battalions in the line. The Sixth will be on our left; infantry brigade on the right. Let me know how your sector looks—my P. O. will be—I'd better send a runner with you. Here's your guide."

The company moved off, and the other companies, going into position in the battered Prussian trench, facing the formidable Essen work. The French riflemen they found there were hanging on in the very teeth of the enemy. Their position had been hastily constructed a few days before by the hard-pressed Boche and was a mere selection from the abundant shell craters, connected by shallow digging. The marines stumbled and slipped through its windings. It was cluttered up with dead men, for it had been strongly held and dearly won. The Forty-ninth took over the part allotted to it from some ten platoons of Frenchmen, eight or ten men to a platoon, in command of a first lieutenant. It was what was left of a full battalion.

Rushing Waters Meet in Giant Whirlpool

Just before the junction of the Madre de Dois and the Inambari rivers in Peru the latter divides into two arms, with an island some two miles long between. The right arm, which is usually the safer for navigation, is at times impassable, owing to excessive drought that causes the formation of perilous rapids. Travelers must in consequence take the wide left arm, down which the main volume of the river then flows.

An enormous force of water is shot into the Madre de Dios; the Inambari at its left-arm junction is 800 yards wide, perhaps 30 feet in depth, and flows at six knots an hour. This great mass of water meets the Madre de Dios, itself 400 yards wide here, at a right angle. The current of the Inambari, being faster than the Madre de Dios, the former river cuts right across to the farther bank. There the Inambari is thrown back and surges round in a huge circle 200 yards in diameter, to join up again with the water flowing to the bank. The whirlpool thus formed is probably one of the largest in the world. The circles of seething water curl inward and downward, screw-fashion, to their center, which appears as a great hole, at least six feet being below the level of the outer rim.

Edible Oil Supply

Although the potential production of edible oils throughout the world for 1925 was apparently larger than in the preceding year, there are indications that a balance may be struck between increases in world cottonseed-oil production and a decrease in other edible oils, including that from sunflower seed. There was a heavier world consumption of these products during the last year. Prices, however, declined.

"Beware, my son, beware!"

"Stay away from Peterman's! It has killed your whole family!"

"DON'T walk through it. Don't smell it. Don't touch it. Go hungry for days first."

She's right. Peterman's Roach Food exterminates every roach in your house. Nothing is left but a little dry dust.

Some housewives make the mistake of fighting cockroaches with a spray. Those are the houses roaches stay in. They live down behind baseboards, under the floors. No spray can possibly reach them, or their young, or their eggs.

Only a powder can exterminate them. Peterman's Roach Food is the right powder. Just one roach gets a little powder on his legs. Back to his nest he goes. He crawls over the others and eggs. Every roach he touches dies and disintegrates.

Here is the right insecticide for each insect:

PETERMAN'S ROACH FOOD exterminates cockroaches.
PETERMAN'S ANT FOOD exterminates ants.
FLYOSAN kills flies and mosquitoes.
PETERMAN'S DISCOVERY exterminates bedbugs.
PETERMAN'S MOTH FOOD protects against moths.

You must have a specific insecticide for each insect. No single insecticide will exterminate them all. We know that is true. We have had nearly 50 years' experience.

Peterman's has the right insecticide for each insect. On sale wherever drugs are sold.

Bees Saved a Missionary

While Cantonese soldiers were looting the home of Doctor Macklin, American missionary, they found behind the house a number of mysterious white boxes which they believed contained valuables. They broke them open with butts of their rifles. The boxes were beehives, and their signal was "repel invaders." There was a rapid and disorderly retreat, the Cantonese army's first real defeat.—Capper's Weekly.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

"Purges" and "Physics" Bad for Old Folks

While Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, knew that constipation was the curse of advancing age, he did not believe that a "purge" or "physic" every little while was necessary.

To him, it seemed cruel that so many constipated old people had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to "regulate" the bowels of old folks. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but each dose helps to strengthen the bowel muscles, shortly establishing natural "regularity." It never gripes, sickens, or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take.

If past fifty, buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself.

Peace with Preparedness, is Only Solution Seen by Brigadier Gen.

One of a series of Articles written by Indiana Citizens, Soldiers and Men of Letters for the American Legion, Department of Ind.

DWIGHT E. AULTMAN
Brigadier General, U. S. Army

More than eight years ago the war that was to end all wars came to a close, and today we regard the outcome as a question fully debatable as the peace that has followed any other war. From it were evolved the League of Nations and the World Court, regarding which the American people has been divided to the point of rejection on the ground that they do not conform to our traditional policies and our ideals.

It is not the purpose here to discuss or debate either question, the final decision of which resides in the people, acting through the President and the Congress.

However, in the universal search for a panacea that will bring lasting peace to all the widely discussed, and bring in their train a number of questions that fully as vitally concern this nation. The principal one of these is the question of peace through disarmament, the advocates of which are striving to convince the American people that, should they set the example, all other nations would desist from military and naval preparations, would lay down their arms, and that universal peace would immediately ensue as a consequence. ,

This nation has never been militaristic, its ideals have been peaceful, to the point of failure to prepare itself for war, even though the facts of history prove that we have paid a heavy price in precious lives and in treasure for that neglect in every conflict in which we have engaged.

The imputation of militarism upon those who advocate adequate military preparedness is so absurd that no citizen endowed with common sense can give it credence. A militarist is one who would launch his country into a policy of aggression by force, would prepare, would seek and find causes for war, and urge the nation into armed conflict. In other words, one who loves war for war's sake, a promoter of battle and bloodshed.

Very naturally the advocacy of any doctrine or policy that would tend to involve our country in war is regarded as almost treason by the truly patriotic and right-minded citizen and the jingo held as a traitor or a lunatic. In the common sense of the American people there is room for neither militarism nor militarists.

However, in our quest for universal peace, can we attain it through agreement or through voluntary disarmament?

First, can we rely upon treaties or international agreements to keep us out of war? History has answered that question so often in the past that is seems hardly necessary to reiterate that every modern war has commenced either as the result of the breach of a treaty or other solemn agreement, or of intolerable oppression or violation of the basic rights of humanity. Is there a special guarantee anywhere that, in the future, treaties or agreements will be held more sacred than in the past that the "scrap of paper" period has gone by forever.

As to disarmament, only a short time ago a well known advocate of peace delivered an address in the city of Indianapolis in favor of the League of Nations and the World Court, not here discussed. In the course of the address the speaker painted a word picture of the present situation throughout the world, of which the following are quotations from the press reports: (Indianapolis Star, October 19, 1926.)

"He described Russia as a great storm cloud hovering over Europe. 'Nobody knows what will come out of Russia ten years from now,' he declared. 'And we are not the friends of Japan that we used to be. Congress slapped the Japanese in the face with the Japanese exclusion act. The Japanese want equal treatment and the time is gone when it is safe to have race discrimination.'

'With no League of Nations, the chain of powder is complete, he said, and a route of war from some small, remote village in Europe could spread again like wildfire to involve the United States in war.'

'It means,' he said, 'that in ten or fifteen years, or whenever it comes, the next war will be one in which no nation can win; the next war will be the end of civilization and the white races will wipe one another.'

'Money causes war and concessions, economic concessions. To those who urge against entanglements with foreign nations, I want to say that we are already entingled with them in financial matters up to our eyes. America will be the deciding factor whether or not there will be another war. Don't let your prejudices influence you and don't let politics get into this thing again.

A study of international conditions will corroborate the statements of this speaker in that the seeds of war exist and that no one can predict when the conflict will commence. The suggestion that it may be prevented by the League of Nations, or by our joining the League, may or may not be true—it is a matter of opinion on which the American people is not agreed.

In either case, it it the part of wisdom or common sense for the United States to abandon its policy of National Defense at such a time, to render ourselves defenseless in the face of impending war?

The present policy of National Defense is the result of the lessons learned by the American people in the World War. We entered that war totally unprepared. In a titantic struggle that involved millions of men it was six months before the first American division was fit to enter the battle line for its preliminary training in actual warfare; nine months before it took its place as a combat division; a year before American troops became a factor in the march to victory. We had the men, but the time was needed for organization and training. Were we forced into another war, would we have that time granted us to prepare?

With all our immense industries we were vitally unprepared to furnish guns and ammunition to our soldiers even until the end of the war. Our plants had to be reorganized and remodeled for the manufacture of munitions, and the time here needed was longer than that required to train our soldiers.

Our doughboys wore British helmets and carried British rifles; our Artillery fired French shells from French seventy-fives and hundred and fifty-fives; our aviators flew in French or British airplanes. Not until the war was nearly over did the munitions of America commence to arrive upon the battlefield.

When even those who are not in sympathy with our policy of National Defense can forsee the possibility and even probability of war, shall we be lulled to sleep in present peace and some day awaken to once more send our boys forth to defend the nation, unprepared even to protect themselves?

Or shall we profit by the lesson we learned eight years ago and support the National Defense?

Our National Defense of today is organized in conformity to our American institutions — not a great militaristic weapon of war—but an army of the people, the citizen army upon which a democracy must ever rely for its protection.

The regular army is small, merely a professional nucleus to supply the instructors and training force for the rest. Next in line is the National Guard, citizen soldiers in the service of the States, prepared to be called into the Federal service in time of war. And behind the National Guard stands the Organized Reserve, composed mainly of officers who are being prepared in time of peace for their great duty of training and leading the National Army when the emergency of war is upon us.

To prepare our youth for their duties in the defense of our country military training has been established in our schools and colleges and we hold annually Citizens Military Training Camps throughout the land. The moral, mental and physical benefits of this training are almost universally acknowledged, while its value to the National Defense is inestimable.

War is horrible, devastating and wasteful, even more to him who has endured it than to him who has not. If it were possible to prevent it by peaceful means, let it be done. Perhaps the future may indicate the means.

Meanwhile, until our security is guaranteed, our liberties and ideals permanently established, we shall be traitors to our country and its flag, together with all they stand for, if we fail to provide for their protection.

MONEY THAT WORKS

A MAN visited our bank a few weeks ago who had just sold some property.

HE WAS not ready to invest the money again for a few months but he did not want the money to 'loaf' and earn nothing for him during that time.

SO HE wanted to know what he could do with the money to make it earn some profit and be available in case he needed it.

OF COURSE we suggested a Certificate of Deposit. You can have a "C. of D.," for any amount and continue it as long as you wish. It pays a nice profit, too.

THERE IS no better plan for your money that is not otherwise employed. Let us tell you more about this plan.

Probably in either case you would get the worst of it. But suppose it happens to be a real "hold-up" man. He doesn't shoot from the hip. He sticks his gun right in your face and orders: "Hands up." WIRE YOUR PLOW TO BATTLE BORER

A few cents worth of No. 9 wire, properly attached to a plow as in this picture, is helping to rout the European corn borer. Throughout the infested area this spring farmers are using wires like this, each 10 or 13 feet long, to put the stalks and refuse in the bottom of the furrow.

SCHOOL ACTIVITIES COME TO A CLOSE

JUNIORS ENTERTAIN SENIORS INFORMALLY

One of the gayest social events of thespring season in St. Joe was that of the Junior-Senior Banquet held in the Community Assembly last Friday night. The guests assembled at 6:45 and were met informally at the door by the Junior Reception Committee, composed of two boys, Goebel Goodwin aad Donald Davidson, who escorted them to the banquet hall, the latter of which was suggestive in the Senior colors, green and white, being decorated in long twisted garlands of green and white crepe paper and boughs of greenery.

Covers were laid for twenty-seven guests at a table arranged in the shape of a horse shoe and decorated with garlands of myrtle, bouquets of spring flowers and lighted tapers. The guests found their places by the means of clever little hand painted place cards. Favors of white roses were given to the Seniors, the former being their class flower. Mr. White acted as toastmaster. George Simanton as president of the Juniors welcomed the guests and Martha Miser, president of the Seniors, responded. Thelma Curie gave her recipe for "Scholastic Hash" in a toast by that name and Marguerite Milliman spoke at length on "Squirrel Food." Dorothy Ginther talked about "High School Hum Drum" at the end of which she recited a little poem quite appropriate to the occasion. The following menu was served after which an informal time was had at playing games and contests:

First Courst: Chichen in pattie, buttered peas, mashed potatoes, high school special salad. pickles, hot rolls, butter, coffee.

Second Course: Neapolitan ice cream, Angel food cake, mints and salted nuts.

The guests included the Seniors, the teachers with their wives and husbands, Mr. and Mrs. O. K. Shull and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Curie.

ALUMNI BANQUET

A splendid program was given by the members of the organization Saturday evening in the Auditorium previous to the banquet, which all greatly enjoyed, after which the banquet proper was spread in the assembly room to eighty-six guests.

Lee O. Tustison, '00, acted as toastmaster. Twenty-four years ago, the speaker said, he acted as toastmaster at the first banquet of the school in the opera house. He recalled a number of interesting things of those days, taking place in the old building and then introduced Marguerite Milliman, who responded with "Class of '27" toast, giving the chief characteristics of each student and then recalling that the class of '21 was entirely of girls and now they were all married, and she supposed this would soon be the fate of the '27 class. In the completion of the course of study it has been the idea of the teachers to broaden their views and to create higher ideals.

The first course consisted of Fruit cocktail and wafers.

Merritt Sechler, '03 responded to "Spinsters," Clayton Wyatt, '23 to "Bill" and Miss Harlett Wasson, '27 to "We Are Seven." All of which were pleasing to the audience and showed a strain of originality.

The second course consisted of Meat loaf, scalloped potatoes, hot rolls, salad, creamed peas, celery and pickles.

Stanley Means toasted "Friendships," recalling those formed in the school days and then having the pleasure of meeting at the banquet. R. L. Case, Principal, of the school gave a spicy little talk showing how they were all meeting on one common ground and that they are helping to build up traditions of the school and that they are all to be cherished.

Mrs. Flossie Mavis, a former primary teacher of 1914, stated that there were then eleven boys and five girls in the primary class and five girrs in the primary class and of the number graduating two were in the class this year. In her closing remarks she stated that their manner of success will be measured by service rendered to the community.

The last course consisted of brick ice cream, cake and coffee.

Robert Ulm, of Butler, was introduced as the last speaker on the program. He said: "There are only eleven original stories in the world, so you see how foolish it would be for me to try and entertain you with jokes, so I will take a more serious atitude."

His remarks were builded around the word "Idea." The first letter "I" stands for ideals, as something we strive for, or worthy of effort and as we approach

BIBLE SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT HELD

Last Sunday the people of St. Joe and surrounding community had the privilege of attending the commencement of our first Daily Vacation Bible School at this place. The children, teachers and helpers met at Community hall, formed into line, headed by three little girls who carried the Christian and National flags and Bible, marched into the hall where a good sized crowd had gathered, a great many of them being the parents of the children enrolled in the school. After saluting the flags and bible the children went through the regular morning exercise which is called the worship period. Mrs. C. R. Price told the children the story of Moses. Thursday morning and continued it Sunday afternoon and held the attention of the children as well as the adults for nearly one half hour.

Eighteen little kindergarteners then entertained the audience with a song, saying grace before eating and good night prayer.

The primary division then went up on the stage and pleased the audience with some of the work they had accomplished during the last three weeks, beginning at the foundation of the bible, naming all the books, divisions and many memory verses, songs and class yell.

Next came the Junior girls and they proved to the audience that they too had begun right by their songs, memory verses and bible references. Last came the Junior boys with their sword drill, they amused the audience very much, some finding the bible reference and reading it in three seconds. They also gave their class song.

Mrs. Nicholson, the pricipal of theschool, then presented each pupil who had attended the school the required number of days a beautiful certificate.

Mrs. Nora McDonald, of Corunna, County Superintendent of Educational Division, was present and gave a very encouraging talk complimenting our children and workers on the success of our school.

F. B. Leighty, County Sunday School president, also gave a short talk, closing his remarks by asking how many wanted a school another year and almost instantly enough hands went up that we have the assurance of a permanent Daily Vacation Bible School at this place, which has been the aim of the workers from the beginning and if our community keeps pace with the progress of the time we will all want a school of this kind.

The display of hand work of each department was fine and Mrs. Chas. Koch has been requested to take charge of this and have this on display at our next county Sunday School Convention.

Our teachers and helpers have worked in harmony and we are sure if each one had the privilege of expressing themselves they would all say they have enjoyed the work and that they feel fully repaid for the time spent with the little folks.

As we go to press the chairman, Mrs. Chas. Koch, tells us that for various reasons she cannot give a correct statement of the finances, but will do so in the next issue of The News.

MEMORIAL DAY OBSERVANCES AT ST. JOE

Anniversaries, holidays and special occasions come and go. Time brings changes in customs, but through it all memory serves us well, and we keep forever green the graves of those to whom the nation has dedicated the thirtieth of each May.

Events of vast importance have crowded history's pages within the life of the present generation. Yet nothing has effaced our knowledge of a debt that never can be paid, the debt we owe those who wore both the Blue and the Gray. For it required both of them to bring about a better understanding of the fact that a nation divided against itself cannot stand. It required the supreme effort of both to cement us into a far more solid nation than we could have hoped to had until we profited by our own misunderstandings.

And now St. Joe comes again to join with other communities of a reunited country to pay tribute to those who through suffering and hardship kept us one people, and with one purpose—the welfare of all. Memorial Day brings no harsh contention as to the right or wrong side of sectional and political arguments long ago settled. It finds in our hearts nothing but an abiding love for the men who fought for what each felt was the best interest of his country. Men who were big enough and brave enough to clasp hands across the battle lines when the smoke had cleared away in pledging themselves in a united cause. They left us a heritage we cannot lose sight of, and it is in partial payment that we come again to lay our flowers on the graves of those who have passed on and to bow our heads in deep respect to those who are yet with us. May the spirit of those who cemented an everlasting union of states hover over us; may it keep forever in our memories a tender regard for those whose sacrifice brought Memorial Day.

As has been the custom of St. Joe, to make Memorial Day a big day, a time when all work ceases and everyone comes out to help in the observance of this most important event of our nation. The entire day will be set aside, beginning at 8:30 when all the cars available will be assembled down town to assist in conveying the band, soldiers and citizens to the outlying cemeteries.

The itinery of the delegation headed by Wm. Curie, local chairman and the Old Veterans of the community, is, leave St. Joe, 8:30 for Bear Creek, thence to Moore's at 9:30; Jenkins at 10:30; thence to Coburntown church where services will be held and then to Alton cemetery and home. Rev. J. F. McKnight will accompany chairman Curie in the first car and participate in the program at each place. All graves of veterans will be decorated.

The afternoon program begins with a band concert on the street at 1:30, then march to Community Auditorium, where services begin at 2:00 o'clock, with C. A. Woodcox in charge of the music. Rev. J. F. McKnight will have charge of the devotional period and Captain Henry C. Springer will deliver the address.

All children will be asked to participate in the parade from the hall and line of march will be in charge of Grover Curie.

The lodges will participate in a body and will decorate as is their custom.

A special request is made that every residence and business house be decorated, and that graves be put in their usual splendid condition.

Newville services will be held at 2 o'clock and Spencerville will hold its services at the same hour at the cemetery, and Rev. Roy S. Brown will deliver the address. Mrs. Hazel Steward is the chairman.

GOOD JUDGMENT

"You have saved my life," said the man to the youthful hero who had rescued him from drowning. "As a reward you shall marry my daughter."

The young man glanced at the daughter. Then he threw the man back into the river again.

The Misses Hilda Koch and Verba Haner, of South Bend, were home for the Alumni banquet last Saturay evening.

DEMONSTRATION OF PREPARING AND COOKING FOODS

Next Friday, May 27, the Ladies Home Bureau will meet in the Domestic Science room at the school house for an all day meeting. The committee consisting of Mrs. Huldah Reasoner, Mrs. Clara Foltz, Mrs. Tena Engle, Mrs. Mable Baker and Mrs. Lizzie Milliman will be assisted at the noon hour by Mrs. Mary Krise, project leader and Mrs. Pluma Hamilton, substitute leader in serving a balanced dinner as outlined by Purdue Extension Bureau.

With the exception of changing the meeting to an all day meeting the program will be carried out as printed in the programs. The ladies are asked to be at the school house by 10:00 o'clock A. M., so they may see the preparation of the food and method of cooking.

A number of our citizens attended the John Robison circus at Auburn, Tuesday.

Warsaw suffered $25,000 property damages by wind Monday at about 1: 30, besides a number of people being injured. Fort Wayne had a slight damage also.

Master Charles Thornton is in Chicago spening the week with Mr. an Mrs. G. M. Richter. Mrs. Thornton accompanied him Sunday returning Monday evening.

The Doughboys Who Never Came Home: American Cemetery at Suresnes, Outside Paris, Where 1,497 Soldiers of the A. E. F. Lie Buried. Always Decorated on Memorial Day.

Fields of Honor in Fair France

Crosses Row on Row Mark Graves of Our Boys in Honored Rest.

Ten years after the declaration of war by the United States against Germany in the year 1917 there remain in Europe few traces of the American Expeditionary forces which proved the deciding factors in the conflict.

For the most part, the battlefields have grown up with weeds, or have been restored to cultivation by the plow. The hotels, the barracks, the hospitals we used have been returned long since to peace time duty. A few unofficial monuments mark certain battle scenes, but the official battle monuments are yet in the preliminary stages. The American Legionnaires who return to Europe for their convention at Paris next September will miss a great many sights which were familiar in 1917 and 1918.

But there are eight permanent, plain and prominent mementoes of the Legionnaires of ten years ago—the eight American military cemeteries overseas.

These cemeteries, the final resting places of more than 30,000 of those who followed Pershing overseas, are now handsome, well-kept, solemn fields of honor. At dawn the flag is raised over each of them. Each sunset it is lowered. In each the crosses stand in steady rows, white against a background of green sod, and a first budding of young trees, gives promise of greater beauty as the years roll by. Here are the lasting records of the A. E. F.

Six Mark Battlefields.

Six of the American cemeteries are on the battlefields, on ground taken from the enemy by the power of American arms, on ground restored to France and to Belgium by our delivering sword. The other two are near the great cities of London and Paris. Here is the list of them and the number of those who lie therein:

Official Name	Location Near	Number Graves
Flanders field	Waereghem, Belgium	365
Somme cemetery	Bony, France	1,426
Meuse-Argonne cemetery	Romagne-sous-Montfaucon	14,187
St. Mihiel cemetery	Thiaucourt	4,141
Oise-Aisne cemetery	Fere-en-Tardenois	5,946
Aisne-Marne cemetery	Belleau	2,312
Brookwood cemetery	London, Eng.	427
Suresnes cemetery	Paris, France	1,508

More than half of our soldier dead overseas were brought home to the States for burial.

Of the dead not brought back to America, those which were in 1919 already resting at Suresnes or Brookwood, or at the sites selected for the battlefield cemeteries, remained undisturbed. The others, from scattering, temporary battlefield cemeteries, were reverently moved to their permanent resting places. This task, carefully and thoroughly performed by the graves registration service of the army, resulted in an almost complete identification of our soldier dead.

Monument Problem.

The cemeteries remain in charge of the graves registration service, which maintains rest houses at each, has caretakers in charge, keeps complete records for the use of visitors and maintains the grounds, landscape gardening and improvements. Further beautifying of the cemeteries has been placed in charge of the American Battle Monuments commission, a body created by congress to take charge of the whole plan and problem of American memorials in Europe.

This monument question is no simple one, as anyone who ever visited the battlefield at Gettysburg, Pa., will bear witness. States, cities, divisions, brigades, companies, and private citizens, not to mention memorial associations and societies, are already vying for the privilege of placing a monument at this point, a memorial at that. The government commission must decide where there shall be monuments and who shall raise them. In a similar way the cemeteries have offered a problem. Should individuals be allowed to place special headstones or monuments for their loved ones? Shall churches or societies be allowed to erect chapels at the cemeteries? And so forth.

The chairman of the Battle Monuments commission is Gen. John J. Pershing. Its membership, appointed by President Coolidge and serving without salary, includes Robert G. Woodside, of Pittsburgh, vice chairman; Senator David A. Reed, of Pennsylvania; Representative John Philip Hill; Representative Finis J. Garrett; Col. D. John Markey of Maryland, and Mrs. Frederic W. Bentley. Maj. X. H. Price, a regular army officer on duty at Washington, is secretary.

After careful studies, this commission outlined a complete plan for official battle monuments in the zones occupied by American forces in offensive operations, and a corresponding plan for the improvement of American cemeteries.

The most expensive phase of the cemetery work to be done is the erection of chapels. These will be suitable for sacred purposes, but nonsectarian. The larger ones will probably have a room that will be something of a museum of battle relics, as well as the chapel room. Another matter now well in hand is completing masonry walls around the cemeteries, a work only delayed in places while waiting for the determination of definite plans for the chapels, as these in many cemeteries will have an effect on the location of the walls.

How Graves Are Marked.

In so far as personal monuments in the cemeteries are concerned, the commission adopted an iron-clad, final rule that there will be no especial personal monuments. Over each grave will be a headstone, and there will be the same for officers and privates, rich and poor, young and old. The name, rank, organization and home state will be engraved on each stone. And they will lie side by side, as they fell, equal in glory and sacrifice.

The plans for battle monuments are another and even larger task of the commission. They are well under way, and form a project which should be completed in about two years.

The first of the American cemeteries to be so designated, and to receive American dead, was that hillside tract on Mont Valerian, overlooking Paris and the Seine valley, and called Suresnes. Everyone from America goes to Suresnes, both in tribute to our honored dead, and because there is no finer view of the city of Paris from any nearby hilltops. Suresnes is three miles from the city limits, on the right of the Seine below the city. The cemetery stands well up on the highest of several hills, and from its gates the panorama is uninterrupted for many miles.

At Suresnes are buried many who died in Paris hospitals from wounds sustained in battle, and others who fell victims of disease and accidents. It is most complete of all the American cemeteries in France, in so far as time has completed it by growing the trees larger, the shrubbery thicker and finer. Suresnes already belongs to the ages, a fit resting place for heroes, far up above the towers of Notre Dame and the Arc de Triomph, commanding forever what is perhaps the loveliest of the famous valleys of the world.

Ours to Keep the Faith

Memorial day is best celebrated by that deep appreciation of the loyalty devotion and heroism which made this a united nation and which should impress us with our own responsibility for keeping it united for generations that are to follow us.—Grit.

OUR BOYS IN FRANCE

After the grewsome sound has died
Of the last shrieking shell,
We pause and ponder, dewy-eyed,
Over the ones who fell.

They sleep. The world goes marching on
The world must halt today
Thinking of these but lately gone
Resting so far away.

Solemn yet grand the hero's fate
Soft let the requiem be
Whilst tender fingers decorate
Those graves across the sea.

—Louisville Courier-Journal.

CANNED CHERRIES FOR WINTER PIES

Surplus Fruit Easily Put Away for Future Use.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The cherry season is short. As a rule, the family cannot use all the fresh cherries from even a single tree, so it becomes necessary, if one would have the benefit of the entire crop, to can the surplus for later use. This is not at all difficult, particularly if you arm yourself before beginning any canning, with a copy of Farmers' Bulletin 1471-F, "Canning Fruits and Vegetables at Home," obtainable for the asking from the United States Department of Agriculture.

Pack the cherries into hot jars, and cover them with boiling sirup. Use thick sirup for sour cherries—that is, one part sugar to one part water—and a medium sirup for sweet cherries—one part sugar to two parts water. Process pint and quart jars for 25 minutes in a hot-water bath, counting the time from the moment the surrounding water is actively boiling. If you use No. 2 or No. 3 tin cans process for 20 minutes.

If you wish cherry pies in winter that have the fresh-fruit taste, can them without sirup to dilute the flavor. Remove the pits from the cherries, add sugar as desired and bring the cherries to the boiling point. Then pack hot in hot jars and process for five minutes. Those packed with the pits will be useful for cherry sauce, cherry beverages and many other good things.

If you plan to make cherry jelly you will need to use pectin, as cherries are one of the fruits somewhat lacking in this ingredient requisite for jellying. Department Circular 254 will tell you not only how to make the jelly with pectin but how to make the pectin also.

Strawberry Fruit Punch Is Ambrosial Beverage

Strawberry fruit punch is an ambrosial beverage to serve at festivities when strawberries are available and all sorts of parties are in the air. The amounts given in the recipe below, which has been tried out by the bureau of home economics, makes about five gallons of punch and should be sufficient to serve between 50 and 75 people liberally. Chill all the ingredients to be used for some time before mixing the punch. Add water that has been iced or crushed ice.

Fruit Punch.

3 dozen lemons	made strong tea
1½ dozen oranges	9 cupfuls sugar
6 quarts strawberries	6 cupfuls water
3 No. 2 cans shredded pineapple	3 quarts apollinaris, or more
3 quarts freshly	½ teaspoonful of salt

Boil the sugar and water together to make a heavy sirup, and chill. Cut the large berries in thirds or halves and crush the remainder. Scrub the oranges and lemons, and after the juice is extracted, cover the skins with water, let them stand for an hour or longer, and then pour off this liquid and add it to the fruit juice. Combine all the ingredients and add chopped ice until thoroughly cold. Just before serving add the apollinaris, and if the punch is too strong add ice water in small quantities until it is the flavor desired. This makes about five gallons of punch.

Variety and Contrast in Flavor of Foods Served

The matter of variety and contrast in the texture and flavor of the foods combined in one meal is not always given sufficient thought. One finds occasionally that everything served is soft and lacking in "chewy" food—as, for example, a combination consisting of a creamed dish, mashed vegetables, and a milk pudding. Each of these foods would probably be excellent alone, but they do not go well together. Again, when a milk flavor predominates throughout a menu, the food lacks zest. Contrast in texture can be secured by serving something crunchy like toast, or browned crumbs on a scalloped dish, something soft, as a white sauce or custard, something crisp and fresh, like lettuce or cole slaw. For variety in flavor some of the foods chosen should be milk or bland, like potatoes or bread; some should have a pronounced flavor, as in the case of rare steak, roast lamb, ham or cheese, or some of the vegetables such as cauliflower, cabbage and onions; there should also be something sour in itself, like tomato or pickles, or like spinach or beets—something that is ordinarily served with vinegar, or a salad with French dressing. Sweet flavor is usually provided in the dessert, or it may be introduced elsewhere in the menu as in candied sweet potatoes, or in the form of jelly with meat.

In addition to these requirements in the foods chosen for a menu, it is necessary, of course, to see that each of the five food groups as given by the United States Department of Agriculture is represented—vegetables and fruits, cereal or starchy foods, efficient-protein foods, fats and sugars. Some thought must be given also to the relative proportions of foods chosen from these groups in order to supply sufficient protein of the right kind, calories, minerals and vitamines. These are sometimes called the "four points of food value."

Drinking Orange Juice for Breakfast Favored

Sometimes the orange that is cut in half and placed on the breakfast table is not eaten because the various members of the family simply do not have time before hurrying off to school or work to dig out the pulp with a spoon. For the same reason, the whole orange, intended to be peeled and eaten in sections is left. The family gets into the habit of dispensing with oranges, which is not a good thing, for oranges are one of the best sources of vitamins we have and may be classed among the extremely important foods for children, the United States Department of Agriculture says.

Why not serve orange juice in glasses or sherbet cups to the members of the family who must hurry off in the morning? The habit of drinking orange juice grows, and the child who will drink it several times a day is the gainer. He may have it at lunch, perhaps, and again when first home from school hungrily looking around for "something to eat," with mother equally anxious that he shall not spoil his appetite for dinner. Orange juice is suitable as a beverage for children's noon lunch and appeals to them because they cannot have the tea or coffee which they see older persons drinking.

CUSTARD WITH FRUIT AND ANGEL FOOD

A Delicious Dish With Fruit and Cake.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Springtime, when eggs are plentiful, is the season to indulge the family with cakes of the sponge-cake group. The ingredients in all of these cakes are similar, since all contain a large proportion of eggs and no butter or other fat. Eggs supply the liquid and inclose air for leavening. Plain sponge cake requires the use of whole eggs. In sunshine cake twice as many whites as yolks are used. Angel food calls for the whites only. As there are always yolks left over when an angel food cake is baked, a good many people use them to make a soft custard to serve on fruit with the cake for dessert. Sliced oranges or bananas or almost any canned fruit may be used.

The bureau of home economics gives the following directions for making both angel food and custard.

Angel Food.

¾ cupful soft-wheat flour	1 cupful egg whites (8 fairly large)
1 to 1¼ cupfuls of sugar	½ teaspoonful of salt
1 teaspoonful flavoring	1 teaspoonful of cream of tartar

Angel food is not mixed in quite the same way as plain sponge cake. The sugar, flour, and half the salt are sifted together several times. The egg whites are beaten with the other half of the salt until they are frothy; then the cream of tartar is added and they are beaten until stiff. The dry ingredients are then folded carefully into the beaten egg whites and when the mixture is partly blended the flavoring is added. Many people like almond or lemon flavoring, others prefer vanilla. Only the folding motion should be used in mixing, for stirring tends to release the air depended on for leavening. A smooth ungreased tube pan is best for baking angel food, and a fairly large cake will require about an hour in an oven at a temperature of 325 degrees F. It may be tested with a clean toothpick, the same way as any other cake. Invert the pan on a cake cooler when it is done and allow it to drop out.

Soft Custard.

1 quart milk	½ teaspoonful of salt
5 or 6 egg yolks	1 teaspoonful of vanilla
½ cupful sugar

Heat the milk, sugar, and salt in a double boiler. Beat the eggs lightly and pour slowly into them some of the heated milk. Pour back into the double boiler and stir constantly until the custard coats the spoon. Remove at once and place the pan in a bowl of cold water, stirring until cool. Add the vanilla. Chill the custard and serve it on fresh or canned fruit.

Bird Has Long Life

How long can a bird live? A new official record for long life among the feathered tribe has been set by a twelve-year-old pintail duck captured near Brawley, Calif., according to Popular Science Monthly. A dated band attached to the bird's leg more than twelve years ago at Bear River, Utah, by a member of the United States biological survey, proves the record authentic.

FIX BAYONETS!

The War at Close Range Described in a Remarkable Series by an Officer of the Marines

Capt. JOHN W. THOMASON, Jr.

(Illustrated by the Author from Sketches Made on the Battlefield)

(©, by the Bell Syndicate, Inc.)

STORY FROM THE START

The author describes how the First battalion of the Fifth marines are quartered near Marigny during the first part of June, 1918, when they are suddenly sent up north to relieve the First division, bearing the brunt of the German offensive. Part of the Fifth wrest Hill 142 from the enemy and wait there for the German counter offensive they can see forming. A terrific German attack soon develops, wreaking fearful havoc among the marines, but not dislodging them. On the sixth of June the Fifth runs into bitter fighting in the vicinity of Champillon and drives out the Boche, but at great cost. Then came the Bois de Belleau and again the marines acquitted themselves marvelously. Replacements arrive to cover the heavy losses. The marines are relieved, but the respite is short-lived, as they are soon ordered to the Soissons sector, where a great German offensive is under way. On July 18, after a heavy barrage, the Americans, Senegalese and French foreign legion go forward. All enemy positions are taken, though at fearful cost, and the First Battalion of the Fifth marines are withdrawn for rest and replacements. After a short rest behind the Champagne front, the marines are again advanced, to assist the French in a terrific drive against the heights of Blanc Mont.

Courteous and sauve, although he swayed on his feet from weariness and his eyelids drooped from loss of sleep, the Frenchman summed up the situation for the marine captain. "We hold this fire trench. In your sector are four communication trenches running to the Essen work, which is about a hundred meters distant. We hold most of the boyau on the extreme right; the others we have barricaded. You cannot take this Essen trench by frontal assault!"—"Why can't we?" growled the American.

"When it is light you will see, Mon Capitaine! You can only get forward by bombing your way in the boyaux. They are too strong in machine-guns, the Boche. Now I take my men and go. Seven days and nights we have been on our feet . . . those of us who are left are very tired—It is well that you be watchful in this place, but do not stir up the Boche yonder. They shoot with minenwerfers when you frighten them. Such a one finished my pauvre capitaine and six men with him. Bon chance, Mon Capitaine. Bon jour!"

"Cheerful bird, wasn't he?" remarked the captain. "Wonder if that thing I stepped on just outside this hole was his captain? John, before it gets good daylight, don't you want to take a look-see at this Essen trench? Take whoever you want and see how the land lies."

The Essen trench had been very active when the companies were being posted; staccato bursts of machine-gun fire had ripped across the intervening dark, and Springfields had answered. There had been some bombing around traverses in the boyaux. But when in the creeping grayness of the dawn, the lieutenant from the Forty-ninth ventured across to it with his orderly and a sergeant; he found the Boche retiring. Filing quickly through the communication trenches, the battalion occupied it without difficulty, and, looking around them, were very glad they hadn't had to take it by storm.

And the captain understood why the French lieutenant had said it couldn't be stormed. The French had tried the evening before to cross the scant distance and get into it. Most of those who had charged lay as the Boche Maxims had cut them down. In one place, between two boyaux that formed with the opposed lines a rough square of perhaps one hundred yards, he counted eighty-three dead Frenchmen. Lying very thick near the lip of their own trench, the bodies formed a sort of wedge, thinning toward the point as they had been decimated, and that point was one great bearded Frenchman, his body all a mass of bloody rags, who lay with his eyes fiercely open to the enemy and his outthrust bayonet almost in the emplacement where the Boche guns had been.

The company, which had learned its own bitter lesson in frontal attacks on machine-guns, gave passing tribute. "Them Frogs, they eat machine-guns up. Fightin' sons o' guns, they are. Wonder if any chow is comin' up today?" They made themselves comfortable among the dead and waited the next move with equanimity.

"Two hundred and thirty-one men, sir," reported the second-in-command, sliding into the shallow dugout where the captain was holed up. "Mighty lucky, so far. I'm goin' to sleep. There's some shellin', especially toward the left, but most of the outfit is pretty well under cover."

Gouraud's battle roared on to the left with swelling tumult. The Americans, in their sector, passed the day in ominous quiet. They wondered what the delay was, speculated on the strategy of attack—which is a matter always sealed from the men who deliver the attack—and wore through to the evening of October 2. At dark, food came up in marmite cans—beef and potatoes and a little coffee. "Put ours on that mess-tin there," directed the second-in-command, as his orderly [illegible] and the captain's re-tions. The captain sat up in his corner a little later, when the attack orders came up.

There was a brief pencilled order from the major, and maps. The two officers bent over them eagerly. "Runner—Platoon commanders report right away—" . . . "What do you make of it, John? Looks like General Lejeune was goin' to split his division and reunite it on the field. . . . Hmmm! Ain't that the stunt you claim only Robert E. Lee and Napoleon could get away with? . . . All here? Get around—the map's about oriented—

"Here we are, in the Essen trench—seems that the marines move down to the left to here—and the Ninth and Twenty-third move to the right—to here. These pencil lines show the direction of attack—then we jump off, angling a little to the right, compass bearing—and the infantry outfits point about as much to the left. That brings us together up here about three kilometers, and we go on straight, a little west of north from there, to Blanc Mont—"

The morning of October 3 (1918) came gray and misty. From midnight until dawn the front had been quiet at that point—comparatively. Then all the French and American guns opened with one world-shaking crash. From the Essen trench the ground fell away gently, then rose in a long slope, along which could be made out the zigzags of the German trenches. The Bois de Vipre was a bluish mangled wood, two kilometers north. Peering from their shelters, the battalion saw all this ground swept by a hurricane of shell-fire.

"Move down the trench to the left," came the order. The battalion moved, filing around the traverses with judicious intervals between men, so that the Boche shells might not include too many in their radius of death. For Heinie was beginning to shoot back. He had the range of his vacated trench perfectly, and, holding the high ground, he could see what he was shooting at. Shells began to crash down among the companies, whole squads were blotted out, and men choked and coughed as the reek of high explosive caught at their windpipes.

"Lordy, ain't we ever goin' to get outa this dam' place an' get at 'em—" A shell with a driving-band loose came with a banshee scream, and men and pieces of men were blown in the air. "That was in the first platoon," said the second-in-command, shaking the dirt off his gas-mask. "Something ought to be done about that gunner, El Capitan!" Another landed in the opposite lip of the trench where the two officers crouched, half-burying them both. "My God, cap'n! You killed?" "Hell, no! Are you?"

"Far enough to the left," the major sent word. "We will wait here. The Sixth leads—we're the last battalion in support today."

Coming from the maze of trenches in the rear, the assault regiment began to pass through the Fifth, battalion following battalion at 500-yard distances. A number of French "Baby" tanks started with the assaulting waves, but it was an evil place for tanks. Tank traps, trenches so wide that the little fellows went nose-down into them and stuck, and direct fire from Boche artillery stopped the most of them.

The battalion was out of the trench now, and going forward regulating its pace on the battalion ahead. All at once there was a snapping and crackling in the air—a corporal spun round and collapsed dimply, while his blouse turned red under his gas mask—the man beside him stumbled and went down, swearing through grayish lips at a shattered knee—the men flattened and all faces turned toward the flank.

"Machine-guns on the left!"—"Hell! It's that Essen hook we've got to pass—thank God, it's long range! Come on, you birds." And the battalion went on, enduring grimly. Finally, when well past its front, which ran diagonally to the line of advance, the Seventeenth company, that had the left, turned savagely on the Essen hook and got a foothold in its rear. A one-pounder from the regimental headquarters company was rushed up to assist them, and the men yelled with delight as the vicious little cannon got in direct hits on the Boche emplacements. Hopelessly cut off, the large body of Germans in this formidable work surrendered after a few sharp and bloody minutes, and the Seventeenth, sending back its prisoners, rejoined the battalion.

Prisoners began to stream back from the front of the attack, telling of the success of the Sixth. Wounded came with them, some walking, some carried on improvised stretchers by the Boche "kamarads." Most of them were grinning. "Goin' fine up there, boys, goin' fine!" "Lookit, fellers! Got a bon blighty—We'll give 'em your regards in Paris!"

For awhile now the battalion halted, keeping its distance from the unit ahead. The men lay on their rifles and expressed unreasonable yearnings for food. "Eat? Eat? Hell! Shock troops ain't supposed to eat!" Officers cast anxious glances toward the utterly exposed left. The French attack had failed to keep abreast of the American.

The left company, the Seventeenth, was in a cover of scrubby trees. The other companies were likewise concealed. Only the Forty-ninth lay perforce in the open, on a bleak, shell-pocked slope. A high-flying Boche plane spotted its platoon columns, asprawl eighty or a hundred yards apart on the chalky ground. "No good," said the second-in-command, cocking his head gander-wise in his flat helmet, "is goin' to come of that dam' thing—guess all our noble aviators have gone home to lunch." The plane, high and small and shining in the sky, circled slowly above them. Far back of the Boche lines there was a railroad gun that took a wireless from the wheeling vulture. "Listen," said the captain, "listen to th—"

There were lots of shells passing over—the long tearing whine of the 75s, the coarser voices of the Boche 77s replying, and heavy stuff, but most of it was breaking behind or in front of the battalion. Into this roof of sound came a deeper note—a far-off rumble that mounted to an enormous shattering roar, like a freight train on a down-grade. The company flattened against the ground like partridges, and the world shook and reeled under them as a nine-inch shell crashed into the earth fifty yards ahead, exploding with a cataclysmic detonation that rocked their senses. An appalling geyser of black smoke and torn earth leaped skyward, jagged splinters of steel whined away, and stones and clods showered down. Before the smoke had lifted from the monstrous crater the devastating rumble came again, and the second shell roared down fifty yards to the rear.

"Oh, Lordy! They've got us bracketed!"

"I saw that one! I saw it—look right where the next one's gonna hit, an'—" "Look where it's gonna hit! Lawd, if I just knew it wasn't gonna hit me—ahh—!"

The third shell came, and men who risked an eye could see it—a dark, tremendous streak, shooting straight down to the quivering earth. A yawning hole opened with thunder fairly between two platoon columns, and the earth vomited. . . . It was wonderful shooting. All the shells that followed dropped between the columns of prone men—but not a man was hit! The heavy projectiles sank far into the chalky soil, and the explosions sent the deadly fragments outward and over the company. More than a dozen shells were fired in all, the high sinister plane wheeling overhead the while. Then the company went forward with the battalion, very glad to move.

All Knowledge Not Possessed by Youth

Dear me, with all their superior knowledge, how ignorant the younger generation, one might say the youngest generation, is about some things. A new story came into the house and mother essayed to read it aloud. It was about "gypsies." Hardly had she begun when a chorus of small voices asked, "What's a 'gypsy'?" And it was hard explaining about a covered wagon, for the next question was, "What's a 'wagon'?" And some didn't even understand what a "pair of horses" was. Never did mother have it brought home to her so keenly that this was an automobile age.

And there is nothing that makes a high-school pupil feel that her mother is more ancient than to have that same mother say, "There were no automobiles in my high-school days; we always went buggy riding." Instantly the high-school maiden thinks of her mother, as dated some time before the Civil war, and one high school child had the nerve to question her mother as to her experiences during the Revolutionary war.

Mother came back at daughter a bit, though. She said casually, "There was no such thing as a radio in your life until you reached high-school age, was there?" Daughter tried to prove that radio only happened the other day, as it were, but mother emphasized her point that inventions are coming along faster than people are.—Springfield Union.

Lesson for May 29

PETER UNDAUNTED BY PERSECUTION

LESSON TEXT—Acts 5:17-42.

GOLDEN TEXT—We ought to obey God rather than men.—Acts 5:29.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Shows His Courage.

JUNIOR TOPIC — Peter Speaks Bravely for His Lord.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Standing Firm Under Persecution.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Source of Courage.

The vindication of the house of God against the hypocritical act of Ananias and Sapphira had a salutary effect upon the people. The hypocrites were deterred from joining the church, but true-hearted men and women were all the more attracted to it, even identifying themselves with it. So great was the stir in Jerusalem that even the sick folk were brought where but the shadow of Peter might fall upon them.

I. The Apostles in Prison (vv. 17-18).

The marvelous success which accompanied the teaching of the apostles was too much for the Sadducees to endure. Their jealous wrath was aroused to such an extent that they laid the cruel hand of persecution upon these witnesses for Christ. Cain was jealous of Abel; Joseph's brethren sold him in slavery because he was the favorite of Jacob. Saul was jealous of David when the women ascribed greater glory to him.

II. The Apostles' Miraculous Deliverance (vv. 19-21).

1. The Lord sent an angel to open the prison and let the prisoners free (v. 19).

There are no doors, nor bolts capable of shutting out God's angel.

2. They were commanded to go at once and speak to the people. (v. 20).

The message they were to deliver was the "Words of this life." Most likely this means eternal life through the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ.

3. Their prompt obedience (v. 21).

By daybreak they were teaching in the temple.

III. The Apostles Tried (vv. 21-32).

1. The meeting of the council (v.21).

In the early morning the Jewish council was convened by the high-priest.

2. Their perplexity (vv. 22-24).

The officer was sent to bring the prisoners, but lo, when they came to the jail it was empty. This news greatly perplexed the council.

3. The apostles again arrested (vv. 25, 26).

When one came with the news that the apostles were teaching in the temple, officers were dispatched to bring them before the council. They refrained from the use of violence because they feared the people.

4. The apostles questioned (vv. 27, 28).

The council demanded of them the reason for not heeding the charge which they had previously given that they should not teach any more in the name of Jesus. This persistent testimony the officers interpreted as an effort to bring the guilt of Jesus' blood upon themselves.

5. The apostle's answer.

Peter boldly replied that they were under obligation to obey God rather than men. He further told them that they were guilty of the murder of Jesus Christ and that God had raised Jesus from the dead and exalted Him to be a Prince and a Savior to give repentance and remission of sins to Israel, and also that He had made the apostles, with the Holy Spirit, witnesses of these things.

IV. The Result (vv. 33-42).

1. They determined to kill the apostles (v. 33).

Peter's stinging words cut to the quick, but their desperate wickedness filled them with murderous hatred instead of moving them to repentance. They could not answer the message, so the only way was to kill their accusers.

2. Gamaliel's counsel (vv. 34-39).

He advised neutrality, assuring them that if it be a work of men it would come to nought, but if it be of God they could not overthrow it because they would be engaged in the hopeless task of fighting against God.

3. The apostles beaten (v. 40).

While heeding Gamaliel's advice, they vented their rage by beating the apostles and charging them not to speak in Christ's name.

4. The behavior of the apostles (vv. 41,42).

They departed with hearts full of joy that they were counted worthy to suffer for the name of Christ. They continued to preach Jesus Christ in public and in private.

POULTRY

HIGH MORTALITY LOWERS PROFITS

High mortality and low egg production go hand in hand in the farm poultry flock and if the death rate of hens is high the results from the flock will be only mediocre, regardless of how well the hens are bred and fed, says H. H. Alp, poultry extension specialist of the college of agriculture, University of Illinois.

"Records which 234 farm flock owners kept in co-operation with the college show a mortality rate of 12 per cent annually. If this rate is figured for the entire state there would be an approximate loss of 3,000,000 birds annually.

"A 12 per cent mortality on first thought may not seem very high, but it must be remembered that along with a mortality as high as this there goes a general low production throughout the flock. It is not so much the loss of a bird dying that counts as the loss caused by low production through sickness.

"While the causes for mortality may vary to a certain extent, the chief and main causes will be the lack of sanitation and personal attention. Very little credit for the mortality being no higher than 12 per cent can be given to improved conditions in and around poultry houses. Conditions probably have not improved a great deal with regard to sanitation. Diseases have increased and have given more trouble every year. The chief factor in protecting the flock is one of preventive measures.

"Hen mortality is spread fairly well over the whole year. The spring months quite often show an increased death rate due to increased production, especially so where the birds are forced for production. There is a certain mortality that might be termed normal mortality. This is where death results from causes beyond the control of the operator and is not due to a disease and should cause no worry. The bulk of the mortality, though, can be influenced by the personal ability of the operator. The determining factor with mortality is health and vigor and health and vigor come only from good stock, sanitation and feeding.

"All that is necessary to say as a warning to poultrymen in regard to hen mortality is to remember that vigor can be defined as a hen's ability to live and thrive under ordinary conditions and it is essential to have this factor exhibited in selecting layers and breeders.

"Poultry drugs and medicines should not be trusted to keep the flock free from mortality. Prevention and sanitation should be practiced instead and an abundance of common sense used in handling the flock."

Ventilators Should Be Regulated in Incubator

In hatching eggs in incubators it is frequently difficult to provide enough fresh air or give proper ventilation to the incubator and at the same time to keep the eggs from losing too much moisture.

The poultry department at the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y., says the ventilators should be kept closed during the first ten days of incubation, because the chick inside the egg requires very little oxygen. After the tenth day the chick needs more oxygen and the amount increases gradually until the need is largest during the last three days.

After the tenth day of incubation the ventilators may be opened more and more until they are wide open at the eighteenth day. The moisture pans should not be allowed to get dry at any time.

Eggs should lose about 15 per cent of their original weight, and not more, during the three weeks of incubation. If they lose more moisture than this it is impossible to replace it. Sprinkling the eggs with warm water several times daily during the last three days is often recommended, but while this can do no harm, it can do little good.

Narragansett Turkeys

The Narragansett turkeys are almost the same weight as the Bourbon Red turkey or about six pounds lighter than the Bronze. They are similar to the Bronze in habits. They are good rangers and dress out nicely. In color they are somewhat lighter than the Bronze. They are not as popular a breed as the Bronze, White Holland or Bourbon Red, and as a result it will be more difficult to get new stock of this breed than of any of the other breeds mentioned.

Charcoal for Turkeys

Powdered charcoal in the feed is an aid to digestion. Indigestion in turkeys is caused by irregular feeding as often as by wrong feeding. The turkey is a creature of habit; it likes the meals that are given to come at regular intervals. In the wild state it feeds often and little, working up its appetite by its own activities. If it gets the habit of irregular feeding, it is restless and either "goes past its feed," as an Irish friend used to say, or overeats.

WOMEN CAN NOW DO MORE

Because Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Keeps Them Well

Fifty years ago there were few occupations for women. Some taught school, some did housework, some found work to do at home and a few took up nursing.

Today there are very few occupations not open to women. Today they work in factories with hundreds of other women and girls. There are also women architects, lawyers, dentists, executives, and legislators. But all too often a woman wins her economic independence at the cost of her health.

Mrs. Elizabeth Chamberlain who works in the Unionall factory making overalls writes that she got "wonderful results" from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Mrs. Chamberlain lives at 500 Monmouth St., Trenton, N. J. She recommends the Vegetable Compound to her friends in the factory and will gladly answer any letters she gets from women asking about it.

If Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped other women, why shouldn't it help you?

Wise Old Owl!

When Anacharsis visited Solon he found the daddy of all legislators busy compiling his laws. Anacharsis, who was a bold and rather raucous fellow, laughed at him, to quote Plutarch, for imagining the dishonesty and covetousness of his countrymen could be restrained by written laws, which were like spiders' webs, and would catch, it is true, the weak and poor, but easily be broken by the mighty and rich. This was said about 500 years before Christ.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Men as Clock's Works

When a broken pin caused the faithful clock in St. Paul's cathedral, London, to stop recently, men acted as the works. Recognizing the fact that thousands depended on the clock for time, officials of the church placed behind the face of the timekeeper men, who turned the hands every minute during the daytime until repairs were completed.

FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

It should interest boys and girls of St. Joe and vicinity to know that The National Safety Council, of Chicago, is again to distribute prizes for sketches and drawings warning of carelessness. Each year the best of those sent in are made into posters. The pictures carry a stronger warning than words, and are declared to be of great value in reducing death by accident. Any sketches or pictures showing how to prevent accidents at railroad crossings, on the streets and highways or in public places are given consideration. Lots of people will stop and think when a striking picture stares them in the face who would ignore a printed warning. So any of our boys and girls who have artistic ability and can draw, paint or sketch and who are anxious to earn some real cash are urged to get busy and enter this contest. Prizes to the amount of $1,000 in gold will be distributed and all information can be had by writing The National Safety Council, Chicago.

THE TORNADO SEASON

The tornado season has been on for several weeks past and this time it is not confined solely to the southwest. Spring is farther long than usual in our southwestern states and naturally more atmospheric disturbance is being generated. But blossoms and tornadoes both come with the spring, and records show that even the Northern and New England states are coming in for more than the usual number of windstorms. At any rate, there are enough tornadoes going around this year to remind us that no particular spot is immune from them. "The wind bloweth where it listeth" is a saying as old as the hills, and it still holds good. For all we know, we may feel its severity in St. Joe next, for there is no means of preventing such disturbances. As we've said in these columns before, the only thing to do is to hope we will be spared such events, but to be sure that we've plenty of such protection as the insurance agents of St. Joe can furnish.

A REAL BENEFACTOR

Most every St. Joe citizen can recall that only a few years ago there was considerable prejudice against the auto. Not so many people owned them then and those who did not were more or less resentful and quick to assert their anger at the motorist who, as they said, "always tried to hog the road."

But it's different now, and while there may be found here and there someone who still holds resentment, this community, like all other sections of the United States, recognizes he auto as a real benefactor. They know it has been a vast aid to our social, educational and business life and since it has become the world's greatest industry, with more than 3,000,000 men supporting themselves and families from it, they have come to figure it as an industrial blessing.

You'll find many strange autos passing through this section this summer. Now is an excellent time to see that your premises are made attractive, for well-kept homes are the first things noted by strangers. We can also stand a little improvement in our streets and sidewalks too and in that way also create a favorable impression. Whatever these strangers spend while in our midst contributes to the general prosperity of the community. And who knows but some of them might decide to become permanent residents? The auto has already brought us many blessings, let's show we are deserving of them by making our town so attractive that auto tourists will say a good word for us as they travel on.

OUR GRADUATES

So many things have come into the lives of St. Joe citizens since they finished school, and business cares have set so heavily on their shoulders that they have lost sight of what was really a supreme event in their lives—the high school graduation. And yet, even though forgotten by those who have passed through it, or if not forgotten at least seldom recalled, the event is still rated as a red letter day in the life of every boy or girl permitted to achieve the distinction of having participated in it.

We are again in the season of high school graduations, or commencements, if you prefer. Here and elsewhere boys and girls, just on the border-land of manhood and womanhood, are closing an eventful period in their careers. They are reaching a fork in the road, and directing signs to Success and Failure are not easily interpreted. Each must read for himself, each must choose the road over which he will travel through life. Graduation marks the point from which they launch their battle against the hard and exacting tasks of life—it is the day when they lift the burden of responsibility from the shoulders of their own parents, and start out to carry it for themselves.

We are proud of the young women this community is graduating this season. Some of them will remain in the neighborhood, carrying on in future years the tasks of those now in active business and professional life. Others will be scattered to far places, to stand or fall on the training they received in the old home school from which they are now taking a final farewell. We can wish no greater thing for them than that each and every one lives as happily and successfully as have been the school years now brought to a close.

"Dick" Widney went to Auburn Monday to be there so he could attend the John Robison show on Tuesday, and will spend the rest of the week with his sister, Mrs. Cora Smith and family. Dick says: "Well, to be honest about it, I always did like to go to the circus, drink red lemonade and see the elephant. I can remember this show ever since I was a boy and I expect to go and see it as long as I live." And Ye Editor don't blame him, for in his condition, he can't get away to enjoy himself like the rest of us, and a circus is really an event looked forward to. Dick likes the side show attractions as well as ever, as he was always interested in freakish things, such as the tall man, the dwarfs, the fat lady and the snake charmers.

Easily operated—positively regulated—wickless—valveless—absolutely dependable. Burns kerosene—one of the cheapest fuels known.

THE NEW MODEL embodies all the principles of the standard Florence Oil Stove and has a decided economy in the new over-sized, high-powered 15 inch Florence burner. It does the work of two standard burners in giving all the speed and efficiency necessary for the large, full-sized oven.

COOKING TOP OF CAST IRON GRID WORK is extra wide and entirely open. You can use every inch of the space—for cooking, directly over the burners; and for keeping food warm, on the surface adjacent to the burners. The whole top is perfectly flush—cooking utensils can be moved around with no danger of spilling their contents. A highly polished surface provides excellent heating contact.

And of course a complete line of ACME PAINTS, OILS, VARNISHES, ENAMELS, Etc., are to be found here. Ask anyone who has used them. The weight of the PAINT tells why it is better. Investigate ACME quality before you buy, then compare it with any other brand you wish.

CELEBRATING 1-3 OF A CENTURY GROWTH

PATTERSON-FLETCHER COMPANY HAVING A 1-3 OF A CENTURY SALE

From a humble beginning in a small store doing a business of less than a thousand dollars a week in 1894 — Patterson-Fletcher Company pushed ahead until now their business is in excess of one million dollars annually.

Thirty-three years this business has been building — nearly a third of a century. It has been built on Service — Value — and Quality.

Always being on the alert with the new styles showing them first in this community and by doing the unusual things, this store has come to be called "The Store That Does Things."

This year several of Patterson-Fletcher's manufacturers knowing that the firm was completing its thirty-third year's business, suggested the store have a 1-3 of a Century celebration and agreed to furnish merchandise at a great discount in order to give the utmost of value during this 1-3 of a Century Sale.

This week starts Patterson-Fletcher's 1-3 of a Century Sale with many unusual values. This is the first time in all the thirty-three years that Patterson-Fletcher Co. has ever had a store-wide sale other than at the end of each season.

Mark Williams, of Auburn, who was operated on Tuesday in a private sanatarium at Chicago, is showing satisfactory improvement acording to word from Mrs. Williams who is with him.

ALVA S. COBURN LEFT A WILL DISPOSING OF ESTATE

The will of the late Alva S. Coburn of Newville township, which was executed April 8, 1927, with L. L. Hoff and Lodema Sowers as witnesses, has been probated in the DeKalb circuit court.

Floyd Coburn was nominated in the will for executor. He was directed to dispose of all of the testator's property within a year after his death for the best sum he can obtain. The proceeds are to be distributed as follows:

To Derril Murphy, son of Mark M. Murphy, a stepson of the testator, $500; to Harold Murphy, another son of Mark M. Murphy, $425; the money to be held in trust for them until each reaches the age of twenty-two years. However, if they desire to take a college course the executor, as trustee, shall expend the money for that purpose for them.

The proceeds from the sale of one share in the Hickaville Grain Co., owned by the testator is to be paid over to the Hicksville Cemetery Association, the income to be used for the upkeep of the Ambrose Purdy lot, the Russell Murphy lot and the Homer Twitchel lot in the cemetery.

The sum of $100 is to be paid to the trustees of the Coburn's Corners Church of Christ in Spencer township, the income to be used for the upkeep of Alton cemetery in Concord township.

Derril Murphy is bequeathed a Meredith shotgun that Mr. Coburn owned and Harold Murphy a gold watch and chain.

Mark M. Murphy and his wife, Gladys M. Murphy with whom Mr. Coburn had been living, and who cared for him, are given $250.

The balance of the proceeds of the sale of the property is to be divided equally among the testator's nieces and nephews.

Notes From Sunday Service

Text—2 Timothy 2: 15: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

The first great objective of life is to be approved of God.

The second is to give ourselves so completely to our job that the work represents the very life of the workman and consequently we need not to be ashamed.

Men will be approved of God and have no need of being ashamed in proportion as they rightly divide the word of truth—get the real meaning of it, then teach it and give themselves obediently to it.

If approved of God a person may well defy the world. If people are bound to live like the devil they will sure hate the preacher or any christian who does not fall in line with them.

"Oh, my brother, have you seen Second Timothy, two—fifteen?"

"We'll stop on our way to the station and get Mrs. Pulsifer to come and look after the house. Good night, dear, and if you dream of drowning, just call Mother."

Mary looked at her mother, standing in the doorway and ready to snap the light out.

"Lovely old thing," she called, "go and get your own beauty sleep. I'll have pleasant dreams."

When the darkness enfolded her, however, she made a distinctly wry face. How much, she wondered, was she a business necessity in this contemplated trip to New York, and how much was it her mother's plan not to let the next chapter begin with the grocer's clerk?

In her own room, Mrs. Johnson disrobed, her heart beating to the tune of one monotonous chant, which ran thus: "Not yet, Claude Dabbs, not yet shall you know about Mary." Then she planned her next move, which was to eliminate Dabbs and his too engaging nephew from Mary's life—and from her own.

Claude Dabbs waited until he knew there was no answer and no return of the money.

Then it WAS Polly.

He turned out the light, but seeing that the library was still occupied, looked in. Ned was sitting at the window, smoking. He looked up as Claude came into the room, and said, "Well?"

"It looks as if it was Polly. I feel that it is, crazy as it may seem to you. I hope she got all I meant, as well as the money."

Ned turned on him, more excited than Dabbs had yet seen him. "The girl! Uncle Claude, you'll have to explain things to her, won't you?"

"Yes, but who is she? That's what I want to get at," Claude said. His tone was that of a man hard-driven, holding on to his patience by sheer will power. "Is she an adopted daughter? Who was her father, and how old is she? Why do you think I told you what I did the other night, if it wasn't that I wanted to know who the girl is?"

Ned crossed to him, and put his hand on his shoulder.

"I give you my word, Claude Dabbs, I didn't realize it. I'm not more innocent nor more stupid than the average, but I slept through the last part of your story and my mind has been on other things. I didn't get you at all. Do you mean to say you—"

"Yes," and this time Claude's control snapped. "I want to know whether she's mine or not."

He wrenched himself away from Ned's hand. "I don't know that it will make a blamed bit of difference to anyone but me, but I'd like to know."

The morning came and went without news from the White house. By this time Ned was anxious. He had promised Claude to wait for him until he returned from a trip to the express office.

Immediately on his return Ned followed Claude into the private office.

"Met Ettie Pulsifer on the wood road this morning going to the White house. She's got orders to pack the trunks, set the house in order, and lock up. The key and the trunks are to be sent to New York. Says it was Mrs. Johnston who telephoned. Says the girl said they were only going up for the day, but the mother never opened her mouth. What do you think of it?"

"Looks to me, C. M., as though Mrs. Johnston wanted to keep Miss Johnston from you," and added mentally, but did not say it, "or me."

"That's what I doped out."

"Did you find out from Mrs. Pulsifer where the trunks were to go?"

"Sure." He took out a small leather notebook and opened it: "Hotel Plaza, New York."

"By G—d, I believe you're right and it is Polly, up to her old tricks. Never faces anything, but always runs away. Well, this time two can play that game. This time I'm going after her."

Ned, who already had made up his mind to follow Mary, cost what it might, and prepared to break from Peace Valley and Claude Dabbs if need be, took him up at once with "That's the way to talk."

"Yeh, I know," Claude admitted, shrewdly. "It's the way you think I ought to have talked and done, twenty years ago. But I didn't have the money."

"I've got the money," Ned began, but Claude stopped him peremptorily with:

"So have I. Enough for both. Don't bother about money."

"In that case," began Ned, but never finished the sentence, for young John came in to say that Ned was wanted on the long-distance telephone.

"Switch it in here, then, can't you?" Dabbs demanded.

Ned reached for the receiver. As he did so, Claude, with his usual delicacy, left the room.

Mary Johnston was on the wire.

Ned, thrilled, heard her voice telling him that Mrs. Pulsifer had the key of the house and was to close it, but would he see that little Phoebe Sayer received the borrowed garments back safely? Would he also tell Phoebe that she was sending her some books as a little remembrance? As for Mr. Carter himself, she would never, never forget all he had done for her, and she was so sorry she could not see him again. They were sailing in a few days.

"Sailing? Where?"

"I'm not quite sure, but think England first. Mother decided suddenly."

"But you can't go—yet. I beg pardon, Miss Johnston, but I wanted to see you. I'd something to say. I—"

"Yes, yes, Mr. Carter. I'll be so much obliged if you'll tell Phoebe, and—here is Mother, she'll be so grateful, too."

"But Miss Johnston—Mary—"

"Good-by, Mr. Carter."

At the other end of the line the receiver was hung up.

Claude came in and found Ned with his hand still on the telephone receiver, his face a study in perplexity.

"What's up?"

"They're going abroad, and soon. We've got to start things, right now. How soon can you get ready?"

"Ned!" Claude gasped. "Abroad! I hadn't really planned anything like that! Why, by Jiminy, Ned, I've never traveled farther than New York."

"Time you did. Look here, Claude Dabbs, are you going to sit here in Peace Valley and let everything slide as you did before, or are you going to find out the truth—about Mary?"

"If that girl's mine, I mean to know it."

This was so exactly Ned's state of mind that he found himself glaring at C. M., as at a rival, and with difficulty refrained from retorting, "So do I." Fortunately his brain told him that this was no time to tell Mary's possible father, if indeed that was Claude's proud position, his honorable intentions.

"Then you'd better come out into the world—with me, and pursue Mrs. Polly Johnston."

"I'm coming," Claude told him. "You go to New York tomorrow, Ned, and if we can't get the same steamer, we'll take the next. I'll fix things here while you find out Polly's plans. I'll join you in New York."

In Her Room Mrs. Johnson Disrobed.

"I'll go tonight."

"All right, and I'll join you tomorrow, and—and the best on the ship, Ned. You're my guest."

"I have money."

"Yeh, but you're coming with me, and we're going to need plenty, especially if you're—" Claude stopped abruptly and finished rather lamely, "traveling with me."

Ned wondered what was on his mind. He was amazed at this Claude Dabbs.

Claude gave him a clue almost immediately. "Are you 'Carter' or 'Rangely' this trip?"

Ned slid to his feet and faced him, but Claude stopped him before he could speak.

"You see, Ned, Miss Selden telephoned the station a day or so ago and sent a telegram to your father. It said that his son was living here under the name of 'Carter.' Guess the girl didn't realise she was on a party wire and what that means in the country."

Ned stopped him. "You mean to say you knew?"

"Sure, I've known ever since you met the girl. She volunteered the information."

"And you never asked me a single question?"

"Why should I? Ain't we friends? I knew you'd tell me when you were good and ready."

Ned drew nearer and put out his hand. "Thanks. Do you want to know why?"

Claude smiled and shook his head as he took Ned's hand. "I guess not. You see, I do know Loren Rangeley, and of all the old—well, never mind and excuse me, Ned, for he's your father, and of course that's one thing to his credit. All I mean to say is if there's two sides to any question and Loren Rangeley's on one, let me get on the other."

"You know my father!"

"Only just in a business way."

This helped Ned very little. What could the great Loren Rangeley have to do with a country grocer? Suspicions began to cross his mind. Before he could stop himself, he said "I say, Uncle Claude, what are you holding out on me?"

To his surprise, Claude Dabbs looked positively confused. "You're dead right, Ned, I haven't been entirely open with you either, but that can wait. All you have to tell me is whether you'll be 'Carter' or 'Rangeley' on this trip."

Ned hesitated. "I'd rather be 'Carter,' but we're apt to meet people who know me as Rangeley, so Carter's off."

"Best both of us sail under our true colors from now on and just be our natural, brutal selves. Well, get under way, Ned, and I'll start things here. Jiminy! Polly won't leave me gasping this time, though it never would have occurred to me to follow but for you."

Mary Johnston had departed from Clover Hollow with the expectation of returning on the afternoon train or the next morning at the latest. They went directly to the Plaza where her mother left Mary and took her own way to the lawyer's office. At least that was the version Mary was allowed to believe.

As a matter of fact, Mrs. Johnston went directly to Loren Rangeley's bank, was ushered at once into the president's private office and held a long consultation. At the end she had negotiated a loan on the land; so that much of her version was true. She had also told Mr. Rangeley that she wished to get away on the first steamer to Europe, where she could live better and cheaper than she could here. It would be better to stay there until her financial position became secure, or at least improved, and it would serve to take Mary away from an undesirable suitor.

Loren Rangeley listened, gravely sympathetic. His quick, cold eyes noted that Mrs. Johnston had lost none of her charm for him; that she wore very well indeed. The loan he was making was amply secured. Indeed, there was every chance of the land experiencing a boom. He was in possession of facts that made this almost a surety, but he did not tell her so. It suited his purpose that while he waited and made up his own mind, she should not be in a position to know that financially she was quite secure.

He agreed with her that it would be better to go abroad with the girl. It is to be noted that even with this lead, and the fact that Mrs. Johnston had been staying in the town Dorothy Selden had wired from, he asked no questions concerning his son. He could and did, by the mere summoning of a private secretary, secure for Mrs. Johnston accommodation on a steamer.

"When do you wish to sail?" Rangeley asked.

"Saturday," said Mrs. Johnston coolly. Somehow she did not like his smiling scrutiny any better this time than she had the last. It would be better to escape before he brought the battery of his elderly charms to bear upon her. In her present financial condition it might be difficult to hold him off successfully. Flight, now, might be as useful in her case as in Mary's.

Mr. Rangeley was mildly surprised at this sudden action, but on the whole pleased. He meant to go abroad this summer himself. Nothing like promptness in action. Mary's suitor must be indeed objectionable to cause Mrs. Johnston to take such drastic measures.

Mrs. Johnston left, with the money and the steamer reservations. At the last moment Mr. Rangeley told her that business might compel him to cross over, possibly within a few days, but Polly Johnston refused to borrow trouble. She took a cab back to the Plaza to break the news to Mary.

Mary listened without speaking, and with wide, homesick eyes. It was incredible! What was there to hold Mary in this country?

Mrs. Johnston had invented the story about the suitor to suit her own purposes, without really visualizing Ned in the background to give her all color. Had she unconsciously told the truth?

It could not be possible that her wonderful Mary had any real feeling about the grocer's clerk. If she had, then thank the Lord they were going! But she would let Mary infer that it was to escape Loren Rangeley. His name once mentioned, Mary made no protest.

It was only when they were dressed for dinner, and their guests had been announced, that Polly ventured to tell the girl the sailing date was Saturday.

Mary said nothing, but under dark brows her blue eyes looked the question that her mother knew must sooner or later be answered.

Insects in Cold Weather

While the majority of insects disappear during cold weather, some are known to live and thrive at temperatures which kill most of their kind in a few minutes. About 900 different insects have been found living on or in the snow. About twenty-five species are known to come out on the snow in Europe and America. Some of these are so small that they are never seen except in winter, and they are so little known that they have no popular name. It is not known how, or on what they live.

Disciples and Apostles

The 12 disciples were the original apostles. Later this term was used to designate those who promoted the doctrine of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. There were a great many later apostles, the most prominent of whom was the Apostle Paul.

6 things to understand about used car allowances

1 When you trade-in your used car for a new car, you are after all making a purchase, not a sale. You are simply applying your present car as a credit toward the purchase price of the new car.

2 Your used car has only one fundamental basis of value; i. e., what the dealer who accepts it in trade can get for it in the used car market.

3 Your used car has seemingly different values because competitive dealers are bidding to sell you a new car.

4 The largest allowance is not necessarily the best deal for you. Sometimes it is; sometimes it is not.

5 An excessive allowance may mean that you are paying an excessive price for the new car in comparison with its real value.

6 First judge the merits of the new car in comparison with its price, including all delivery and finance charges. Then weigh any difference in allowance offered on your used car.

WASH GOODS PRETTILY STYLED; PREFERRED LINGERIE TYPES

COTTON materials and washable fabrics are "showing off" this season. What's more, in their movement to "enter society" they are being sponsored by no less a personage than Dame Fashion herself. So from now on we may expect to witness cotton weaves of every sort present at country club affairs, afternoon functions and other events of the elite.

It is a fact, cotton weaves are gaining in style prestige with every tick of the clock. The fashionable wardrobe is now expected to number among its choicest belongings, frocks of gingham, of rayon, organdie and voile. Furthermore, these washable fabrics are expected to be made up with all the flattering niceties accorded the more formal materials.

A Pretty Wash Dress.

One shows knowledge of fashion's trend by attending the summer-day informal bridge party clad in a gingham styled to perfection. Of course one's dressmaker must be taken into confidence and urged to play her imagination up to the limit when it comes to designing frocks of washable materials, which are to compete side-by-side with pretentious silks.

Just now much interest is attached to the lovely new rayon checks and solid-color weaves. Silklike to the touch are they, also silklike in appearance, and it seems as if every time they are laundered they look prettier than before.

Assuredly the prospect for smartly styled washable fabrics is most promising, if the frock in the picture may be accepted as a criterion, and it most assuredly may. This attractive dress is made of one of the new rayon weaves. The jabotlike revers and the contrasting banding on skirt and sleeves are of sheerest white cotton voile so delicate in its texture one could almost take it to be a very fine georgette. The tiered skirt and the soft "drapy" trimming on the waist smartly carry out the much desired feminine styling.

A very popular material at this moment is fine voile showing black florals on a white background. The flair for this pretty sheer flower-printed fabric is, no doubt, due to the prevailing fashion for black and white.

So exquisite are these new black-and-white voiles, they have every appearance of handsome chiffon. The wearing of a broad black velvet ribbon girdle and bow adds to the effectiveness of the ensemble.

Exquisitely tailored underthings which lose none of their prettiness because of their simplicity, bespeak choicest summer lingerie. It is quite marvelous the way designers have succeeded in incorporating several garments in one, thus eliminating superfluous material or any tendency to bulkiness. Of course the chief object is to slenderize the silhouette, but still a greater good accomplished is the sheer, health-giving joy which results from the wearing of a minimum of clothing.

Two lovely exponents of the new-thought lingerie are shown here. They are classed as two-in-one garments, but it would seem as if three-in-one would more accurately describe them. In reality they each achieve a short skirt, panties and camisole in their designing.

Among the many points to commend these garments is the fact that they can be so easily laundered, especially if they be made of wash crepe-back satin or substantial crepe de chine. Then, too, they take up such little space in the week-end suitcase or overnight bag. From the standpoint of beauty, they are adorable, both as to color and decorative handwork.

Profuse and exquisite hemstitching adorns the garment to the left. There are little square incrustations of deep rose hand-worked on the background of lighter-pink shade, also bindings and borderings of the darker shade, hemstitched at every edge. Notice the broad set-in belt effect at the sides, its purpose being to maintain a flat hipline.

The newest chemise and panties all show a tight over-the-hip treatment, by the introducing of yokes or fitted lace insertions or perhaps fine tucks or other clever detailing.

French blue and maize is the color scheme carried out in the garment to the right. The embroidery deftly suggests baskets of tiny roses placed in the tip of each point and on the pockets.

A new trimming for silk lingerie is the narrow grosgrain ribbon edge, which is fagoted to the fabric.

DAIRY FACTS

BETTER STOCK FOR DAIRY DEMANDED

The increasing demand for better dairy cattle has placed a large premium on animals having proved productive capacity and known ancestry. Consequently, breeders are getting over twice as much for stock that has been tested under the advanced registry of production as for those that have not.

A study of 51 Holstein-Friesian cattle sales held throughout the United States during 1926 shows that the average price for advanced registry females with yearly records was $444. This was $273 more than the average price of animals without advanced registry records and out of untested dams.

In 38 auction sales of pure-bred Guernseys the contrast was equally striking. Cows having both advanced registry records and advanced registry dams averaged $523; those with registered dams but no official records on themselves averaged $336, and those without tested dams, but with official advanced registry records, $251.

Commenting on this, W. R. Robbers, superintendent of the advanced registry testing for the state of New Jersey, says: "The results of these large auction sales in various states give an accurate measure of the monetary value of knowing and being able to prove to prospective buyers the ancestry and milk producing ability of an animal. The buyers at the auctions throughout the country were ready to pay a premium of $273 on Holsteins with official records showing their own and their dams' milking capacity. With Guernseys similar records were worth $271."

One High-Producing Cow Good as Seven Poor Ones

One cow that produces 400 pounds of butter fat in a year will net the owner as much profit as seven cows that produce 250 pounds of butter fat, according to records kept by five Paulding county dairymen during 1926, and summarized by Ivan McKellip, dairy specialist of Ohio State university.

"These records show that a cow that produces less than 200 pounds of butter fat in a year is not paying expenses, while a cow that produces 400 pounds is netting the owner nearly $100 above all costs including labor.

"These figures show," stated Mr. McKellip, "that a herd of ten cows that averages 400 pounds of butter fat in a year, will pay for their feed, pay all other miscellaneous expenses, pay a wage for the labor expended on them, and still slip nearly $1,000 into the pocket of the owner, while a herd of ten cows producing an average of 150 pounds of butter fat in a year will require the payment by the owner of over $400 for the privilege of keeping them."

Pure Water One Element That Insures Best Milk

Much sport has been had about the dairyman adding water to milk, but nevertheless it is a fact that good dairymen do add water to their milk during the manufacturing process—not afterwards at the pump.

Pure water is one of the elements that insure pure milk. Milk is fully 87 per cent water. A large cow drinking heavily daily because she produces heavily will take as much as 100 pounds, or nearly 10 gallons of water in a day.

Closely stabled cows should have water at least twice a day and it is always simpler and better to supply the water in drinking cups at the stanchions. The matter of temperature of the water is important. It is bad practice to oblige cattle to consume icy cold water. The water should be at least 20 degrees above freezing point in order to avoid too sudden shocks to the animal's system.

Dairy Cows Will Thrive if Fed Cottonseed Meal

While most experiments indicate that linseed oil meal is slightly superior to cottonseed meal for beef cattle it seems that there is little difference for dairy cows. In fact, an Indiana experiment indicates that choice cottonseed meal has a slight advantage over linseed oil meal for milk cows.

Do not feed more than two pounds per cow daily. In the South they have fed as much as four pounds without injurious results. Large quantities of cottonseed meal in the ration, however, predispose to udder trouble. It is much safer to feed large quantities of cottonseed meal when there is silage in the ration than when there is no succulence.

Birth Weight of Calves

There is considerable difference in the birth weight of calves of different breeds. This factor is of importance when calves are raised for veal but veal calves are a side line and not the most important function of dairy cows. According to Eckles, the following weights of calves represent about an average for the breed: Jersey, 55 pounds; Guernsey, 71 pounds; Ayrshire, 72 pounds; Holstein, 90 pounds; Brown Swiss, 100 pounds, and Dairy Shorthorn, 78 pounds.

W. H. Stearn Gains 15 lbs. Appetite Keen As Razor

Respected Indianapolis carpenter suffered agony for six years. Could not eat or sleep. Weak, wornout and discouraged. Now, at 67, enjoys good health, exudes good cheer, enthusiasm and energy. Gives full credit to Tanlac

Mr. W. H. Stearn lives at 1211 No. Oakland Avenue, Indianapolis. At 67 years he works steadily as a journeyman carpenter, meeting the competition of men half his age, and holding his own with the best. But for six years he had a different story to tell. Here it is, in his own words:

"I was so rundown from indigestion that my system was completely shattered. When a big contract obliged me to speed up and work overtime, my day's work almost killed me. Sometimes I was actually too weak to raise my hammer or pull my saw. My head and back ached terribly, and when I tried to bend over my head whirled and I was too weak to stand on my feet. Constipation and sluggish liver bothered me and my hand trembled from nervousness. At night I tossed and rolled in bed. Though my work demands plenty of food, my appetite was shot to pieces and I hardly ate enough to keep body and soul together.

"Tanlac helped me so that I now eat and sleep normally again. I'm as energetic as a man of 35 or 40 and don't have to ask odds of younger men. My appetite is like the keen edge of a freshly honed razor and I digest my food like a boy back from the skating pond. The old dizziness, weakness, aches and pains never rack me now. I give all credit to Tanlac for my present fine health, and recommend all other sufferers to try it."

You can profit from Mr. Stearn's experience. If overwork or neglect has left its mark on you, get a trial bottle of Tanlac. It is nature's own tonic and body builder, made from herbs, roots and barks. Your druggist has it; start in on Tanlac today. Over 52 million bottles already sold.

Tarkington Tells Views of Hero of France on Pacifism and Peace

One of a series of Articles written by Indiana Citizens, Soldiers and Men of Letters for the American Legion, Department of Ind.

BOOTH TARKINGTON

Last winter I met a pacifist, and that was a congenial event for me, because I am a pacifist, myself; so we got along very well together on first acquaintance. However, I ought to mention that he was a better and more effective pacifist than I am, because he had actually done something for the cause of peace. His right arm was off at the shoulder, and at the time I met him he had a bullet wound, received only a month before. He was a Colonel in the French Foreign Legion; he had fought all through the Great War and had just come from the Riff.

"When shall we have peace on earth?" I asked him.

"I can't set a date for it," he said. "As I am a soldier I'm probably more anxious for it than you are, because if much more of my body is shot away there won't be enough of me left to enjoy a quiet old age. Yet I share with you the hope for an ultimate permanent peace for all the world."

"Yes," I returned, "Civilization has been waiting and suffering a long time in that hope. In June of 1914 I believed the long, long desired time of peace had almost come. I was certain that there would never again be a war between great civilized nations. As for the United States, war between us and any other country was unthinkable. So I thought then that we should be safe if we disarmed."

"You were disarmed," the Colonel said, "Practically the United States was disarmed. You were almost as unready as you were when you fought the war with Spain, or when you fought the Civil War. The optimism of your countrymen is incredible. You disarm yourselves not on a basis of fact but merely because you are optimists. That is very hard upon us working pacifists."

"I don't quite understand," I said, "Isn't disarmament what we pacifists so ardently desire?"

"Exactly," he answered. "All pacifists desire disarmament. In fact, I think you may say that all the intelligent people in the world desire disarmament. But disarmament in one country alone, and with no great central authoritative world agency for eace, is of course merely a cause of more death and agony for those of us who must first go out to preserve peace when it is broken. If you abandon all military training and other countries do not do so, what will happen if you get into another war? It needs no argument: your untrained men will be massacred by the trained troops of your opponent. You must then bear these massacres until you can complete military training behind the walls of sacrificial corpses of your best young men who are the first to be called out. It is a very expensive way to deal with human life."

"But if there shouldn't be another war—"

"That is a soothing and narcotic optimism," he said. "And it is a special optimism that has never been warranted at any time during our six thousand years of human history. It is a good thing to be optimistic; but I should not call a man altogether sound in his actions if he staked his very life on a mere hope—and particularly upon a hope that has invariably and inevitably failed during a space of six thousand years! No; if we work for universal peace and universal simultaneous disarmament, we are intelligent we are true pacifists and we do not waste our labor or run the risk of having thousands of our best young men killed because of the failure of our unbased optimism. But a man who wants his own country to disarm completely, while every other country remains armed is not a pacifist at all. A pacifist does all he possibly can to advance the cause of peace; he does engage in efforts simply to make war more disastrous for his own side. No, I should not call such a man a pacifist."

"What would you call him, Colonel?"

"Well, we must not be harsh," he said, "There are many well intentioned people engaged in that movement; not realizing how much more horrible they will make war if it comes. We cannot call them pacifists of course; but judging by the effect they have always heretofore produced, I think it would be truthful and practical to call them innocent and unwilling makers of 'frightfulness.' As you say in America that's how it 'works out'." He glanced sadly and thoughtfully at his empty sleeve. "I hope they will not waste their own energy and the lives and limbs of us poor practical men who must bear the consequences," he said. "They could do so much good if they would work for peace."

SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASS GIVES DINNER

The value of a real friendly class contest has been demonstrated in the Methodist Sunday School when the final count was made between the Men's Bible Class, the Leaders and the Friendly Bible Class, covering a period of three months. The Leaders class were elected to furnish the dinner for the other two contesting classes.

The record for the individual classes is as follows: —

Men's Bible Class, attendance 89, collection $14.12. Three months previous record, attendance 40, collection $3.40, showing an increase in attendance of 49 and collection $10.72.

Leaders Class attendance 186, collection $22.85. Three months previous record, attendance 142, collection $7.63, showing an increase of 44 in attendance and $15.22 in collection.

The F. B. C. attendance 211, collection $39.69. Three months previous record, attendance 189 with $14.14 as collection, showing a gain of 22 in attendance and $25.54 in collection.

In summing up the figures there were 115 more people in the classes than previous and $51.48 more money raised above the average.

The challenge was made by the Friendly Bible Class with the one purpose, that of getting more people regularly attending and the figures speak as to whether the aim was realized. The Leaders put up a splendid chicken dinner with all the trimmings, and the Friendly Bible Class furnished a few numbers on the program.

OPPOSES GRANTING PAROLE TO EX-GOVERNOR McCRAY

Indianapolis, May 23.—Characterising theplan to parole Warren T. McCray, former Governor of Indiana from the Federal Penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., as a "conspicious abuse of the pardoning power," W. A. Pickens, of Indianapolis, has sent an open letter of protest to John G. Sargeant, United States attorney-general. Mr. Pickens takes the position that he release of McCray would serve as a poor example for those engaged in strengthening the criminal laws.

"Te Indiana State Bar Association, of which I happen to be president, has been engaged for some time in an effort to amend the criminal laws of the state so as to make more certain the conviction and punishment of criminals," wrote Mr. Pickens. "We succeeded in getting through the legislature at its last session, which ended in March last, a number of laws that will help, one of which was the registration and identification of criminals, and anothes of which made very substantial reforms in criminal procedure. We, who believe in law enforcement and the punishment of criminals, regardless of their social standing, were beginning to feel encouraged, but the pardoning of McCray would be a distinct step backward, and any man who has any regard whatever for law enforcement can not help but be shocked to know that such a thing is in contemplation."

"D" stands for discipline, a necessary factor in one's life if he is a success. "E" stands for enthusiasm, both a mental and spiritual state of mind and must be controlled in order to be a well balanced individual. While tempted as we are, yet he did not yield, showing that he had a strong mind and not given to things of this world. As young graduates just starting into the activities of either a college or business life, temptations of various kinds will be presented and may look big, with hopes of gaining much, but they should be seriously considered.

JUNIOR HIGH

The first Junior High School Commencement exercises ever held in Concord Township were conducted Tuesday afternoon in the High School Auditorium. A good sized crowd was present to show their interest in the class and appreciation of the establishment of our Junior High.

The large class and part of the faculty, were seated on the stage and made a pleasing picture.

The Salutatory address was given by Margaret Wilson and the Valedictory address by Virginia Ginther. The class will was read by Clifton Dragoo, the class history by Hilda Moir and the Prophecy by Grace Curie. Piano music was rendered by Margaret Wilson and Hilda Moir and a reading was given by Della Huffman. The graduates, with Mrs. Bray-Miser at the piano, sang their class song. Each number on the program was well given and appreciated by the audience.

Mr. R. L. Case, Principal of Concord Township High School, gave a splendid address and showed a deep interest in the class individually and as a whole. Carefully considered words of advice were given which the young people will do well to heed.

Mr. Case then presented the diplomas and announced that there was one honor diploma and it was received by Virginia Ginther.

MONEY THAT WORKS

A MAN visited our bank a few weeks ago who had just sold some property.

HE WAS not ready to invest the money again for a few months but he did not want the money to 'loaf' and earn nothing for him during that time.

SO HE wanted to know what he could do with the money to make it earn some profit and be available in case he needed it.

OF COURSE we suggested a Certificate of Deposit. You can have a "C. of D.," for any amount and continue it as long as you wish. It pays a nice profit, too.

THERE IS no better plan for your money that is not otherwise employed. Let us tell you more about this plan.

PICKED UP ABOUT TOWN

The trouble with too many political band wagons is someone always wants to fight over who shall drive.

The wife who is always making excuses for her husband in company seldom takes any excuses from him at home.

Few things are more disappointing to a man who thinks he is marrying a homebody than to find he has married a "roam" body.

O. E. Ginther says a husband never worries about his wife losing weight as long as she doesn't lose the knack of turning out good meals.

"My iden of a successful boss," asserts Donald Kinsey, "is one who can tell whether an employe needs a pat on the back or a bust on the nose."

"What I can't understand," says Champ Baily, "is how some of these modern flappers can look in a mirror without laughing themselves to death."

There are still too many people according to Frank Beams who think a grocery clerk is paying them a compliment when he asks them if they want it charged.

Considering what most people are willing to do for money it's a wonder there are not more millionaires.

VOL. XLI. ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, JUNE 2, 1927 NUMBER 22

LIFE OF SPENCER TOWNSHIP CITIZEN

Milo Franklin Walker, son of John and Lucy Walker, was born in Springfield Township, Allen County, October 31, 1853 and departed this life May 29, 1927, at the age of 73 years, 6 months and 29 days.

He was united in marriage to Lizzie Henderson November 14, 1878. To this union was born one child. The mother and child preceded him in death. The mother having passed away May 5, 1883. Milo was now left to fight the battle of life alone until December 18, 1899 when he was united in marriage to Cora Wilks. To this union was born two children, Minnie and Johnnie.

Milo was stricken with disease early in life which confined him to his home and deprived him of any part in public life. His patient endurance and constant association endeared him to his family and his departure has caused a vacancy in their lives that human tongue cannot express. He leaves to mourn their loss a wife, two children, two brothers, Charles of Conway Springs, Kansas and George of Seattle, Washington, and one sister, Cora of Toledo, Ohio, and many other relatives and friends.

The funeral was held Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the home at Coburn's Corners, with burial at Scipio. Rev. R. S. Brown, of Spencerville, officiating. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director.

DR. C. S. JOHNSON EXPRESSES INTEREST

The fillowing few lines are extracts from a note received from our Pittsburgh friend, reproduced for those who wish to know he is still interested in St. Joe:

"My dear Fred: I was glad to have a line and several pieces of printed matter from you some time ago. It is a pleasure to note how progressive St. Joe has become in recent months as reflected in the columns of your paper.

We get The News each week and scan it for items of news. Nearly always there is something of special interest, and always news of the home folks that makes its weekly visit like a letter from home.

I was particularly interested recently in the activities of the Choral Society. I well remember back in 1899, I think, when the Widney Opera House, not entirely completed at the time, was dedicated by a district Christian Endeavor convenion, and one of the striking features of that convention was the singing of a large chorus assembled and trained by John Woodcox. His interest in music continues, and he and the organization are to be commended for keeping up the interest of the public as well as their own studies in the noble art of music.

The community, too, is to be congratulated on having so splendid and usable a school building. This reflects upon the community's appreciation of the better things in life."

PLANE HAS A MISHAP SUNDAY

An airplane owned by the Mensinger Flying Service of Fort Wayne, was badly damaged Sunday afternoon while Mensinger, the pilot, was attempting a take-off from the Arthur P. Stroh field along the state road two miles west of Auburn. The wheels of the plane struck a dead-furrow and before Mensinger could right it the right wing struck a wire fence, the machine rolling over the fence. Howard and Richard Stroh were in the plane with Mensinger, but none of the occupants were hurt. The wings, running gear and propeller of the plane were destroyed and the cover on the body was badly torn.

COMMUNITY PAUSES TO HONOR WAR HEROES

St. Joe paused on Monday to honor its hero dead.

In memory of those who sleep flowers were strewn and wreathes were laid upon their resting places by loving hands, flowers symbolic of life eternal and wreathes typifying the enduring remembrance of a grateful people.

Impressive were the services which marked the annual Memorial Day occasion. A moment or two before the exercises started at 2:00 o'clock in the Community building the sun broke through clouds which blanketed the sky during the early morning and rain stoped falling, permitting the marchers to go to the cemeteries under the most pleasant weather conditions.

The morning showers changed the program for visiting outlying cemeteries, but a few machines went, taking flowers, where short services were conducted.

Wm. Curie presided. The music was furnished by a union choir and Rev. McKnight, of the M. P. Church gave the invocation.

The veterans present were:

Isaac Meese,
George W. Wade,
Mahlon Baker,
Charles Freeburn,
Robert Cochran.

Florence Buchanan, was not present because of his feeble condition and not being able to get around without the aid of a cane.

Springer Makes Talk

Captain H. C. Springer, of Butler, delivered the address. He paid a tribute to the community for its spirit of patriotism and fine audience that honors the nation's dead, by turning aside for the day from their labors. No nation is as loyal as America. Her patriotism flames up in time of emergency and then subsides in times of peace. The speaker criticised the state for allowing the day to be commercialized by staging the annual auto races at Indianapolis. Taking the only day set aside to perpetuate the memory of our war heroes as a nation.

The pride of America is that her citizens are loyal in their defense of principals and citizenship. We are not egotistical when we say that we have the best country on earth, for the past 150 years has demonstrated this fact in every conflict, and it offers freedom of life and opportunity found in no other nation. The person of the most humble birth can reach the highest position in the nation if they have the ability.

China, Rome and Greece, as nations, were at one time far in advance of the nations, but they have fallen and our nation can only survive by sacrifice and good citizenship and continue to preserve our nation and keep it from the hands of the enemy. There are at the present time a number of agencies working toward that end and we dare not allow America to be made the foot stool of other nations, we dare not allow our government principales to be broken down and trodden under foot.

Every person believes in peace of the nations, but not to the extent of disarmament to endanger our peace.

The meeting closed by the choir singing "The Blue and The Gray." The music was arranged by C. A. Woodcox for this occasion.

The line of march was formed, headed by the band, old veterans and children, all marching to the cemetery where the graves were decorated also those of the I. O. O. F. and K. of P. lodges.

The band gave a concert in the morning and also in the afternoon adding much to the spirit of the service.

Riverside cemetery was a beautiful sight. The grass was neatly mowed and trimmed; potted plants and cut flowers were in profusion and all added to the attractiveness of the home of the dead.

Much of the grading already has been done and the paving will be finished this summer.

ANNOUNCES ENGAGEMENT

The engagement and approaching marriage of Miss Alice Hannah, of Auburn, a former teacher in the St. Joe schools, was announced at an informal tea Saturday afternoon. The announcement was cleverly disclosed, being written on small pieces of paper, placed in small capsules and concealed in each of the iced individual cakes which were served. The announcement was: "Miss Alice Hannah. Dr. Lester Richardson. June 30th."

CURIE-GEE

Charles H. Curie and Mil'red L. Gee were married Saturday morning, May 28, at four o'clock, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Laney Gee. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Curie, the groom's parents, were guests, the wedding date being the twenty-ninth anniversary of their marriage. Mrs. Curie played the wedding march. The Rev. J. N. Scholes officiated, using the double ring ceremony, Mrs. Scholes was also present.

The bride is a leading young lady in the Coburntown community, and a sucessful teacher in the Hicksville high school. The groom is a popular young man of St. Joe, now completing a course in junior accountancy in the International Business College, of Fort Wayne.

The bride wore white silk overlaid with white lace. The vows were spoken under an arch of wedding bells. The house decorations were mainly of snowballs. Wedding breakfast was served immediately after the ceremony, and then the young couple motored to Grand Rapids and other points.

CLUB TRIES OUT NEW RECIPES

The Concord Township Home Bureau held an all day meeting in the Domestic Science room at the school house last Friday. Thirty-seven were present at the noon hour and enjoyed the dishes which the project leaders, with the help of the ladies had prepared. In addition to the new dishes which were prepared and tried, the committee served fruit salad, cake and coffee.

A reading was given by Miss Milliman which was much enjoyed by all, and a cracker eating contest was put on by the committee, which part of the ladies enjoyed, they being the ones who were not eating the crackers. A select reading was then given by Mrs. Fred Hull; roll call and business was attended to and the club adjourned, having spent an enjoyable and profitable day together.

CHAPTER IX

Not for long now could Polly count on blind obedience. It was not in the nature of things, nor the nature of a grown-up daughter. Polly decided the time had come for a frank confession.

While Mary brushed her hair, Polly announced that she meant to go to Venice and look about for a place to spend several months, cheaply and comfortably.

Mary said it sounded interesting, but did not commit herself farther. She was tired and hurt by these half-confidences.

Frankness was impossible, until her mother was frank with her. She would not degrade her mother's intelligence, or her own, by playing the hypocrite. Mary said she was sleepy and went to bed. But not to sleep.

Mrs. Johnston stayed in her own room, the door slightly open between them. She disrobed and stood in her dressing gown before the long mirror, a wonderful color study in a soft, clinging chiffon robe of blue, with her red hair flaming against white shoulders. Polly did not take her usual nightly delight in the spectacle. She braided her hair with no eyes for the vision in the mirror.

"Got to do it, Polly. Come," she said to herself and put down the comb. She went to the door and softly opened it.

"Mary, want to sleep?"

Mary shook her head, turned on the reading light, threw a rose-colored dressing gown over her shoulders and patted the bed beside her. She recognized from her mother's face that the time had come.

"I'd like immensely to have you come and talk yourself out to me. It's been—quite a while," she announced with a sly look up at her mother.

Mrs. Johnston sighed. There was no doubt she was in for it. She sat down, looked at Mary, shut her eyes and took the plunge.

"Mary, I'd like to talk about your father."

Mary sat up. Of all the unlikely things. Talk about her father! Bluebeard's door was about to be opened. From her earliest youth she could remember her mother saying: "Mustn't ask mother questions about father, Mary. It only makes Mumsy unhappy and miserable." What could it mean?

Mrs. Johnston settled herself back on Mary's bed.

"How much do you know about me, Mary?"

"Only that you're the nicest mother ever invented," Mary told her, honestly. "The best looking and the best friend a girl ever had."

Mrs. Johnston leaned over impulsively and kissed the girl.

"I only hope you'll think exactly the same when I get through."

"Hurry up, Mother, and tell. You sound like a 'best seller.'"

"I have known some less interesting plots. Well, we'll begin with the fact that I was born of poor people, in Limekilns, N. J. My mother and father both died when I was a little thing, about twelve, and a kind woman brought me up. She took me to New Brunswick, and sent me to school. I helped about the house after school hours. She kept a boarding house. I had only one relative in the whole world, my Uncle Michael, my mother's brother, and he was as crabbed an old bachelor as ever drew breath. He was supposed to be in Pennsylvania somewhere, working in the iron mines, when my people died. But nobody could find him, so Mrs. Bradley took me in.

"Mrs. Bradley died, and her sister came and took the house and ran it as a students' boarding house. I was inherited with the house, and kept right on working there. Mrs. Thomas, the sister, took no interest whatever in me. All she cared about was keeping the house clean and getting the work done. She didn't keep enough servants to do that comfortably, so I had to work from morning to night. It was ghastly."

She paused, looked at Mary shyly and began to describe the men at the boarding house. Mary listened, fascinated. To think that her mother was capable of keeping this odd past to herself all these years. It was most romantic. She waited eagerly for the first mention of her father. Her mother hadn't mentioned any Johnston yet, most of her talk was about some man named Dabbs. Her mind wandered off, thinking about the name and the man it suggested to her.

"It must be painful to have a name like that."

"Do you think so?" asked her mother, a little uncertainly. "Well, anyway, this young man lived in the house, but he never looked at me—"

"Mother!" scoffed Mary. "A lovely red-headed girl like you! I don't believe it."

"But you must, darling. There's a lot of difference between red-headed Mrs. Johnston, with lots of money and pretty clothes to set off her locks and hair, and a big, overworked, red-headed chambermaid in a boarding house.

"I hated nearly all men. I had a mind and hopes above my station. I was paid so little that I could only save money slowly. I wanted to get enough to nerve myself to leave that house. My ambition at that time was to be a school teacher."

She smiled at the girl and Mary smiled back.

"Mother, how brave you were. My heart aches to think of you, with all your brilliant ideas, tied down that way."

"Mother, How Brave You Were."

"Bless you, Baby!" her mother exclaimed. "My lost uncle turned up just about then, and found me out. He was a terrible creature; six feet tall, very dry and brittle and had a bad cough, and a vile temper. What was left of his carroty hair had turned a yellow-gray. The poor thing hadn't long to live.

"He had worked too hard, and lived too roughly, to know how to take care of himself. He had plenty of money, I discovered, and while he knew how to take care of it, he didn't know how to spend it. He didn't want to leave it to any one, especially to a girl. But I was all he had—poor soul." For a moment, Mary's mother caressed the toe of her slipper in silence.

"But Mother, please," urged Mary, "how can I wait until you get to me?"

Her mother came back from some long unlit cavern of her mind.

"Of course," she admitted, "that would naturally interest you most. Though Uncle found me and told me of his money, he swore me to secrecy as far as Mrs. Thomas' boarding house was concerned. He was like a lot of unmarried people, tremendously keen about marrying off the rest of the world. Mrs. Thomas had had a bad first and a wretched second husband, and hated men even worse than I did. She assured Uncle that I was a good girl and kept myself to myself and was perfectly safe.

"Uncle went away without committing himself in any way, but two days later a letter came, saying I was to come to a certain address to see him. I went. It was a private sanitarium, and Uncle was very ill indeed.

"He had his lawyer with him, and then and there I was ordered to get married. Uncle wanted to know that his money was going to some properly married woman with a man to look after her. I think some woman had treated him badly when he was young and poor. He wanted me to get married before any one knew I had any chance of getting money. He wanted me tied up to a hard-working lad who would expect to work for me, and would start honest, as he said, and have a family at once, and as large a family as possible.

"I was shocked and angry, furiously angry. But oh, how I wanted that money! There it was, dangling in front of me, a chance to learn all the things I longed to know, a chance to travel, to have pretty clothes, all the things I'd sworn to have. My dearest day dreams could be realities now, but would be lost to me unless I had a man to hang them on. I, who hated men, who hadn't wanted, and never had had a young man."

"Oh Mother, what did you do?"

"I didn't know what to do. I came home simply beside myself. I couldn't confide in the cook or Mrs. Thomas. I knew what would happen. They would laugh at me—and despise me. It's odd, isn't it? It's always the women who've made the worst matrimonial blunders who laugh the hardest.

"I found Mrs. Thomas in a fine rage. I'd forgotten to do the third floor before I went out. That was the floor young De Harms, Woods and Dabbs occupied. I went up there as quickly as I could get my things off and began slapping things together. Young Dabbs' room I left to the last, because—well, because he was a decent young fellow and wasn't so fault-finding as the others."

"I thought you hated all men," commented Mary, slyly.

Her mother ignored her. "I went to his room. There he was, sitting all huddled up by the window. I asked him if he minded my doing up the room while he was there, and he said he didn't. He had a telegram clutched in his hand. I could see that he was troubled. By and by I couldn't stand it any longer. I forgot my own troubles. I'd never been so sorry for anyone in my life. I went up to him, and quite forgetting I was a servant, said:

"Mr. Dabbs — Claude — what's wrong?"

"Claude!" Mary exclaimed. "Claude Dabbs? What a funny name! Why, it's the same as—"

Her mother stopped her with a quick: "It was funnier than that. I discovered afterward it was Claude Melnotte Dabbs."

Mary's soft laugh rang out, and then she checked it.

"Oh Mother, I'm sorry. I'm so interested. Hurry and tell."

Her daughter's mirth was not the pleasantest sound in Mrs. Johnston's ears just then. "I discovered that this young man, with the funny name, was in great trouble. His father was dying and the boy had no money to go home with, and his mother was quite too poor to send him any."

"Oh, poor thing. Of course you loaned him your savings."

"I didn't. I told him my troubles, and offered him five hundred dollars—if he would marry me."

"Mother! You didn't!"

"Sorry dear, but I can't stop to make this romantic. I'm telling you the plain, unvarnished truth. I thought his troubles and mine showed me a way out. I said if he would marry me and show himself, to my uncle, I would give him five hundred dollars. He was to promise to go away and never try to see me again. He was to leave me to go my way alone, while he went his."

"But Mother! What a cold-blooded thing to do!"

"Wasn't it?" agreed Mrs. Johnston, much embarrassed. "But you see it didn't seem like that to me, Mary. Please remember that he was only my door of escape and it was absolutely a business proposition."

"Oh Mother!"

"I can't help it, Mary. That's what I offered him, and after the first moment of astonishment, and when he was convinced that I was not fooling him and would actually have the money—I had two hundred and fifty dollars of my own savings to show him—he agreed."

"Oh dear," groaned Mary, "then he was just as bad!"

"I don't know," Mrs. Johnston said thoughtfully. "I've often wondered. You see, his father was dying."

"That's so, I'd forgotten."

Mrs. Johnston looked as though she was about to say something in her own defense, thought better of it, and went on, doggedly: "Uncle wasn't told anything about the agreement. Both my uncle and his lawyer were favorably impressed with Claude.

"Uncle insisted that we have the ceremony performed at once, and that suited both of us. Claude looked sick with anxiety, and was eager to get it over and start home. We were married before a justice of the peace, who knew neither of us. Right after the ceremony Claude went home with half of the five hundred in his pocket. The other half was to be his when he signed the papers agreeing to leave me alone, and not to block any petition I might make for divorce, on the grounds of desertion, later. The lawyer had to have time to draw the documents up."

"Mother, I simply can't recognize you as the calculating girl who married that way!"

"You'll have to, Mary. I did it. Just in time, too, for my uncle died that night. I was free and the money was mine. I left the boarding house and went to a quiet little hotel. I never told the people at the boarding house anything about the money, or the marriage.

"The lawyer was kind. He made arrangements for me to go to France and live with some friends of his sister who would finish my education. I was supposed to be a young widow."

Occasions Which Make Silence a Sacrament

There was a whole world of wisdom in the words a wise man of old, in the ages of faith ascribed to his Creator: "Be still then and know that I am God!" A later philosopher has remarked that no two men can be said to be truly friends unless they are content to bask in each other's company without expression of words. There are occasions when silence is the sacrament of faith and reverent joy, the seal and sign of a living union with the infinite and confident fellowship with our fellow man. It is in the practice of this silence that we learn how to discipline life, and recognise the profanity of the glib commonplaces of mere passing companionship, of formal religion and the useless volubility of controversy. We refrain from words because they are inadequate to express our experience, and the certitude of faith and confidence surpasses the powers of speech. "The truth is best spoken not by us, but through us," says a philosopher writing to another big journal. "The witness of true discipleship has its own silent testimony to the truth."

"Any one of those nine-inch babies would have blotted out twenty of us," marveled a lieutenant, leading his platoon around a thirty-foot crater that still smoked. "Or ripped the heart out of any concrete-and-steel fortification ever built—the good Lawd was certainly with us!"

To the company commanders, gathered at dark in a much disfigured Boche shelter in the Wood of Somme-Py, the major gave information. "The Sixth took Blanc Mont, and they are holding it against heavy counter-attacks. Prisoners say they were ordered to hold here at any costs—they're fighting damned well, too! The infantry regiments piped down the Bois de Vipre, just as we did the Essen hook. The division is grouping around the ridge, but we're pretty well isolated from the French. Tonight we are going on up and take the front line, and attack toward St.-Etienne-a-Arnes—town north of the ridge and a little west. Get on up to Blanc Mont with your companies—P. C. will be there, along the road that runs across the ridge.

CHAPTER VIII

Biting the Boche with the American Saw-Tooth Formation.

Not greatly troubled by the Boche shelling, that died to spasmodic bursts as the night went on, the battalion mounted through the dark to its appointed place. Here, beside a blasted road that ran along Blanc Mont, just behind the thin line of the Sixth, the weary men lay down, and, no orders being immediately forthcoming, slept like the dead that were lying thickly there. Let the officers worry over the fact that the French had fallen behind on each flank, that the division was, to all purposes, isolated far out in Boche territory—let any fool worry over the chances of stopping one tomorrow—tomorrow would come soon enough. "The lootenant says to get all the rest you can—don't—nobody need to—tell—me—tha—"

In the deep dugouts behind the road the battalion commanders prodded at field-maps and swore wearily over the ominous gaps behind the flanks—three kilometers on one flank, five on the other, where the French divisions had not kept pace. Into these holes the Boche had all day been savagely striving to thrust himself, and his success would mean disaster. Already the Sixth had a force thrown back to cover the left rear, disposed at right angles to the line of advance. . . . And orders were to carry the attack forward at dawn. On top of that, after midnight a Boche deserter crawled into the line with the cheering news that the Germans were planning to attack in force on the American flanks at dawn; a division of fresh troops—Prussians—had just been brought up for that purpose. It looked bad—it looked worse than that. "Well," said Major George Hamilton of the First battalion of the Fifth, "orders are to attack, and, by God, we'll attack"—a yawn spoiled the dramatic effect of his pronouncement—"and now I'm going to get some sleep. Coxy, wake me at 5:30—that will be an hour."

And at dawn, while the ridge shook and thundered under the barrage that went before the Boche flank attack, and the Sixth held with their rifles the branch behind the left, the Fifth marines went forward to carry the battle to St.-Etienne.

Noon found them well forward of the ridge, lying in an open flat, while the leading battalions disappeared in pine woods on a long slope ahead. It had fallen strangely quiet where they lay.

Up forward, though, all hell suddenly broke loose. Artillery, machine-guns, rifles, even the coughing detonations of grenades, mounted to an inconceivable fury of sound. "Here comes a battalion runner—there's the skipper, over there—what's up, anyway?"

The second-in-command came through his company with a light in his eyes, and he sent his voice before him. "Deploy the first platoon, Mr. Langford. Three-pace interval, be sure. Where's Mr. Connor? Oh, Chuck, you'll form the second wave behind Tom. About fifty yards. Other two platoons in column behind the company flanks. On yo' feet, chillun! We're goin' up against 'em!"

And so, all four companies in line, the First battalion, a thousand men, went up against the Boche. "Captain," said the second-in-command, as they started, "we're' swingin' half-left. This tack will take up right to St.-Etienne, won't it? We were pointin' a little one side of it before—major give you any dope?" "The Boche have come out of St.-Etienne—two full infantry regiments, anyway, and a bunch of Maxim guns—and hit the second and third in the flank. Must be pretty bad. We're goin' up to hit them in the flank ourselves. 'Bout a kilometer, I'd say. Wait until their artillery spots this little promenade. None of ours in support, you know."

Every man knew, as they moved out of the flat and ascended the slope ahead, that the case was desperate, but to this end was all their strength and skill in war, all their cunning gained in other battles, and their hearts lifted up to meet what might come. "More interval—more interval there on the left! Don't bunch up, you—"

The first shell came screaming down the line from the right, and broke with the hollow cough and poisonous yellow puff of smoke which marks the particular abomination of the foot-soldier. It broke fairly over the center of the Forty-ninth, and every head ducked in unison. Three men there were who seemed to throw themselves prone; they did not get up again. And then the fight closed upon the battalion with the complete and horrid unreality of nightmare.

The silent ridge to the left awoke with machine-guns and rifles, and sibilant rushing flights of nickel-coated missiles from Maxim and Mauser struck down where the shells spared. An increasing trail of crumpled brown figures lay behind the battalion as it went. The raw smell of blood was in men's nostrils.

Going forward with his men, a little dazed perhaps with shock and sound such as never were on earth before, the second-in-command was conscious of a strangely mounting sense of the unreality of the whole thing.

The woods on the crest were as far away as ever through the murk, their strides got them nowhere, their legs were clogged as in an evil dream—they were failing so fast, these men he had worked with and helped to train in war. There was a monstrous anger in his heart . . . a five-inch shell swooped over his head, so near that the rush of air made his eardrums pop and burst. He was picked up and whirled away like a leaf, breath and senses struck from him by the world-shattering concussion.

The second-in-command was pulled to his feet by Gunner Nice, who had taken the second platoon. His head lolled stupidly a moment, then he heard words—"an' that shell got all the captain's group, sir—all of 'em! An' my platoon's all casualties—" He pulled himself together as he went forward. His raincoat was split up the back, under his belt. His map case was gone—the strap that had secured it hung loosely from his shoulder. There was blood on his hands, and the salt taste of it in his mouth, but it didn't seem to be his. And the front of the battalion was very narrow, now. The support platoons were all in the line. Strangest of all, the gray slope was behind them—the trees on the crest were only a few yards away.

Behind and to the left the machine-guns still raved, but the artillery fell away. A greenish rocket flared from the pines ahead, and right in the faces of the panting marines machine-guns and rifles blazed. In the shadow of the pines were men in cumbersome green-gray uniforms, with faces that looked hardly human under deep-round helmets. With eyes narrowed, bodies slanting forward like men in heavy rain, the remnant of the battalion went to them.

It was the flank of the Boche column which had come out of St.-Etienne and struck the leading battalions of the Fifth. It had watched first with keen delight, then with incredulity, the tortured advance of the battalion. It had waited too long to open its own fire. And now, already shaken by the sight of these men who would not die, it shrank from the long American bayonets and the pitiless, furious faces behind the steel. A few Brandenburger zealots elected to die on their spitting Maxim guns, working them until bayonets or clubbed rifles made an end. A few iron-souled Prussians—the Boche had such men—stood up to meet bayonet with bayonet, and died that way.

A great many more flung away their arms and bleated "Kamaraden" to men who in that red minute knew no mercy. Some hid in holes, or feigned death, to be hunted out as the press thinned. There was a battery of field-guns down the slope, 500 yards or so. The gunners—those who were lucky—took to cover after the first burst of fire. "Thank Gawd fer a shot at them dam' artillerymen! Battle-sight, an' aim low, you birds—don't let any of them get away!" . . . "Sergeant, reckon the lootenant would let us go down an' take them 77s?"—"Shut up an' work yo' bolt, you dam' fool!—Whatinell you think you are—a army cure?"—"Besides, Mr. Conner's dead. . . ." On the hill beyond St.-Etienne new trenches scarred the slope; there were many Germans milling there, some 1,500 yards away. "Save your ammunition and lay low, the word was passed. "We're on our own out here." And the battalion, a very small battalion now, little more than a hundred men, lay along the crest they had stormed, with their dead and wounded and the Boche dead and wounded around them.

Almost immediately the Boche began to react. He opened on them a storm of fire, high explosive and shrapnel, and his machine-guns dinned fiercely. A counter-attack began to form toward St.-Etienne. Sweating gunners struggled into position with the two machine-guns that were left in the battalion, and these with their crews, were knocked out by shell-fire before either had been in action long enough to fire a clip. But the rifles gave tongue and continued to speak—the last few men are always the most difficult to kill—and the Boche had little taste for rifle-fire that begins to kill at 700 yards. That counter-attack shortly returned whence it came, and the one that followed it went back also.

Whitehead, of the Sixty-seventh company, plumped down alongside the captain of the Forty-ninth. Small, very quick and wiry, with his helmet cocked on the side of his head, he gave the impression of a fierce and warlike little hawk. "Hunt's comin' over, Francis," he said. "Bad place; worst I ever saw. Got about thirty men left. Hell that our machine-guns got knocked out so quick, wasn't it? —must be two regiments of Fritzies on our front yonder!"

Captain Hunt, senior in the field, a big, imperturbable Californian, came, and Lieutenant Kelly, promoted by casualties in the last hour to command of the Sixty-sixth company. "How does it look to you, gentlemen?" said Hunt. "Damn bad" was the consensus of opinion, with profane embellishments. Followed some technical discussion. "Well," concluded the senior captain, "we've accomplished our mission—broke up their attack—better hook up with the rest of the regiment. We'll find them through the woods to the right. Move off your companies—Kelly, you go first."

Nobody remembers very clearly that swing to the right, through a hail of machine-gun fire and an inferno of shelling. They found the companies of the Second battalion digging in astride a blasted road, and went into position beside them.

"I've organized the company sector with twenty men—all we've got left—you and I make twenty-two," reported the second-in-command, dropping wearily into the shell-hole where the captain had established himself. "Lord, I'm tired . . . and what I can't see," he added in some wonder, fingering the rents in his raincoat, "is why we weren't killed, too. . . ."

That night, lying in its shallow, hastily dug holes, the remnant of the battalion descended through further hells of shelling. The next night tins of beef and bread came up. There was some grim laughter when it came. "Captain," reported the one remaining sergeant, after distributing rations in the dark, "they sent us chow according to the last strength report—three days ago—230-odd rations. The men are building breastworks out of the corned-willy cans, sir—twenty of 'em—"

Some runners got through, and Division H. Q., well forward in a pleasantly exposed spot on the Souain road, built up a picture of a situation sufficiently interesting. Four infantry regiments were thrust saw-wise northeast to northeast of Blanc Mont; all were isolated from each other and from the French, who had lagged behind the flanks. Four little islands in a turbulent Boche sea, and the old Boche doing his damnedest.

Originality Shown in Ordering of Funerals

Two Englishmen and one English lady, who certainly did not know each other, decided practically at the same time to have fantastic funerals, Pierre Van Paassen writes, in the Atlanta Constitution. Harry Armour, one of them, twenty-four years old, who committed suicide, left a note in which he ordered that he was to be buried in hunting costume, booted and spurred, with rifle in his arms and a plentiful supply of cartridges in his coffin. Then there was Colonel Samson of Hastings, who demanded that his corpse be dumped in the middle of the channel. We learn from the Dover Gazette that his funeral had at least the compensation of a "jolly trip on a bright, sunny day." In London, a young lady, Miss Edith Koll, aged twenty, asked that she be laid out in her best evening gown, with dancing slippers and a small gramophone in the casket. She personally selected a number of jazz records, which were buried with her. All three expressed themselves believers in the resurrection of the body. The lady is the most original of all. When that last morn comes, and Gabriel blows his trumpet, she wants to organize a two-piece orchestra, no doubt.

Hopeless!

An airplane flew over an Irish asylum, much to the consternation of the inmates. Next day two of the latter were discussing the strange machine. One said:

"Do you know, I dreamt last night I made one of those contrivances and flew to America in 60 minutes?"

"That's strange," said the other, "for I had a similar dream, only I went to Melbourne in 60 seconds."

"How did you go?"

"Right through the earth."

"Look here, my friend," said the other, "you're not a lunatic—you're a blithering idiot, that's what you are."

CURTAINLESS WINDOWS ARE UNATTRACTIVE

Curtains of Cretonne Matching the Chair Cover Retain the Charm of a Room, While a Room Without Curtains Lacks Softness and Charm.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

With a good many housekeepers it is the custom to take down every window curtain in the house at the period of spring cleaning. After they have been laundered the curtains are put away until fall cleaning or some other traditional date permits them to go up again. In the meantime the windows remain bare and unattractive, and rooms lose their charm. They are filled with the unobscured glare of summer sunshine, which, while tempting in the first days of spring, is almost unbearable on hot days in many parts of the country. It helps to fade rugs and other furnishings. When privacy or subdued light is necessary the only course is to pull down the shades and incidentally to shut out most of the fresh air.

Old-Fashioned Idea.

Curtains undoubtedly need cleaning from time to time, but this old-fashioned idea of housekeeping has given way to the more modern idea that it is not necessary to make our homes bare, uncomfortable and ugly in order to have them clean. The bureau of home economics suggests that if the curtains used during the winter seem too elaborate or heavy for spring and summer, it would be a good plan to have a second set made of lighter sheerer materials. These would be in harmony with fresh slip covers and gay-colored decorations. They would serve every necessary purpose of curtains, retain softness and charm in each room, and add to its comfort. Side draperies, valences and unnecessary trimming should be omitted.

Sun Fades Fabrics.

As the hot summer sun fades many fabrics, these might be made of plain cream or white material or of some guaranteed fast-colored fabric. Draw curtains would be useful. They could be pulled back at night to permit the maximum circulation of air, and yet, when drawn, their texture would allow more air to penetrate into the room than a shade would.

When need for economy makes it impossible to have two sets of curtains, an all-year type of material can be selected that will stand the necessary wear and laundering required by double-duty curtains.

HAVE STRAWBERRY FLAVOR IN WINTER

Method of Preparing Is Different From Other Fruits.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

You can have delicious strawberry sauce for blanc mange or Spanish cream or sponge cake, or any other dessert you like, next December or January, if you provide for it now, while strawberries are at the height of their season. Or strawberry tarts, not too rich or sweet, as they often are when filled with preserves, or a strawberry sherbet or ice, or a fruit gelatin, predominating in this delectable flavor, or strawberry punch for your parties. The secret is canning a few quarts of strawberries for later use. Canned strawberries will not be so rich or so sweet as jam, and they will more closely approach the flavor of the fresh berries.

The method of preparing the strawberries for canning is a little different from that used for other fruits and berries, most of which are canned directly in added sirup. You want to develop all possible flavor in the strawberries, and also to avoid too watery or over-sweet product. The United States Department of Agriculture gives these directions: Hull and wash the strawberries. To each quart add one cupful of sugar and two tablespoonfuls of water. Boil slowly for fifteen minutes. Let stand overnight in the kettle. Reheat to boiling. Fill hot into hot containers, and process for five minutes in a hot-water bath. This is sometimes called the "hot pack" method, and is strongly recommended for all products canned at home. Since the material to be canned is heated to the boiling point or cooked a short time before being put into the cans or jars, the temperature of the whole jar is raised to the processing point in the shortest possible time. This results in more certain sterilization and a better product because of the shorter cooking.

If you are not familiar with the management of the jars and canner at each stage of the canning process, it is advisable to send to the United States Department of Agriculture for Farmers' Bulletin 1471-F, "Canning Fruits and Vegetables at Home." It will be sent to you free.

Galvanized Iron Vessels

Liquid foods, including buttermilk, milk, cider and other fruit juices, should not be allowed to stand for even a short time in a galvanized iron vessel nor should such a utensil be employed in making preserves, jellies, etc. The zinc which is used in galvanizing the utensil will be dissolved and will give the food an unpleasant taste and may cause sudden and intense illness.

Flies Spread Disease

House flies spread typhoid because the common house fly is essentially a breeder in filth. It breeds in and feeds upon all sorts of animal waste. When it comes in contact with material containing typhoid germs it picks them up on its hairy feet and ingests them, then carries them to the food, which if not cooked afterward may produce typhoid.

Directions for Making Cream of Tomato Soup

The difficulty usually encountered in making cream of tomato soup, or tomato bisque, as it's often called, is having the soup curdle the last minute. This is due to the effect of the acid tomato on the hot milk. It can be avoided by the proper management of the ingredients, without the use of the soda so often called for, says the United States Department of Agriculture. When soda is added the desirable acid flavor is neutralized and the vitamin content may be affected.

1 pint cooked or canned tomatoes.
2 tablespoonfuls butter or other fat.
1 teaspoonful onion juice.
2 tablespoonful flour.
1 teaspoonful salt.
1 quart milk.
Sprig of parsley.
Pinch of pepper.

Use two saucepans. In one cook the tomatoes slowly with the seasoning for ten minutes, and then rub through a strainer. In the other scald the milk, and thicken it with the flour and butter rubbed to a paste. Reheat the tomatoes in the first saucepan, combine the two pans without further cooking, and serve immediately.

Tomato soup is also very good when made with stock or just water. Use 1 pint of cooked or canned tomatoes, 1 quart of water or meat stock, 4 tablespoonfuls of butter or other fat, 4 tablespoonfuls flour, 1 teaspoonful sale, a pinch of pepper, a tablespoonful of chopped onion. Cook the onion in half the butter to develop the flavor, but do not fry it. Add the rest of the butter and the flour and mix to a paste. In another pan mix the stock or water, the tomato and seasonings. Heat these to the boiling point and pour slowly on the flour and butter paste, stirring all the time to prevent lumping. Cook for a few minutes, strain and serve.

Chocolate and Cocoa

Chocolate and cocoa are both derived from the seeds of trees growing in tropical countries which differ in genus from those which produce coconuts. Chocolate results from grinding the roasted seeds freed from germ and shell or husk and contains fifty per cent or more of fat. The ground seeds are sometimes subjected to hydraulic pressure to obtain the cocoa fat or butter whereby more than one-half is removed. The residue remaining when ground and sifted produces cocoa. Breakfast cocoa contains not less than 22 per cent fat.

Most Delicious Dessert

Spanish cream is one of the most delicious desserts one can make. It is also delicate and easily digested and especially suitable to give to children. As it is necessarily made early in the day to give the gelatin time to set, this dessert is one that the housekeeper will welcome. Many flavors may be used in a Spanish cream, such as chocolate, caramel, butterscotch, almond, orange, vanilla, or different fruit flavors.

Clean Upholstered Furniture

Upholstered furniture may be given a beating indoors if covered with a cloth which has been dipped in water and wrung as dry as possible. Use a flat beater. The damp cloth takes up the dust.

Cold-Water Tinting

(Copyright 1927)

There are lots of "prepared tints" for home tinting of your dainty lingerie, but did you ever try real dye-tinting with a real dye? You get glorious effects when you begin with the true tones that only real dyes can impart to fabrics!

An envelope of the actual dye powder is only fifteen cents at any drug store. Sift a bit in cold water—dip the garment—and it's done. Only, you'll have a smooth, even tone just exactly like materials have when bought; none of that streaky look; never weak or "washy," no matter how much you dilute or lighten the color. Furthermore, you can "set" the tint if you want, by merely having the water boil.

Every drug store has Diamond dyes, color cards and suggestions for exquisite tinting or regular, permanent dyeing of anything. Or, write for Color Craft—a marvelous book of ideas in full colors; free from DIAMOND DYES, Dept. N33, Burlington, Vermont.

Corn Borer Control

is the title of a 28 page circular recently issued by me, price 50 cents. It not only is shown there, that, relying mainly upon control measures to be used while the insect is dormant—the official way will necessarily fail to secure really satisfactory results, but that control can and must take place during the growing season by attacking the moths and very young larvae, if such results are desired. If interested in this problem, or in insect control in general, send for my free Circulars Nos. 154-A and B. Fred Reinlein, 144 W. Kilpatrick St., Portland, Ore.

Feel Stiff and Achy?

TO feel constantly lame and achy is too often a sign of sluggish kidneys.

Sluggish action permits waste poisons to remain in the blood and is apt to make one languid, tired and achy, with dull headaches, dizziness and often a nagging backache. A common warning that the kidneys are not acting right is scanty or burning secretions.

Assist the kidneys at such times with Doan's Pills. Since 1885 Doan's have been winning friends the country over. Ask your neighbor!

50,000 Users Endorse Doan's!

George Passmore, 23 Orange St., Bridgeton, N. J., says "My kidneys were not acting right and the secretions were scant and painful. Every morning I felt tired and languid and my back was so lame I had to have assistance in dressing. I started using Doan's Pills and in a short time was in splendid health. I gladly recommend Doan's."

The old home town is the one that observes your success in the city and wonders how you keep folks fooled.

There's a time in the life of every St. Joe man when he wonders how some fellows manage to accumulate money and friends at the same time.

—:-:—

In the United States every child has a chance to become president. In Mexico the same opportunity is open to every bandit.

—:-:—

One reason why some boys never get very far on the road to success is because it looks so rough they're afraid to start on it.

—:-:—

A woman's handkerchief and her umbrella always strike us as two things that never are big enough for their jobs.

—:-:—

His socks may have holes in them, but father never gets a chance to have any holes burned in his pockets from carrying money in them.

—:-:—

If women made patch-work quilts these days they could take a whole skirt and wouldn't have to waste time cutting it up.

—:-:—

The first thing every June groom is going to learn is that it's a lot easier to make a woman mad than it is to make her happy.

—:-:—

France is mad at her because her flyers failed to reach the United States. Maybe we did make the Atlantic ocean a little too wide.

—:-:—

The St. Joe citizen who can tell the kind of vegetables he planted from the kind that came up is no longer in the amatuen class.

—:-:—

Dentists say that our teeth "need exercise." But how can we exercise them when dentists won't let us keep them?

—:-:—

The world would be a much better place to live in if a lot of people would learn to give in.

—:-:—

How many St. Joe women can remember when young people at the courting age were acquainted with the language of the flowers?

—:-:—

When you find a man who is a wild animal at home you will generally find he is married to a tame kitten

—:-:—

It is pretty hard to make a woman understand that it is easier to drive a man than an automobile.

—:-:—

Maybe more young men would marry if they could get their wives like they do their flivvers—on the installment plan.

A TIMELY SUBJECT

With schools closing their regular terms is seems rather timely to have a letter from a teacher-subscriber who resides not so many miles from St. Joe. She says: "I don't believe there is any harder work under the sun than teaching, unless it is that of the minister, nor do I believe there is any other that does more good in the world, unless it is the minister's work. With this a fact, why is it that ministers and teachers are no better paid now than they were years ago. Why is it that these two professions are the most poorly paid of all?"

We've asked the same question a good many times ourselves, but up to this time we've never had a satisfactory answer. Teaching and preaching are both hard work, yet even that part of it can be left out of an argument concerning wages and the fact will still remain that, in proportion to importance, no other professions mean as much to the world. But the members of other professions without a single exception, unless it be the newspaper profession, get for better pay for their labor.

We are not arguing for an increase in anyone's taxes. But if it would give ministers and teachers the pay to which they are really entitled, we'd say "boost the taxes a little and cut at some other point to even it up." We have good schools in this community and excellent churches, and we have in them capable and earnest teachers and preachers. Simply because they are willing to work for small salaries is no reason why they should be doing so. There is something wrong with a system that permits a common laborer to earn more than is paid to members of a profession worth far more to the world than any other.

HERE'S ANOTHER WAR

Another war has started and another army is in the field. This time our own nation is the battleground. The United States Department of Agriculture has recruited an army of experts to fight the corn borer, and with a complete campaign mapped out to cover the entire spring and summer, actual hostilities have started.

Under present plans the government will meet with its own funds the cost of cleaning up corn fields and breeding places where the corn borer is expected to soon bring forth his fast multiplying family. But in cases where a farmer refuses to do so, or cannot find the time, the government will put its experts on his property and clean it up for him.

The damage caused by corn borers within the past two or three seasons has been far-reaching. No section can escape its share of the damage for anything that destroys a vast part of the nation's corn crop hits at the pocket of every citizen. Few residents of St. Joe would feel the effect of the corn borer's activity directly. But indirectly, in the price of commodities or a serious shortage of corn products, it would have an effect on them. It is too serious a matter to pass un-noticed. Uncle Sam knows that, and that is why he is going to spend several million dollars within the next few months in wiping the nation free of this pest. When we stop to consider the disaster the corn-borer has wrought in the past few years we must agree that it will be money well expended.

OUR FLYING FOOL

The St. Joe citizens who can't see any great good wrought by the young American who added a new chapter to the history of the world by flying across the Atlantic ocean ought to take a day off and do a litle serious studying. In the first place, it demonstrated the spirit of youth. In the second place it proved that courage is as great now as at any time in the history of the human race. But above all, it sets an example for the young men of this nation that cannot help but be of value to them, for it shows that opportunity still waits around the corner for any boy who really wants to do things. Men of money and flying experience and with the backing of entire nations have failed in their attempt to fly across the Atlantic. Here is a strip of a lad with but an ordinary education, very litle money and no government recognition today the hero of the world. And all because he had faith in his own ability. That it seems, ought to be worth enough to American boys to make the Atlantic flight worth far more than anyone can measure or estimate.

THAT SWEET TOOTH

There was a time when we had to smile if we ran across a St. Joe grown-up carrying around a sack of candy—and eating it himself. We used to think candy was intended only for the kids, and that older ones were supposed to indulge only along about Christmas time. But it's different now, and both old and young make candy a big part of their diet. In fact, the whole nation has developed a sweet tooth, for last year the average consumption of sugar was 100 pounds to each person. In 1918 it was only 78 pounds. Figures show that three gallons of ice cream are consumed each year now for every person in the United States, with chocolate candy and soda-water a close second. Whether or not prohibition caused the increase in sugar consumption is the cause of many arguments. But at any rate many a patron of the old corner saloon has transferred his trade to the drug store soda fountain and confectionary, and nobody seemse to be the worse for it.

TOO MANY HOLIDAYS

The District of Columbia has set a pretty good example by refusing to allow its public schools to observe any more special days or special weeks. It found that setting aside this day or that week for some particular purpose was interfering with regular school work. Hereafter only the long honored and cherished holidays will be observed. And we don't know but it is a very good idea. So far as both our schools and our business is concerned, we could get along very well without so many holidays. Every St. Joe citizen has a feeling now and then that he isn't getting out of one holiday until it is time to celebrate another. Even if they are not expensive from the standpoint of actual money they mean a loss of time, and that's about the same thing. Let's stick to the old-time holidays we already have and quit adding to the list others that really mean nothing more than an invitation to take another day off.

THE EUROPEAN CORN BORER

We read in Emersonian ode
How, down along the Concord road,
"By the rude bridge that arched the flood,"
Stout formers in the April mud
Made good the challenge they had hurled
And fired the shot heard round the world."
Right here and now as loud as then
There sounds a call for Minute Men
A state of war exists once more;
A foreign foe is on our shore.
We rightfully apply the term
To this here new corn borer worm.
He is a cautious coot, dodrot him;
He won't come out where we can swat him.
Within the cornstalk armor snug,
His tunnels, here and yonder dug,
Cause breaking over of the tassels
And likely tell you where he wrastles.
Just cutting up a stalk or so
Will show the cuss in status quo.
Ensile the crop where he is seen,
Plow all the weeds and stubble clean.
If every weed and stalk go under,
You're sure to bother him like thunder.
I aim to land a hearty swat
When he appears on my back lot,
And trust that men with broader acres
Will not be idle belly achers,
But smite instead his solar plexus
Before his sons are born to vex us.
O, let us rise and cruah the stranger
Who puts the Indiana corn in danger.
Or if we can't destroy him quite,
Let's make him know he's in a fight.

The C. C. Club was pleasantly entertained on Friday afternoon with Mrs. Flossie Rhoads. Contests were won by Mrs. Ruby tests were wonby Mrs. Ruby Krafft and Mrs Jennie Walter.

B. L. Smith and family left Thursday for their new home in Michigan. The young people from the Methodist church gave them a farewell party on Wednesday evening. Pot luck dinner was served and games were enjoyed.

The Epworth League of the M. E. Church elected their officers for the next year as follows: President, Margaret Koch; First Vice Pres., Clarice Hahn; Second Vice Pres., Mrs. Cleo Reed; Third Vice Pres., Gale Bowser; Fourth Vice Pres., Ada Bowser; Secretary, Ercile Steward; Treasurer, Kent McCrory; Pianist, Janice Wade and Chorister, Mary Wade.

A. J. Smith will show free pictures near Beams store on Saturday night.

Joseph Bice and family, of near Huntertown, spent Sunday at the Frank Hollabaugh home.

Mrs. Effie Squires and John Squires, of Fort Wayne, spent Sunday with Miss Rilla Beam.

The Ladies Aid of the Methodist church will meet on Friday afternoon with Mrs. Hazel Steward.

A bake sale will be held on Saturday at the postoffice, to be in charge of the Epworth League. 22t1.

Roy Bowser and wife, of St. Joe and J. L. Reed and wife, were Sunday dinner guests of Raymond Bowser and family.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Strebe and sons, of Pontiac, Michigan, were weekend guests of Mr. and Mrs. Joel Betz. Clyde Souers and son, LaVern, of Tecumseh, Mich., and Ben Souers, of Fort Wayne, were callers Sunday evening in the same home.

NEWVILLE

Chicago papers at News office.

Many people visited the Newville cemetery Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Miller, of Auburn, were the Sunday guests of Mrs. Mary Mitchell.

Elmer McDonald was a Sunday and Monday guest of the John Miller family and attended Memorial services.

Glen Miller, of Ordway, Colorado, was the Sunday guest of Mr. and Mrs. Mack Hatch. Mr. and Mrs. Hatch, Sr., were also dinner guests in the same home.

L. A. Hosac, wife, son, sister and two friends, all of Chicago, called at the John Miller home a short time Sunday enroute to Edgerton, Ohio.

Memorial Day was observed here Monday afternoon. A crowd was in attendance, Rev. P. A. Hubartt delivered the address. R. D. Hendershot had charge of the singing and the children decorated the graves.

Mrs. John Miller and Mrs. Dewey Miller called on Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Wilson, Monday evening, both Mr. and Mrs. Wilson were seriously injured and have been mentioned in the items. Mrs. Wilson is improving slowly and can get about a little on crutches. Mr. Wilson remains quite poorly, he is suffering not so much with his broken limb but with pleurisy in his right side.

THE YEAR TO GROW ALFALFA

Thus far in May, there has been only five days when it has not rained. The only farmer who can see it rain again without having the blues is the one who has seeded a liberal acerage of alfalfa. The more rain, the more alfalfa and fortunately alfalfa forms nearly a balanced ration for every farm animal save the hen.

Three hundred years ago, the Indians taught the white men in Massachusetts how to grow corn. They laboriously cleared a small open space in the forest, then they planted three grains of flint corn in the hill, put two fish and a handful of ashes beside the kernals, covered them up, hoed a little during the summer and they grew corn. To plant a tenth of an acre under such conditions meant that they must work from sun up to sun down. But now, all is different. A man jumps on to his corn planter in the morning, the kernels are checked mechanically, the fertilizer is dribbled through two fertilizer boxes which contain all that the fish contained but in more concentrated form. No one fails with corn any more. Why? Because experience has taught them what is necessary to grow corn.

And so it is with alfalfa. It is no experiment any more. So many farmers have grown it that the elements that make for success are known. These are easily set down. Some limestone in the soil, good drainage, some easily available phosphate, good winter hardy seed, inoculation for the seed, and a well packed seedbed.

Ever notice how sweet clover grows along the hard packed sides of the road? A well packed seedbed.

Does your soil contain enough limestone? See the county agent. He has an outfit and can tell you for certain in a very few minutes.

Use only certified Ontario Varigated or Grimm seed.

Use commercial inoculation of some kind of which there are several good brands on the market.

Supply what alfalfa requires and it is no "experiment."

A QUESTION: TO BEND AND NOT BREAK

Lile Mae Marshall Writes Concrning the Home Education of the Child.

A small man of less than three years marched up to the sink with a haughty command, "'Ant dink!" "Say 'please'," replied his mother, reaching for a drinking glass. "I 'ant dink," again commanded the boy. "Say 'please'," kindly insisted the mother, holding the glass of water in her hand as she waited for the child to obey. "'Ant dink," with an angry stamp of his little foot. "Son," said his mother, "you can not have a drink until you say 'please,' and ask for it nicely." "I 'ant a dink," stubbornly answered the baby, tilting his head back and looking his mother full in the eyes with such a defiant expression it made her catch her breath. She realized he had been playing hard and was warm and no doubt very thirsty. She wished she had quietly handed him a drink, ignoring the slight lapse in manners. However, she had gone too far to let it pass now, for he must be taught obedience as well as manners. "No, Son, you must ask Mother properly for a drink," answered his mother. He began to whimper and insist on a drink. His mother placed the glass she had been holding in her hand on the table, and seating herself, lifted the child to her lap, feeling at her wits' end. She coaxed him, telling him how easy it would be to say the one little word "please" as he always had done. She could not induce him to obey her, as she soon realized. It was near the dinner hour, and she had older children, her husband and help to cook for, so felt she must use other methods. At last, her patience tried almost to the breaking point, she arose and taking the small rebel by the hand, told him, "Now, Son, unless you are a good boy, and say 'please' as you know you should—Don't you?" interrupting herself. The small head slowly nodded.—"I'm going to put you in the bedroom all by yourself, until you learn to behave properly. I'll leave the shades up, and let the sunshine in, but you must stay by yourself until you think you are a good boy." With a lump in her throat, she opened the bedroom door, but before leading her baby in, she raised him in her arms, and kissing him, coaxed, "Won't you please tell Mother 'please' for a drink?" Two little arms slid around her neck, but the firmly set lips remained silent. "All right," said the mother, "I'll just have to put you in here alone, until you are ready to be good. When you are, you can come out." She set the child on a chair and going out quietly, closed the door. Time and again, the mother opened the door, only to be met with a stony, defiant stare and tightly closed lips in answer to her inquiry as to his yielding to the law of obedience. She felt like letting the young rebel go but knew she must not do it for his sake. It would have been far the easier way, though. At last, when the afternoon was well advanced, the door opened softly with, a "Please, Muvver, I 'ant a dink." With a sigh of thankfulness, the mother snatched her boy up, and half smothering him with kisses, on his head and cheeks, she hurriedly gave him a drink and his belated dinner.

The experience cost the mother tears and heartache, but her firmness paid. Son learned a lesson he has never forgotten, though today he stands head and shoulders above his mother.

An idle brain is the advance agent of a busy tongue.

Oscar Burnier, in a complaint filed in the DeKalb circuit court, says that on September 1, 1926, he entered into a contract to sell foxes and do other work as a salesman for Herman Reasoner and H. G. Horrel, for which he was to be paid $25 a week salary and $75 comission for each pair of foxes he sold. He states that he worked for the defendants twenty-five weeks and sold twenty-five pairs of foxes, but was paid only $590. He asks for a judgment of $1,900. His attorney is Richard W. Sharpless.

NOTES ON SERVICE

Some departments of the Bible School are taking on new life. Shall we not with this growing season, all reach out into newness of life?

The sick and those shut-in all have the earnest sympathy and prayers of the church.

The minister has expressed a desire to be of the largest possible service to the community. Can't we help him to make religion a living reality in the conduct of life?

The preaching service was based on the 37th Psalm. A note of confidence for the loyal people of God ran through the exposition of the Psalm.

What is to be, will be since God still lives and rules with power. The wicked shall be cut off and the Lord shall help and deliver, and save them that trust in Him; hence, the trusting, obedient souls may rest in the Lord and wait patiently for Him, for their inheritance shall be forever.

MONEY THAT WORKS

A MAN visited our bank a few weeks ago who had just sold some property.

HE WAS not ready to invest the money again for a few months but he did not want the money to 'loaf' and earn nothing for him during that time.

SO HE wanted to know what he could do with the money to make it earn some profit and be available in case he needed it.

OF COURSE we suggested a Certificate of Deposit. You can have a "C. of D.," for any amount and continue it as long as you wish. It pays a nice profit, too.

THERE IS no better plan for your money that is not otherwise employed. Let us tell you more about this plan.

What's the Answer...?

Here is a new feature that will provide profitable entertainment for all of our readers. In each issue we will print a series of twenty questions covering such subjects as history, science, geography, literature, arithmetic, religion, sports, economics, famous sayings, natural history and other things. In this issue we start the series with the first twenty questions. Our next issue will carry the answer to these questions and another set of twenty, and so on over a period of several months. Try to answer these questions as they appear in each issue. To do so, to search for the answers that you do not know, will add materially to your store of valuable information. This new, "What's the Answer" department is an educational feature of unusual value. Cut out the questions, keep them until the answers appear in the next issue and then see how near correct your own answers have been. Follow it from issue to issue and you will find it fascinating.

Accidents That Have Made Big Industries

A piece of cheese tossed by one workman at another during the luncheon hour missed its mark and dropped into the plating bath used in the production of copper disks from which wax phonograph records were stamped. Later the disks from that bath were found to be far superior to the others, and an investigation revealed that the casein in the cheese had done the trick. This disclosed a possible improvement worth thousands of dollars to the manufacturer. Telephone engineers discovered that an alloy of nickel and iron, when produced in the form of a narrow ribbon and wound around the copper core of a submarine cable, would increase the speed of the cable six times. The only trouble was that no one seemed able to find a flux that would weld the ends of the ribbon into a solid piece. One day a workman jokingly said: "Let's try salt." Picking up the shaker from his luncheon pail, he started to sprinkle the salt over the flux, when the cover fell off the shaker and the salt poured over the weld. This started a chemical action that united the edges, and the problem was solved. A scientist in France, while experimenting in his laboratory, inadvertently opened the wrong valve. Before he could rectify his mastake several drops of moisture settled in a glass tube that was part of the apparatus. His elation knew no bounds, for here at last was the end of the long search for liquid oxygen. Again an accident created an industry and gave us an explosive far safer and mightier than dynamite.—Floyd W. Parsons in the Saturday Evening Post.

Prophecy Fulfilled

There are several lakes or streams in different parts of the world with which are connected strange stories. One is Lake Chrissie, four miles from Ermelo, in the eastern Transvaal. When the Dutch emigrants from the Cape first settled in the Transvaal an old Kaffir medicine man predicted that some day the lake would become dry, and then the Boers would lose their independence. This prophecy was fulfilled when the Boers were subjugated by the British.

They have found that Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those heretofore chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens or upsets the most delicate girl or woman. RIGHT! He will exterminate them all!

Peterman's Roach Food exterminates every roach in your house.

It entices roaches from their hiding places. They carry it on their legs and bodies back to their nests. They wriggle over all the others there, even their young and their eggs.

Every one dies and disintegrates. No odor. Nothing to left but a little dry dust.

Don't try to fight roaches with a spray. No spray can possibly reach the roaches, the young and the eggs far behind the baseboards and under the floors.

Only the right powder can do that.

Peterman's Roach Food is the right powder.

Here is the right insecticide for each insect:

LAVISH LACE ON THE BRIDE; CHIC GOING-AWAY COSTUME

WEDDING bells! What visions of transcendent loveliness are they destined to ring in, with the coming of summer, for bridal processions with each succeeding season seem to be taking on an ever increasing picturesqueness.

If lace were not to contribute a major share of beauty to the bride's costume, it would be surprising indeed, for this is pre-eminently a lacy season. To such an extent has lace captured the fancy of the mode, that not only is the bride swathed in lace, but the apparel of the guests presents a galaxy of frocks and wraps styled of lace. For these, preference is shown Chantilly either colorfully dyed or in black or ecru and even the metal laces retain their share of style prestige.

For the bride, be her gown of satin, georgette, crepe or supple velvet, lace elaboration marks its styling. The picture presents a winsome exponent of the lace-garnitured bridal robe as exploited among present-day modes. In addition to insets of rare lace there are innumerable frilly lace edgings running hither and thither in pretty confusion. The hemline takes on a graceful deep scalloping which adds yet another charm to this frock. Nor is this penchant for lace confined to the dress, for its mission to beautify and adorn extends to the veil which it borders most daintily.

Independent of any suggestion of trimming are the smart and very new tulle bridal gowns. For the young and slender bride a bouffant tulle frock is exquisite. For the stately bride gleaming white satin of simple silhouette, as ever, ranks as a classic.

Your choice, June bride-elect—for your going-away costume, either a smart short-jacket tailored suit, or a three-piece ensemble of beige crepe, faille silk or fine worsted, or a stunning long coat posed over a simple little crepe frock. Which shall it be?

Considering the tremendous vogue now on for the two-piece tailleur, one is tempted to make it first choice, especially if the bride-to-be is possessed of a youthful slender figure. If one has the happy faculty of wearing a suit attractively, then select the suit,

For the bride's honeymoon trip such a suit as here pictured, is of assured appeal. It is tailored of finest navy twill, being braided most exquisitely at the front coatee edges, which are so designed as to reveal a clever satin waistcoat in burnt toast coloring. The molded-to-the-head hat is of navy grosgrain ribbon. Note especially the handsome pointed fox neckpiece thrown over the arm. The last word to fashionables is the separate fur of either pointed, platinum or beige fox.

If not a suit, then perhaps the bride may decide upon a three-piece ensemble. The latest is the beige jumper or one-piece frock of crepe or faille or tucking, accompanied by a full-length coat of velveteen in perfectly matched coloring. If one prefers the coat may be of the same material as the dress, in which instance there should be a long collar of matched moire with a conspicuous bow of the same somewhere on the coat.

The de luxe bride can also well afford to take with her one of the new chenille woven coats as shown to the left in the picture. It is delightfully colorful, yet in no way transgresses the laws of good taste.

PETER PREACHING TO GENTILES

LESSON TEXT—Acts 10:1-11:18.

GOLDEN TEXT—For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek; for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon Him.—Rom. 10:12.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Tells a Foreigner About Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Peter Takes the Gospel to Gentiles.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Taking the Gospel to All Races.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How the Gospel Overcomes Race Prejudice.

The missionary program of the church having broadened to include the Samaritans, we see in this lesson it still widening and embracing the Gentiles. Through the conversion of Cornelius, the "middle wall of partition" was broken down (Eph. 2:4).

I. Cornelius (10:1, 2).

1. His official position (v. 1).

He was a Roman officer over a company of 100 soldiers.

2. His character (v. 2).

(1) A devout, pious man. (2) He was a praying man. (3) He was charitable. He gave much alms. (4) He was respected by his family.

II. The Supernatural Preparation for the Transition of the Gospel to the Gentiles (10:3-33).

This was of divine arrangement. No barrier is too great to prevent the coming together of persons whom the Lord desires to meet. In order to bring this about:

1. Two visions were given.

(1) The vision of Cornelius (vv. 3-8).

While engaged in prayer, an angel of God announced that his prayer and alms had come before God as a memorial, and instructed him to send to Joppa for Peter who would tell him what to do.

(2) The vision of Peter (vv. 9-16).

This took place while Peter was praying (v. 9). He saw a certain vessel containing clean and unclean animals let down from heaven, and heard the command, "Rise, Peter, kill and eat." Peter protested that he had never eaten any unclean thing. God replied, "What God hath cleansed, that call not thou common."

2. A messenger sent from Cornelius (vv. 17-22).

Peter was greatly perplexed over what he had seen, but not for long, for messengers from Cornelius made inquiry at the gate for him. The spirit informed Peter of the matter and bade him go, nothing doubting.

3. The meeting of Cornelius and Peter (vv. 23-33).

(1) Peter took six witnesses along (v. 23).

(2) Cornelius waiting for Peter (v. 24).

He called together his kinsmen and near friends.

(3) Cornelius about to worship Peter (vv. 25, 26).

Peter repudiated his act and protested that he was but a man.

(4) The reciprocal explanation (vv. 27-33).

III. Peter's Sermon (vv. 34-43).

1. The introduction (vv. 34, 35).

He showed that God is no respecter of persons. This does not mean that Cornelius was already in a state of grace, thereby saved, but that he was eligible to hear the gospel and accept the terms of salvation.

2. His discourse (vv. 36-43).

In the discourse he touches briefly upon the mission of Jesus, showing that by means of His baptism and anointing with the Holy Spirit, He was qualified for His work as mediator. He then exhibited the work of Christ:

(1) In His life (vv. 36-39).

It was one of beneficence. He went about doing good, even casting out demons as a proof that God was with Him (v. 38).

(2) In His death (v. 39).

The just suffered for the unjust that He might bring us to God (I Pet. 3:18).

(3) In His resurrection (vv. 40, 41).

In this discourse is set forth:

(a) The basis of salvation—the crucifixion of Christ.

(b) The scope of salvation—whosoever believeth in Him.

(c) The method of appropriating salvation—believing on Him.

IV. The Holy Spirit Poured Out (vv. 44-48).

This was a new Pentecost.

V. Peter Vindicates His Ministry to the Gentiles (11:1-18).

THE DEPARTMENT OF CONSERVATION, STATE OF INDIANA, DIVISION OF FISH AND GAME

The acts of the 1927 General Assembly of the State of Indiana became effective May 15th. when Governor Ed. Jackson issued his proclamation. The new acts contain many changes and additions to fish and game laws. What is necessary and of great importance is that the people know these laws. Unless they do, many surely will violate them. It is the duty of the Department of Conservation to give wide publiciy to the new acts. By so doing violations will be held at a minimum, and the purpose of the new acts accomplished. Much publicity has already been given to the new laws but without doubt, only a small per cent of the people at present really know them. The press of the State has rendered valuable service in giving information relative to the matter. The information service of the Department handled by Charles H. Parrish, has sent out many news letters to daily and weekly newspapers, and the Division of Fish and Game of the Department in its monthly bulletins has kept all of the organized sportsmen's clubs of the State informed as to changes made. Posters, folders and booklets of the laws have been printed and sent for distribution to county clerks and game wardens. Notwithstanding all this, it is deemed wise to again mention in this paper and future ones the important changes made by the legislature. For the information of persons who trap or hunt fur-bearing animals in this State would advise that no changes whatever were made in the laws protecting fur-bearing animals, but hereafter every person trapping off his own premises mua have a license, which heretofore was not necessary. The most important changes in fish and game laws made were:

1. That residents must have a license to fish is fishing out of their own county. The new resident license now includes trapping, along with fishing and hunting. The cost is $1.00, the same as formerly. Hereafter all such licenses will terminate on the last day of the year, the same as an auto license, expires annually. Persons holding old licenses that have not expired can use them until they run out, but no longer. Children under 18 need no license to fish, but women must have license to fish now. A married woman can no longer fish on her husband's license.

2. Non-resident fishing licenses now cost $2.25, and terminate with the calendar year. Those issued prior to the taking effect of the new laws, and those unexpired from 1926 will be valid for the term for which they were issued Children under 18 exempted only.

3. Non-resident hunting, fishing and trapping licenses now made to expire with the calendar year. Like the two above, old unexpired licenses are good until they run out. The price of these licenses remains the same, $15.50. Some persons have inquired if holding an unexpired license did not give them the right to hunt and fish under the laws in force at the time the license was issued. The answer to this is that the new laws must be followed.

4. From now on persons are required to have license to take fish with seines, nets and traps from the Wabash river where it forms the boundary between Indiana and Illinois, such licenses expiring annually on January 1st. For each 100 yards of seine, gill net, trammel net or fraction thereof, the licensee, is a resident must pay $10.00, per year for a license. If a non-resident $40.00.

A license to use hoop nets, cast nets or other kind of net, or a fish trap costs a resident $5.00 per year. The cost for a non-resident is $20.00. The number of seines, nets or traps paid for, are set forth on the license. Under the new law all seines, nets and traps must be held within one mile of boundary waters. Any devices along the Wabash river State line, not tagged, will be confiscated; also those found with improper tags. The possession of a spear or gig is now unlawful anywhere in this State, and can no longer be used on the Wabash river in boundary waters as formerly. Wabash river licenses can be secured only direct from the Division of Fish and Game.

5. Mussel license is now required by all persons taking mussels for commercial purposes from Indiana waters. A resident is required to pay $2.00, and a non-resident $15.00 for such license. They erpire annually on the last day of February. Under the law the minimum size at which mussels can be taken is two inches. Only one boat with a trailer can be used, nor more than two 20-foot bars. The Department has authority to close certain parts of rivers to the taking of mussels for five years or less, but this section of law will not be put into operation until 1928. Mussel licenses are also issued only from the Division's office at Indianapolis, by sending proper fee and return address.

6. Indiana game laws now conform to the regulations of the United States Department of Agriculture as relates to the protection of Migratory game birds except, that under Indiana laws, the bag limits are less on ducks, geese and brant. Indiana laws permit one to kill 15 ducks per day. The bag is 6 on geese and brant. Under federal regulations 25 ducks and 8 geese and brant is the daily bag limit. On account of Indiana laws being more stringent they must be observed. Several changes have been made in the federal regulations since the legislature adjourned. Notice of these will be brought later to the atention of huntres.

7. The following species of fish are now protected by a close season, May 1st to June 16th: Large and small-mouth bass, silver or yellow bass, pickerel, pike, yellow perch, pike-perch or wall-eye, bluegill, crappies, often called calico bass, strawberry bass rock bass, known as goggle-eye and red-eye, and the red-eared sunfish, also called buffalo sunfish. Bag limits are 6 per day on all kinds of bass combined; 25 on bluegills, crappie, rock bass and red-eared sunfish combined, and 6 on pike-perch or wall-eye. No bag limit on pickerel or yellow perch. The length limits on fish now effective are 11 inches on the two kinds of black bass; 10 inches on silver or yellow bass; 15 inches on pike or pickerel; 15 on perch or wall-eye; 6 inches on crappie; 7 inches on yellow perch, and 5 inches on bluegill, rock bass and red-eared sunfish. Common sunfish may be taken at any time in any number, or any size.

8. The open season on rabbits will be October 1st to January 10, with daily bag limit of 10 per day. The sale of rabbits in close season is prohibited. The open season on squirrels is now August 1st to November 1st, with bag limit of 5 per day. No close season or bag limit on red squirrels, (commonly called piney.) Fox squirrels, gray and other squirrels are all protected. It is now unlawful to sell any squirrel at any time except for breeding purposes.

9. The minimum fine for violation of the new acts is $10.00 with a maximum fine of $200.00. A jail sentence of 6 months may be added for certain violations of the new laws, as for instance, for spearing or netting fish illegally.

FACTS about used car allowances

Most new car sales now involve the trading-in of a buyer's used car. More and more people are asking: "Why should my used car seem to have several values?.... Why should dealers in different makes of cars offer me allowances differing materially?.... Does the largest allowance offered mean the best deal for me?"

Here are basic facts:

1 Your used car has seemingly different values because competitive dealers are bidding to sell you a new car.

2 Your used car has only one fundamental basis of value: what the dealer who accepts it in trade can get for it in the used car market.

3 The largest trade-in allowance which is offered on your used car is not necessarily the best deal for you. Sometimes it is; but sometimes it is not.

4 An excessive allowance may mean that you are paying an excessive price for the new car in comparison with its real value.

5 Judge the merits of the new car in comparison with its price, including all delivery and finance charges. Then weigh any difference in allowance offered on your used car.

WHEN YOU are ready to trade-in your present car, remember that after all you are making a purchase and not a sale. You are buying a new car and simply applying your present car as a credit toward the purchase price of a new car.

GAME CLUB HOLDS MEETING FRIDAY NIGHT

The first meeting of the year, of the St. Joe Fish and Game Protective Association, was held at the school house last Friday evening with a good attendance. 111 members are reported on the new roll with prospects of others joining. After the regular order of business, H. M. Widney gave a talk on the value of the association as a community organization and also the possibilities of building up the population of the streams.

Mr. I. W. Pence, deputy warden was called on for remarks and said the association was a wonder and that much credit was due it, in creating an obedience to law in this community. Sentiment is changing in the enforcement of the conservation laws and people are realizing that the law is for the good of all who enjoy fishing and hunting, by conserving the game at the time of the year when they need protection. Ninety per cent of those who violate the laws, when caught, lie and ninety per cent of those who are caught committing violations cannot afford to pay fines. No law will make a man honest, but it will help to curb his actions. The man who willfully goes against the law is a gambler, because he takes the chance of getting by or being caught in such violation. While the license law is not just to all sportsmen, it is hoped that a universal license law will be passed, making every person hunting or fishing anywhere, to possess a license, thus the fishermen will be helping to keep up their own particular sport and not only the one who enjoys hunting, as all moneys from hunting licenses is used in the propagation of fish.

Mr. Long, another deputy warden and partner of Mr. Pence, talked on the conservation idea now being a nation wide movement, practically every state taking up the idea. The spirit of the community has much to do with enforcement of the law. When wardens appear in communities many times they get information that leads to arrests while in other communities especially in lake regions, the dinner bell rings the minute the warden is seen, as a warning to those who might be on the lake fishing.

Ed Storer gave a negro political speech that caused much amusement.

Different methods of conservation, not only for game, but for birds were discussed and the idea of burning off grasses on lands not usable, was discouraged and also cleaning off of thickets destroys the shelter of our song birds.

The old rail fence has provided more real protection to the quail than anything else in the winter time, but with the modern wire fence, all shelter has been destroyed, which drives the quail to other quarters.

The matter of an association picnic was discused and the affair will be made for the public. Special program along the line of conservation will be made and state men will appear on the program. Date announced later.

A special committee composed of F. B. Leighty, Wilbur Yeiser and C. A. Woodcox will make up the program for the day.

The meeting night of the association has been changed from Friday night to the third Monday night of each month.

The 1927-28 game law bulletins are posted in the Harman Meat Market, J. C. Hull and L. B. Meek Barber Shops, Furnish Tire Shop and Wm. Allen Barber Shop. These are for your inspection but are to be left hanging in these business houses.

Ice cream and cake was served in the Domestic Science room and the boys sure did enjoy the sociable part of the evening. Light and dark cake gallore was served.

The next meeting will probably be made public and motion pictures will be shown.

COUNTY COUNCILMEN VOTE FOR PAVEMENT

Approve Hard Surfacing of Auburn-Fort Wayne Road by a Vote of 4 to 3

The county council met Tuesday morning in special session to act upon the petition for the paving of the Auburn-Fort Wayne road.

The council viewed the road, as required by law, when it met a month ago, but County Attorney W. D. Stump advised that it would be necessary to again view it Tuesday to comply with the letter of the law.

It was decided to make the trip over the highway before dinner and to meet after dinner to vote whether the improvement of the highway would be a public utility.

When the council reconvened after dinner the members conferred with County Auditor Estell Dawson, County Highway Superintendent Byron Platt and County Attorney W. D. Stump.

A secret vote then was taken, resulting 4 to 3 in favor of the project.

The commissioners will now set a date for hearing the remonstrance against the viewers' report and also act on the petition to refer the plans and specifications to the engineers of the state highway commission.

TAX BOARD TO VISIT DEKALB COUNTY

County Auditor Estell Dawson, has received word that the state board of tax commissioners will hold a public hearing in the DeKalb county court house Friday morning, June 24, at 10 o'clock.

The purpose, according to the board's notice, is to "obtain such information concerning the true cash value of real estate in the county as will enable it to adjust the valuation thereon for the year 1927, applicable to the various classes of real estate as defined by law, throughout the several counties, townships, cities and towns in the entire state, as provided by section 3, chapter 91, acts of 1927, page 233."

The notice also states that adjustment of individual assessments cannot be made under this law and therefore evidence will not be heard for that purpose.

The law referred to provides that if in the discretion of the state board it is deemed necessary, in order to maintain an equitable and just valuation, that real estate be assessed oftener than every four years the state board shall have the power and authority to order a reassessment in any taxing unit or of any individual owning real estate, but before making an order for a reassessment the board must give notice by publication in two newspapers of the county or by posting.

If you have a complaint to register regarding your assessment, here is your opportunity to do so.

CAMPBELL—LINDLEY

Robert J. Campbell, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank W. Campbell, of Corunna and Miss Mary E. Lindley, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey J. Lindley, of St. Joe, were married at the Methodist parsonage at Auburn, Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock by Rev. G. F. Hubartt. Mr. Campbell is employed at the Auburn Automobile Co. The newlyweds plan to make their home temporarily with the bride's parents at St. Joe. Mrs. Campbell graduated from the Spencerville high school this spring. She has a host of friends who extend best wishes.

POULTRY CLUB TO HAVE MEETING

Everyone is urged to attend the second meeting of the St. Joe Valley Bank Poultry Club next Friday evening, June 10th at the school house. Mrs. Goldsmith, a breeder of Rhode Island Reds, of Spencerville, will be the principal speaker of the evening. Mrs. Goldsmith is bringing a number of slides to illustrate her talk and several preserved specimens of diseased organs.

This meeting is not for just the boys and girls who are members of the poultry club but for everyone who is interested in poultry. Mrs. Goldsmith has been an institute lecturer for several years in phases of poultry production and she will have something worth while to discuss Friday evening.

The prices for eggs and poultry are very low just at the present time but that is no reason for us to loose interest in poultry for according to an old saying, "The lower they go the higher they will rebound."

The poultry club has an enrollment of twenty-two members, most of whom are raising Rhode Island Red chicks. In spite of some heavy losses, the members are doing very nicely with their chicks. The club is sponsored by the St. Joe Valley Bank.

CLOUDBURST WAS GENERAL SATURDAY MORNING

Not only was DeKalb county visited by the heaviest rainfall of the season, Saturday morning, but every direction seemed to bring the same report. Every ditch, creek and river were soon swollen to the level of their banks.

Ye Editor and wife left early in the morning for a trip to Fremont, Ohio, and many places the fields were completely submerged, water had run over the roads in many places and as we neared Bowling Green, O., evidences of a severe wind storm were seen, trees were up-turned, blown across roads and twigs scattered everywhere.

We were particularly nterested in the crops. Much of the corn is up, oats covers the ground and the wheat is starting to head. The clover is exceptionally large and sweet clover is quite extensively sown.

We reached our destination before noon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Merritt A. Hull, who live in the country, and they too reported a heavy rain.

Merritt has launched into the poultry business and now has 1600 White Leghorn chicks about three weeks old, and reports fine luck, having lost only about 150. His first hatching were Barred Rocks and when weighing better than 1½ pounds he disposed of them. He is now constructing a modern hen house 20x60 feet and is contemplating making the poultry business his work.

They were well and enjoying country life. Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Hull spent Sunday and Monday there, while we returned Sunday.

GRIST MILL HAS CHANGED HANDS

We are glad to inform the public that the Co-operative Milling Co., of St. Joe, has disposed of their property to E. W. Woods and John C. Bolman, of Fort Wayne, who are now making necessary repairs so that operations can be resumed shortly in the feed grinding department and then further repairs on the milling machinery will be made for the making of flour.

This announcement will be good news to everyone, as we have had demonstrated the inconvenience of doing without this enterprise and the farming community will surely welcome the new owners of the mill as well as every busiman in St. Joe.

As the gentlemen are millers, and Mr. Woods experience covers forty years, we know they will be in position to meet the needs of the community.

Gentlemen, we welcome you to our town.

His Dancing Captured Her Heart

Four months ago Frank Richie, despite the burden of his eighty-three years was sauntering gaily down the street in Sawtelle, Calif., his shoes shined, his hat at a rakish angle and his eye on the alert for any entrancing femininity. On a porch sat Mrs. Emma Lyckberg, eighty-two years old. Out of the corner of his eye Richie saw her. He noted her fashionably curled bobbed hair, sauntered on to the corner, walked around in a circle, then went back "and made himself acquainted." Soon after he took her to a dance, and she was so entranced with the way he "hoofed it" that she consented to be his wife. They both have been married before and have children and grandchildren.

More days and nights, slipping, characterless, into each other. Being less than a company in strength, the First battalion of the Fifth was not called on to attack again. They lay in their holes and endured. And after certain days the division was relieved. The battalion marched out at night. The drumming thunder of the guns fell behind them and no man turned his face to look again on the baleful lights of the front.

On the road they passed a regiment of the relieving division—full, strong companies of National guardsmen. They went up one side of the road; and in ragged column of twos, unsightly even in the dim and fitful light; the marines plodded down the other side. They were utterly weary, with shuffling feet and banging heads. The division had just done something that those old masters in the art of war, the French, and the world after them, including Ludendorff, were to acknowledge remarkable. They had hurled the Boche from Blanc Mont and freed the sacred city of Rheims. They had paid a price hideous even for this war. And they were spent. If there was any idea in those hanging heads it was food and rest.

The Marine major-general commanding, Lejeune, it is related, went serenely to sleep. And they relate further that a staff colonel who, like Martha, was careful and troubled about many things, came to rouse him with a tale of disaster: "General, general, I have word from the front that a regiment of marines is entirely surrounded by the Germans!"

"Yes, colonel? Well, sir," said the general, sadly and sleepily, "I am sorry for those Germans!"—and returned to his slumbers.

The Guard companies gibed at the shrunken battalion as they passed. Singing and joking they went. High words of courage were on their lips and nervous laughter. Save for a weary random curse here and there, the battalion did not answer. . . .

"Hell, them birds don't know no better. . . ." "Yeh, we went up singin' too, once—good Lord, how long ago! . . . They won't sing when they come out . . . or any time after . . . in this war" . . . "Damn you, can't you march on your own side the road? How much room you need?"

. . . . . .

It was nice, back in billets, resting between battles, to sit on a bench in the sun and watch the world go by. Odette, the strapping and genteel daughter of the baker of Croutte-sur-Marne, here herds the duck Anatole into the courtyard of her mother's bakery. (M. Boulanger was last heard from on the Chemin des Dames; Mme. Boulanger keeps the establishment going.) The duck Anatole has been ordered for dinner by two lieutenants of the First battalion, the consideration being 37 francs 80 centimes. Two privates of the Forty-ninth company are choiring softly "Mademoiselle from Armentieres" as she passes. It is just as well that neither Odette ner Anatole comprend l'anglais.

CHAPTER IX

Monkey-Meat.

In a mangled place called the Wood Northwest of Lucy-le-Bocage two lieutenants of the Marine brigade squatted by a hole the size of a coffin and regarded with attention certain cooking operations. The elder, and perhaps the dirtier of the two, was intent upon a fire-blackened mess-kit, which was balanced on two stones and two German bayonets over a can of solidified alcohol. In the mess-kit was simmering a grayish and unattractive matter with doubtful yellowish lumps, into which the lieutenant fed, discriminatingly, bits of hard bread and frayed tomatoes from a can.

"Do what you will with it," he observed, "monkey-meat is monkey-meat. It's a great pity that damn Tompkins had to get himself bumped off last night when we came out. He had a way with monkey-meat, the kid did—hell! I never have any luck with orderlies!"

The other waited on two canteen cups stilted precariously over a pale-lavender flame. The water in them began to boil, and he supplied coffee—the coarse-ground, pale coffee of the Frogs—with a spoon that shook a little. He considered: "S'pose I'd better boil the sugar in with it," he decided. "There isn't so much of it, you know. We'll taste it more." And he added the contents of a little muslin sack—heavy beet-sugar that looked like sand. His face was pale and somewhat troubled, and his week's beard was straggling and unwholesome. He was not an out-of-doors man—and he was battalion scout officer. A gentlemen over-sensitive for the rude business of war, he would continue to function until he broke—and one sensed that he would suffer while about it. . . .

"I don't like monkey-meat. Before this smell"—he waved his spoon petulantly—"got into my nose I never could eat it. But now you can't smell but one thing, and, after all, you've got to eat."

"What th' Hell, John?"—sniff—sniff! "Has that dead Boche on the other side of you begun to announce hisself? Phew!" The second-in-command rose from the letter he was writing by the stub of a candle and sniffed busily—sniff—snnnn—"Damnation! Captain, it's our supper!" With averted face he presented the grayish chunks of beef that reposed on the mess-tin. "Urggg—throw it out!" He disappeared up the crumbled steps to the entrance of the hole.

A few minutes later he slid down again, followed in a shower of dust and clods by a battalion runner. "All the beef was bad, El Capitan! What the young men are saying about the battalion supply would make your hair curl!—And here's our attack orders."

Troops lay in the wood now; a battalion of the Sixth and two companies of the Fifth regiment outfit, half of which was still in line on the flank of the Bois de Belleau. These companies had come out at dawn, attended by shell-fire; they had plunged into the wood and slept where they halted, unawakened—except the wounded—by the methodical shelling to which the Boche treated the place every day. Now, in the evening, they were awake and hungry. They squatted, each man in his hole, and did what they could about it. A savage-looking lot, in battered helmets and dirty uniforms. But you saw them cleaning their rifles.

The scout officer, with his hand out to lift away the coffee which was, in his judgment, boiled, heard: "Mr. Braxton? Yeh, he's up that away, with the lootenant." "Hey, yuh dog-robbin' battalion runner, you—what's up? Hey?" "Scout officer? Over yonder, him wit' the green blouse—" and a soiled battalion runner, identified by his red brassard and his air of one laden with vital information, clumped up and saluted sketchily.

"Sir, the major wants to see the battalion scout officer at battalion headquarters. The major said: Right away, sir."

The scout officer swore, inexpertly, for he was not a profane fellow, but with infinite feeling. "Good God, I hope it ain't—If you can keep my coffee hot, Tommy—be right back as soon as I can. Save my slum. Don't let anything happen to my slum—" The words trailed in the air as he went swiftly off, buckling his pistol-belt. The battalion commander was that kind of an officer.

The lieutenant growled in sympathy: "Somebody's always takin' the joy out of life. Jim, he's hungry as I am, an' that's as hungry as a bitch wolf. That's the trouble with this war stuff; man misses too many meals. No tellin' what the old man wants. Glad I ain't a scout officer. This war's hard on Jim—he takes it too serious. I'll wait, though." Absently he drank the tomato juice left in the can. He tried his coffee, and burned his mouth. "Wish I had the man here that invented this aluminum canteen cup! Time the damn cup's cool enough so you won't burn the hide off yo' lip, the coffee's stone cold." Then, later: "Not boiled enough Jim, he's used to bein' waited on—never make a rustler, he won't. . . .

"Well, he's long in comin'. Old man sent him forward to make a map or something, most prob'ly." He tasted the slum. "That Tompkins! Why the hell he had to stop one—only man I ever know that could make this monkey-meat taste like anything! And he goes and gets bumped off. Hell! That's the way with these kids. This needs an onion."

The old Boche helmet made an excellent thing to cook with. You jabbed a few holes in it with a bayonet, so's to have a draft, and a mess-kit fitted over it beautifully. When you could get it, strips of high explosive, picked up around a 155-mm. gun position, made the best fuel, giving you a fine, hot, smokeless fire. Smoke was not desirable on the front.

This chap is frying hard bread in bacon grease; he will sprinkle a little beet-sugar on it and have a real delicacy. Filling, too. As he goes about this domestic labor, he is humming "Carry Me Back to Ole Virginny." But the files in the background are attracted by the smell—not the song.

He ate half the mess, with scrupulous exactness, and drank his coffee. He put the lid on the mess-kit, and covered Jim's coffee, now getting cold. He smoked a cigarette and talked shop with his platoon sergeant. He gave some very hard words and his last candle-end to a pale private who admitted blistered heels, and then stood over the man while he tallowed his noisome socks. He interviewed his chaut-chaut gunners, and sent them off to beg new clips from the battalion quartermaster sergeant. It grew into the long French twilight; Boche planes were about, and all the anti-aircraft stuff in the neighborhood was furiously in action.

Old Boche Helmet Made an Excellent Cooking Pot.

Toward dark the Boche began to slam 77s and 150s into the wood northwest of Lucy. It became a place of horror, with stark cries in the night, between the rending crashes of the shells. About an hour before midnight the word was passed and the two companies got out and went up across the pestilential wheat-fields and into the Bois de Belleau.

That same afternoon an unassigned colonel had come up to brigade headquarters. Wanted to go to Paris, he did, and the brigade commander said that the only way to get there was to bring in a prisoner. One prisoner; seven days' leave. Be glad to get a prisoner. Intelligence had word of a new division or so moved in over there last night; identication not yet positive.

This colonel took steps. He was a man of parts and very desirous of the fleshpots of the Place de l'Opera. There was an elegant French captain attached to brigade for no very evident reason—just attached—spoke English and knew vintages. Said to be an expert on raids. The colonel put it up to him in such and such a way: would he go? Yes, but certainly. Just a small raid, My Colonel? Oh, a very small raid. Now, as to artillery support—a map was broken out.

Napoleon Had Planned Unification of Europe

But though he dismisses Fouche from his ministerial post and has the watcher watched, Napoleon cannot get on without him and talks to him about the most private matters.

"Since my marriage people fancy that the lion is asleep. They will soon learn whether I am asleep. I need 800,000 men and have them; I shall tow all Europe in my wake. Europe is nothing more than an old woman and with my 800,000 men I can make her do whatever I please. . . . Did not you yourself say to me, 'You let your genius have its way, because it does not know the word impossible'? How can I help it if a great power drives me on to become dictator of the world? You and the others, who criticise me today and would like me to become a good-natured ruler—have not you all been accessories? I have not yet fulfilled my mission and I mean to end what I have begun. We need a European legal code, a European court of appeal, a unified coinage, a common system of weights and measures. The same law must run throughout Europe. I shall fuse all the nations into one."—From "Napoleon, the Man of Destiny," by Emil Ludwig.

"I see. Then you went over to France, where you met my father. But how did you get rid of that poor young man?"

Her mother looked at her, so terribly embarrassed that for a moment Mary's heart stood still.

"Mary, I—I didn't get rid of him, at once. He came back. I—he—. But I went to France just the same, and—you came, and I never told him. I've never gotten rid of him. Mary, can you forgive me?"

"Forgive you!" Mary leaned forward and clutched her mother tightly. "I haven't anything to forgive. You've always been the best mother in the world."

They clung together for a moment. Mrs. Johnston glad of the excuse to hide her face. Then Mary's voice came to her, slightly muffled by the mass of her own dark hair which had fallen over her mother's ear. "Didn't he know about me, Mother, ever?"

"No."

"Couldn't he guess? I'll have to hate him, you know, if he guessed and didn't follow you."

Polly felt that justice demanded that she lay no more than his due share of blame on the shoulders of Mary's father. "He didn't know I was going," she said, limply. "I ran away from him."

Mary released her mother with a little amazed gasp.

"Poor, poor, Father!"

"Poor Father!" echoed Mrs. Johnston indignantly. "Little he cared for anything but just getting hold of me and my money and dragging me out to his miserable grocery store in Peace Valley."

Mary sat upright, with astonished eyes, gazing at this extraordinary parent of hers. "But Mother! You said Peace Valley. You're dreaming!"

"It's only too real!"

"Then it was our Mr. Dabbs, and am I—I am really Mary Johnston Dabbs, the grocer's daughter?"

"He need never know!"

"He's got to know!" Mary declared. Her mother looked at her determinedly. "I've the right to say whether or not he is to know. I owe him nothing," and in her indignant desire to clear herself in her daughter's eyes, she added a few particulars of the story Claude had told Ned. But from her own angle. She stopped suddenly.

Mary was looking at her with a queer expression, not shocked, but neither was it sympathetic. Mrs. Johnston stumbled on and reached the locked door episode. She would have given worlds never to have begun, but once begun the story must be told, and the facts were the same, though from a quite different angle. She thought it would strengthen her case with her daughter to know that Claude had gone back on his sworn word.

Mary leaned forward with upraised finger and placed it gently across her mother's lips. "I always doubted those wife-in-name-only stories," she said. "Don't try to fool yourself or me. You liked Claude Dabbs more than a little. You singled him out of the crowd in that boarding house. Mother, you were romantic about him even then."

"I was not!" Mrs. Johnston indignantly defended herself.

"Stuff and nonsense!" retorted Mary, rising to the defense of her absent father. "If you hadn't liked him a lot, you would have telephoned and had him put out."

What can a woman say to a daughter like that? Mrs. Johnston said nothing, just sat back and—blushed.

"I'm glad you can blush," Mary went on. "Nice tale to tell a girl who thought she was a poor half-orphan, while all the time she had a perfectly good father keeping a grocery store." Ned Carter's uncle's store, she added to herself. And this thought brought a new joy. Now her mother could not make such a frightful fuss about the grocer's boy.

"Was it because you discovered who the grocer's clerk's uncle was, that you left Clover Hollow?"

Mrs. Johnston nodded. She was frightened at Mary's bringing Ned Carter into this intimate discussion.

"When did you see him? Father, I mean."

"I didn't see him. He wrote me."

"What did he say?"

Then Polly told about the note and the money.

Mary frowned. "I think Father's getting [illegible] well," she remarked. "How much further have you got to run?" she asked casually.

"I don't know," Mrs. Johnston rose abruptly. "We sail Saturday, anyway."

"Mother, don't go like that. I love you more than ever, and from the first minute I saw him, I liked Claude Melnotte Dabbs."

"Mary!" Her mother held her tightly. "You're a perfect darling, but you don't need to lie to make me feel better."

"Cross my heart, Mother," declared Mary. "Hope I may die if I'm not ready to love your Claude. Wouldn't it be glorious if Father only had money enough to come flying after us!"

With this ringing in her ears, Polly Johnston put out the light and left the room.

Left to her own thoughts, Mary found them thronging thick and fast, and she felt so excited she could not sleep. She tried to consider calmly what her mother had told her, but it was not a thing one could consider calmly.

Mary seldom spoke of her own experiences, but she had toiled among the refugees of the late war. She had, child though she was, done yeoman's work with the first awful rush of the wounded, until Mother carried her away lest she break under the strain. Though she had only fetched and carried for trained workers, she had brushed against birth, death and raw wounds, and had stamped forever on her plastic soul the truth that one was either man or woman, or brute beast, and that clothes, money and calling were only camouflage for the human soul.

Mary had her own thoughts in the matter of her father. Claude Melnotte Dabbs must be nice, since Mother had married him and Ned Carter liked him, so Mary was not at all prejudiced as she thought of her big, dark-haired, clean-shaven father.

Mrs. Johnston-Dabbs, to give her proper name, also found it difficult to sleep. The years, she was fond of telling herself, had made her philosophic, but philosophize as she would, she found that retelling her story had taken its toll in nerves and sleep.

Mrs. Johnston believed that mere parenthood gave neither man nor woman ownership or legal rights in human beings. She believed that parents were indeed privileged when their offspring truly loved them. She believed that her child should be utterly free to love her or not, to go from her or stay, as she chose. But oh, if she could only own Mary, body and soul, for a few moments!

Life was going to be very difficult for her, from now on, unless she could get Mary to see the necessity for flight from the pursuing grocer! If Mary were only twelve years old once more!

In the morning Polly Johnston looked like a princess in exile, but she acted like a weary, bored woman, and she had no time for anything but the necessary words required to start them on their work of packing and last-minute shopping. Mary was to attend to the shopping.

Mary had that morning ventured to open the subject, discussed so freely last night, only to find herself snubbed for her pains, as her mother absolutely refused to answer questions.

What Mary did not know was that her mother's attitude had been aggravated by an early morning message to the effect that a Mr. Carter wished to speak to her on the telephone.

Ned had arrived in town at an hour too late for a casual acquaintance to call or telephone, and this morning the hotel operator had called Mrs. Johnston instead of Miss Johnston.

Mrs. Johnston was very gracious when she understood who was speaking. She was glad that he was in town, and quite willing to take any message for Miss Johnston, who had gone out. No, Mrs. Johnston could not tell when her daughter would return to the hotel. Mary was with some dear friends, who might only part with her when they brought her to the steamer in time for sailing.

Mr. Carter was disappointed and alarmed, though he endeavored not to let the latter fact become apparent.

"Are you sailing today?" Ned had asked.

"No, not today," had been Mrs. Johnston's half-informative answer.

After that there was nothing for Ned to do but end the conversation.

He had to face the fact that short of giving away Claude's plans and his own, he must talk no more to Mrs. Johnston. Nor must he try to see Mary until they met on the steamer. Mrs. Johnston was capable of rendering it extremely unpleasant for him, if he did.

He left word for Claude Dabbs at their hotel, and went out to do his best in the matter of finding the sailing date of the Johnstons, and secure their own passage.

Only when she had said the final and conventional good-by and hung up the receiver, did Polly Johnston relax. A wave of loneliness crept over her. She had no real link with the actual world now, save through Mary. Mary, who must soon leave her for some man.

In the back of her mind, when she was honest with herself, Polly knew that the fear was not that Mary would marry, or leave her, but that Mary would marry some one of whom she, Polly, did not approve, and who would like, and side with, Claude Dabbs.

It was Claude Dabbs' shadow that darkened the sky for Polly. What power could Claude have over her, unless she chose to give him that power? The answer always mocked her. She was afraid of Claude Dabbs because she had treated him unfairly, and she had always been afraid of him because of Mary. It had been because of that fear she had lived abroad with the child for so many years. As Mary grew older and there was no sign from Claude, she had grown bolder and roamed freely about America, until like a fool she had carelessly blundered into his very stronghold.

In her mind's eye, she pictured Claude as a great, fat, middle-aged man. She knew that she was only drawing on her imagination, and that Mary, who had seen him, did not seem to have been physically repelled. Polly would, of course, expire by slow torture before she asked Mary what he looked like.

CHAPTER X

Having gone slowly and carefully through the shopping lists to satisfy herself that there remained only toothpaste and lavender water for their traveling bags, Mary entered a drug store. While she waited for change she was suddenly conscious of being closely scrutinized.

Mary did not turn her head, and only when she went from the cashier's desk did she try to locate her persistent admirer.

When she did, she went first white, then red. There stood Claude Dabbs, better dressed, or differently dressed, than Mary had ever seen him.

Claude, who had seen her on the avenue and followed her, now stood looking at her earnestly as he waited for her recognition. When it came—for not for ten thousand angry mothers would Mary ignore her own father—he moved quietly to her side and held out his hand for the packages.

"If you're going back to your hotel I'd like to walk with you."

Mary, her heart beating quickly, put the little bundles in his hand.

"Yes, I've finished my shopping," she said, simply.

"Will you walk, or ride?"

"Ride, I think," replied Mary.

Claude Dabbs stopped a passing taxi and helped his daughter in. She gave the hotel and street address to the driver, and as she did so, Claude said: "I'm at the Langdon."

Mary had looked at him, a little frightened, when he got into the cab. What was he going to say to her first? Of all the impossible situations in the wide world, this was the most impossible! If she asked him why he was there, if she asked the simplest question, think what she would precipitate! She leaned back in the cab and left it to Claude Dabbs.

Mohammed Used Both Precept and Example

He wore a golden ring until he noticed that all the people were beginning to follow his example, whereupon he went into the pulpit, pulled the ring off with the words: "By the Lord I will not wear this ring ever again," and then prohibited the use of such adornments.

A friend who had sent him a present in the form of a steaming dinner was much chagrined when it was returned uneaten and even untouched by his fingers—for he "used to eat with his thumb and his two forefingers," and "after he had finished eating, he licked his blessed fingers: first the middle one, then the prayer finger, and last the thumb," but he was pacified when the prophet explained that he had not tasted it because onions had been cooked with the food; for Gabriel, he went on to say, strenuously objected to the odor of both onions and garlic. Furthermore, he abstained from tasting lizards, for he feared that they were descended, by some inexplicable metempsychosis, from a certain tribe of Israel.—From "Mohammed," by E. F. Dibble.

Other Side of the Fence

An Atchison man who took a week's vacation each year, determined that he would take a month's vacation every year, if he ever went into business for himself. He is in business for himself now and hasn't taken a vacation for the last two years.—Atchison Daily Globe.

POULTRY

CULLING YOUNG CHICKEN FLOCK

In purchasing baby chicks it is well to order a good many more than you have any intention of carrying through the whole season. During summer, chicks grow rapidly and at little cost, and there is a ready sale for them at the weight of two to two and a half pounds.

When the cockerels reach a weight of two pounds it is ordinarily considered that it is time to sell them. Any additional weight which they put on costs more. Furthermore, the market for them declines after early summer so that the longer you keep them the less they are worth per pound.

After the flock of chicks is a few weeks old you can tell if there are three or four of them not worth keeping. Look them over and if there are a few "crowbeaks" which very evidently can never amount to anything, get them out of the way. By remaining in the flock half sick and half well they may infect a large number of others and do a great deal of harm.

Make it a practice to look over the flock every few days until you are acquainted with the chicks and can tell which ones are growing best, so that you can decide which ones you want to save for next winter's laying flock.

Early in the summer, at least by the time the flock averages two pounds, separate the cockerels and the pullets, and then either send the cockerels to market or can them.

Then go through the pullet flock and divide them into two lots. Those that are distinctly inferior ought to go along with the cockerels, and those that are fine and growthy and show quality can then receive the best of attention and feed so that they will grow every hour of the day toward full maturity, and be ready to lay plenty of eggs by the time snow flies.

Poor Economy to Cease Feeding Mash in Summer

"It is poor economy to quit feeding mash to the hens in summer," says Prof. C. W. Carrick of Purdue university. "Such a practice is likely to throw the whole flock into a molt and cause egg production to stop."

Many people have a notion that hens can pick up enough bugs and worms from the range during the summer to supply their needs. Records from farm poultry flocks have shown, however, that the range cannot be depended upon to supply sufficient feed for a satisfactory egg production.

One of the principle necessities for high egg production is protein in the ration. This can be supplied satisfactorily by feeding a suitable mash. The grain supplies some protein but it is not of suitable quality or sufficient quantity to give a high summer egg yield. When animal feeds such as meat scraps, tankage and milk are included with the mash, minerals as well as proteins are provided. These minerals are essential for egg production and are not supplied adequately in grains and grain products.

Determine Exactly How Many Eggs Each Hen Lays

A good trap nest provides the one accurate method of determining exactly how many eggs a hen has laid in one year. There is no short cut or easy way to figure from part of a year's trap-nest record what the total for the year will be, nor to cull carefully enough to estimate what it has been or will be.

The highest type of breeding for egg production may be secured only by trap-nesting every breeder throughout every day of her first laying year, and every day throughout the breeding season, as long as she is kept. In addition, both male and female birds must be selected which have the ability to transmit high production to their offspring.

The best poultry breeders are searching for the pullet that lays not only during the spring, but is also an early maturer and heavy winter layer, as well as a persistent summer layer. These characteristics coupled with intensity of production are found only in the best hens.

Lice and Worms

For a dip to rid a flock of lice, use one ounce of sodium fluoride to each gallon of water and mix the solution in a large washtub or barrel. Use one pound for about three hundred fowls. Hold the hens by the legs and wings to prevent struggling. Put them in the solution, tail first, to force the water underneath the feathers. Repeat this three or four times, and in very heavy-feathered hens it may be necessary to use the fingers to work the solution into the feathers.

Height of Roosts

The heavier breeds should have their roosts near the floor, and all on a level so there will be no crowding for highest places. Where heavy fowls have to fly down from high perches they are likely to contract humble-foot from bruises. Everything should be kept clean and fresh, and with good ventilation, free from draughts. Keep a lookout for watery eyes and running nostrils, a sneeze or cough. Little things taken in time will usually prevent ailments.

Cling to Custom of Carrying Off Mates

A curious marriage custom persists in Abchasia, a district of the Caucasus. On the wedding day the bride withdraws to the darkest room of the house. At dusk the bridegroom, supported by a bodyguard of friends, all fully armed, rides up to the house, dismounts, and hammers on the door with a dagger hilt.

The door opens to reveal the bride's male relatives, just as ferociously equipped, and the two parties promptly join in a mock combat.

Eventually the defenders retire, the bridegroom rushes in, seizes his bride, flings her across his shoulder, and, carrying her out, leaps on his horse and gallops off with his capture to the accompaniment of the victorious yells of his supporters.

Shortly after, the defeated relatives of the bride mount their horses and give chase. When the bridegroom's house is reached both sides join in a contest to see who can drink most wine!

Abchasian girls decline to give up the rite, and few would accept any suitor who did not intend to carry them off by force.

Sleet and Hail

Sleet is a drizzling or driving, partly frozen rain, or rain that freezes on the trees and ground. Hail falls usually in connection with thunderstorms. It is frozen rain, falling in pellets or hailstones of varying sizes and shapes.

Pictures to Match Room

Pictures may or may not be hung on the walls, but ones which harmonize in color and theme really belong in the bedroom as well as in any other. The latest tendency in hanging these pictures is to hang them low enough to be seen without the discomfort of looking up. If the room is large enough a desk like the remainder of the suite, usually a spinet desk which is not too heavy, may be added, with excellent effect.—Buffalo Courier and Express.

POTATO CLUB MEMBERS HAVE MEETING

The members of the St. Joe Potato club met last Friday evening with Clifton Draggoo at Concord. Sixteen members responded to roll call which was answered by telling the kind of potatoes growing. The club elected Carleton Shull yell leader and after trying a few yells and singing a few club songs the regular business of the meeting was taken up.

There was some difference of opinion whether the club should adopt an initiation and an opening and closing ceremony but it was finally carried by appointing a committee to prepare such a ceremony. Readings were given by Keith Daily and Ned Shull. Carleton Shull demonstrated to the group how to cut and treat seed for the best results. A few details were then discussed by the leader.

Everyone was interested in seeing who would be the lucky individuals to secure the B. & O. seed. DuWayne Kinsey and Ellsworth Morr happened to draw the lucky slips.

A fine lunch was served by the four boys who were hosts for the meeting: Clifton Draggoo, Keith Daily, Lloyd Schrader and Ellsworth Morr.

The next meeting will be held at the home of Basil Shecer on Friday evening, June 17th. This date is changed from the 20th because the leader will be at the Vocational teachers conference that week.

The potato club has a total enrollment of twenty-two members.

150TH ANNIVERSARY OF BIRTH OF AMERICAN FLAG

With the coming each year of June 14, birthday of the American Flag, more and more Old Glory is coming into her due respect and each year sees more general display of the greatest flag of all history, on patriotic American homes, offices and lodges.

Several States now have very general observance of the anniversary, and proclamations are issued by Governors, calling upon the people to observe the day with patriotic programs, and that every home, office, store or other building should display the Flag on June 14.

This year on that date we celebrate the 150th anniversary of the birth of the Stars and Stripes as the emblem of this Nation. The celebration will be even more extensive than heretofore. Special effort is being made by different States to have a Nation-wide and general display of flags that will reach from lakes to gulf and from coast to coast. From east to west, the world around, the sun now never sets upon the teritory tributary to this great country, and somewhere in the world God's sun is always shining upon people living under the protecting folds which signify "liberty and justice to all."

CORN BORER JOTTINGS

Injunction Dissolved: — After an all day hearing on June 1, Judge Sol Wood of the Allen county circuit court, sitting at Ft. Wayne, dissolved the five day temporary injunction which he had previously issued to John Caudle and his son, Martin, farmers of Jackson township, Allen county. In rendering this decision, in effect it was held that the law is constitutional and that the state entomologist and his forces have a right to enter private premises, destroy corn stalks either by burning or completely plowing under and assess the costs against the land to be paid in the same manner that other taxes are paid.

Plaintiffs Knew Rules: — According to testimony in the case, a township inspector had called about the 19th of March and tried to explain what was necessary to do to the 65 acres of standing stalks and four acres of stubbles on the place, so the work would meet the requirements. The inspector was told that they would sow oats by broadcasting and then disking them in all of which they did about March 31.

Legal Notice Given:—About the 19th of May, legal notice was given the Caudles that they must start cleaning on or before the 21st of May and be done in eight days thereafter or the agents of the department of conservation would enter and perform this work. And since there was nothing done on the 23rd a backfurrow was struck across the field of standing stalks and men started to picking up the stubbles on the disked stubble ground. Then came the restraining order, the hearing, and the dissolution.

To Protect the Many:—The proceedure of any court is largely to protect the many against the few. Most people wish to obey the law. Courts are to deal with those who do not recognize any law at all.

Keep An Eye Peeled:—There are those who honestly believe there is no corn borer because they have never come face to face with one, and yet, two or three a day have been brought to the corn borer office for some weeks past. All such as these will be interested in knowing some signs that will help them in looking through their fields in August and September. Since the moth prefers to lay her eggs in corn that is from a foot and a half to two feet in height, naturally the first part of the stalk that the worms can attack is the little tassle stalk. And so, in badly infested fields, breaking over of the tassels is one of the first signs noticed. However, one should also be on the lookout for shotholes in the stalks where the borers have entered. A little frass will often appear on the outside of the stalk at this point.

Will Varieties Help?—Thus far no borer-resistant corn has been found and it is assumed that a corn so bitter that the borers would not attack it would not be palatable to hogs and cattle. But from the egg laying habits of the moth, it has been observed that the smaller corn at egg laying time is not so badly infested. To find more facts about this, Purdue University has planned a test of 25 early varieties planted in DeKalb, Randolph, Tippecanoe and LaPorte counties. These will be planted at three different dates in June and their behavior through the summer closely observed.

Closer Plantings: — Naturally the big corn that we have been growing has a more extensive root system than the shorter growing varieties. And in an effort to learn how close these corns should be planted so as to utilize all of the root zone in the soil, hills will be spaced 33 by 33 inches, 36 by 36 inches and 39 by 39 inches with three, four and five kernels in a hill.

What Fertilizer and When?—The action of all fertilizer is not definitely known. But it has been observed that some fertilizers ripen the corn much sooner than others or none. The aim is to mature solid corn if possible after the borer moth lays her eggs. Whether this can best be done by applying all the fertilizer at planting time or whether some of it should be left until later in the season is a matter that should be answered through these tests.

RE-ELECTS PRESENT COUNTY OFFICIALS

Board of Education Names E. E. Stinson County Agent and E. W. Koons Attendance Officer

The county board of education, meeting Monday afternoon in the office of the county superintendent of schools, Clarence Green, re-elected Earl E. Stinson of Auburn as county agricultural agent and Ed W. Koons of Auburn, as county attendance officer.

Mr. Stinson had no opposition and he was re-elected for a term of two years. He has served in the office two years, being elected previously for one year.

Ellsworth Eakright, of Butler, and Mrs. B. H. Eastes of Garrett, were applicants for attendance officer against Mr. Koons. Mr. Koons received 11 votes, Mr. Eakright 4 and Mrs. Eastes 2. The term is one year.

A GOOD START

Two boys were puzzling their brains to invent a new game. At last one of them said eagerly:

"I know, Willy; let's see who can make the ugliest face."

"Go on! No chance!" was the reply. "Look at the start you got."

Crops and Weeds

Generally speaking, the larger the crops the fewer the weeds present. This is especially true with small grain and hay, since good stands of these crops will tend to smother out weeds. Furthermore, pastures that are given good care by top dressings with fertilizers free from weed seeds and by close but not destructive grazing always contain fewer weeds and more grass than those poorly managed.

NOTES ON SERVICE

Topic: "Destroying the Walls of Prejudice."

Text: "Arise, Peter; slay and eat." Acts 11: 7.

Prejudice—an unwarranted bias of mind.

We very largely interpret the words and deeds of friend or foe in the light of our prejudices. Seeking excuses for those whom we love and condemning those against whom we are prejudiced.

A man cannot be his best self towards anyone against whom he is prejudiced. Hence prejudice is a great wall—shutting out others, and shutting in oneself. For any wall that shuts out others, confines and cramps the one shut in.

From the Bible we understand that God has planned to bless the world by the overflow from His people. He would fill them so full of the riches of his grace that the good things of their lives would run over and bless those around.

Some are so full of evil that, that which overflows is hurtfull to others and some are so empty of God's riches that you could not shake them hard enough to slop out a blessing.

Fill us Lord to overflowing for the sake of others.

Roy S. Brown, Minister.

SPENCERVILLE PASTOR HAS BUSY DAY

Rev. Roy S. Brown, pastor of Scipio and Spencerville M. E. Churches, made quite a record last Sunday. His made his morning appointment at Scipio and then to his old home, ten miles west of Angola for dinner and at 2:30 performed a marriage ceremony, in which his sister, Nona C. Brown, became the wife of William C. Stammer, of St. Louis. Forty guests were present. The Brown family is composed of five boys and four girls and all are married except one boy. The parents are Mr. and Mrs. Hoyt S. Brown. The miles traveled were ninety-eight and he was able to be at his appointment for Sunday evening at Spencerville.

MONEY THAT WORKS

A MAN visited our bank a few weeks ago who had just sold some property.

HE WAS not ready to invest the money again for a few months but he did not want the money to 'loaf' and earn nothing for him during that time.

SO HE wanted to know what he could do with the money to make it earn some profit and be available in case he needed it.

OF COURSE we suggested a Certificate of Deposit. You can have a "C. of D.," for any amount and continue it as long as you wish. It pays a nice profit, too.

THERE IS no better plan for your money that is not otherwise employed. Let us tell you more about this plan.

NEW COAT SHOULD HAVE SMART BOW; BEACH ATTIRE IS GAY OF COLOR

WHEN buying that new coat for the vacation trip, see to it that there is a handsome bow somewhere in its make-up. The interesting part of the new bows are they keep one guessing as to where on the coat they will choose to locate. A bow is just as apt to be positioned on the shoulder as at the back of the collar or perhaps it may find placement where the coat fastens to one side, as instanced on the model here pictured. This coat of beige kasha is all that fancy would picture when it comes to patrician style as attained in exquisite line and smart detailing. As to swagger bow-trimming it elects to place little bows even at the wrists in addition to the self-material bow where it fastens.

That is another fascinating eccentricity of the modern bow, it is no respecter of fabrics. It would as soon be of the cloth of the coat as of ribbon or mayhap it will be of velvet or, more interesting still—of fur. A flat fur bow-trim at the side or back of the neckline is the newest thing out for coats. Another stunning effect is for the shawl collar of fur to finish at the low waistline with a bow of the fur tied in one loop with two sash ends.

Often the same shawl-collar and bow treatment is followed, substituting moire or faille silk or crepe satin for the fur.

The new summer coat models are most alluring, both as to fabric and color. There is a lovely new creamy beige shade which appears its handsomest in heavy double-faced satin—used reversibly. The effectiveness is heightened by clever manipulation of the material.

A coat of almond-green velveteen or of beige is another of the mode's novelties for summer.

"Mother, may I go out to swim?" "Yes, my child, but do not go near the water." The color splendor of present-day beach attire seems just like that—as if it dare not "go near the water." However, the enlightened know to the contrary. Thanks to modern invention, no wave can wash away the gorgeous glamor of color and design, for the materials of which these resplendent garments and accessories are made are now processed to the point of being rendered waterproof. It is a fact, nowadays silks are being rubberized, likewise cretonnes and even velvet is actually being rubberized. So if the apparently conservative dresser is secretly beset with an urge for gay and hectic color, the beach is the place appointed by the mode, for a pageantry of attire as vividly colorful as the human eye can picture.

The beach ensemble in the picture is typical of the trend to elaborate and fanciful effects. Beach coats are a favorite fashion topic of the day. The one illustrated is of cretonne, flowers of yellow, green and red being printed on a tan background. The clipped wool collar and cuffs make the garment ideal for a chilly day.

Favorite media for the beach coat include terry cloth, moire fabrics, hand-blocked linens, also tinted silks and crepe de chine. Most of the gay fig ured fabrics are either hand-blocked in striking modernistic design, or brightly printed or what is exceedingly popular—hand-painted. Especially is the much exploited coolie coat decorated with bizarre motifs.

As to the bathing suit, the two-piece jersey comprising slip and trunks or tights is outstanding for practical use. As to silk bathing suits, taffeta in solid color or in gay plaids seems to be taking the place of the crepe de chine types which were so popular last season.

NEW SUMMER COAT MODEL

A GAY BEACH COSTUME

IT WAS ALL IN THE FAMILY

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

"WELL, I must admit that I met my Waterloo this summer, girls." Kat giggled, glancing round her absorbed circle of listeners. "It seems funny, but then—"

Katherine paused to take another bite from the chicken sandwich. Leila Farris had had a box from home and was having a spread in her room. It was the first chance these girls had had to get together sociably since the beginning of the fall semester of Greenville college.

"Let's tell our most thrilling summer experiences," Leila had said, as she served her guests. We'll begin with you, Kat. Nothing ever fazes you!"

So Kat, giving a backward toss of her short locks, admitted that for once she had been really frightened.

"You know I spent several weeks with my Aunt Milly Roberts this vacation. She lives in a big old-fashioned house, set far back from the road and surrounded with elms and maples. Poor Auntie is deaf, but she has learned lip reading, so it is very easy to visit with her.

"She has the queerest pet—an old monkey that Uncle Nathan brought home to her from an Asiatic trip when it was almost a baby. On account of its size uncle named it Nebuchadnezzar."

Katherine waited for the girls' shouts of laughter to subside. "They call it 'Nebby' for short. I have to mention Nebby because he figured prominently in my thrill. There had been a number of robberies in the neighborhood and the city had been for a long time promising them a special watchman for that section, but he had not appeared. A burglary on an adjoining place a few days after my arrival made us all very nervous.

"One evening I went to the city with some friends and returned very late. Thinking that I would be afraid, they dared me to walk up from the entrance. I laughed at the idea of being afraid and congratulated myself as I passed the long avenue of trees and approached the house on not having been afraid even of my shadow. But as I came up the steps I noticed that the hall door was ajar and that a light in the hall was still burning.

"Burglars!" I thought, with an involuntary shiver. I crept fearfully up to Aunt Milly's room and was going to rush in, but found it locked, a most unusual thing for her. I rapped and called but there was no response. My aunt had some valuable diamonds which she kept in a little safe in her room. Probably the burglar has got wise to the diamonds, I thought, murdered her, locked the door and crawled out the window—

"While all this was going through my mind, a door cautiously opened and the housekeeper, Mrs. Quinn, peeked out and beckoned to me. Her face looked scared and white, like a ghost, with hair done in curl papers and gowned in a brilliant kimono.

"'I saw something crawl over the grape arbor toward the blue room,' she whispered.

"Then this thought flashed through my mind: 'One burglar opened the hall door and left it for a speedy exit, while his pal climbed through the window and both are in the house somewhere. I crept down the back stairs and through the dining room into the big hall. I thought I heard a suspicious noise in the old parlor, whose double doors open into the hall, where the light still shone in the lamp on the newel post. I seized a pair of brass tongs from the fireplace in the hall and snatched a bronze statuette from the mantel. I laughed at myself because my heart was exceeding the speed limit.

"I had just reached the heavy curtains guarding the living room from the hall. I had put out my hand, when suddenly the curtains were parted and I looked into the mouth of an automatic. I was too surprised to speak. But instinctively I struck with the tongs and threw the statuette at the light. For a wonder, I struck it and lamp and bronze crashed to the floor, and all was darkness! The next minute a rough hand seized my wrist.

"'I've been on the lookout for ye,' said a rough voice.

"'And I've been looking for you, too,' I snapped. 'Don't think you can frighten me! Let go my arm, 'Sam!' I called to my aunt's handy man, whose heavy boots I could hear clumping down the rear staircase. 'Telephone for the police. Hurry!'

"'Sure ye don't need to call the police, my girl. The policeman is here now,' and my captor dragged me, protesting, to the dining room and turned on the light. 'Blame, but you're too good looking for this sort of a low-down trade. Why don't ye marry a decent man an' let burglarin' alone?'

"I just gasped. He had a badge on, I saw, and assured me he was the new night watchman! 'I'm no thief,' I said, even if you are a policeman.'

"By that time Sam Quinn appeared. Sam, tell this man I live here—that I'm not a burglar.'"

"'A likely story! What ye doin' traipse'n' round this time of night?'

"I promptly explained that when I came from the city I found the door open and I was looking for burglars.

"'So ye took me for a thafe,' he said indignantly. 'An' nearly knocked me brains out with thim tongs.'

"'Well, now that you are here,' I said, recovering my dignity, 'you'd better come upstairs and see what is in the blue room, and if my aunt is all right.'

"'There are queer noises upstairs,' said Sam. I had no desire to get in front of that automatic again. So the watchman went ahead, flourishing his gun, Sam and I following.

"We found Aunt Millie in the upper hall, peering around with a lighted candle, instead of turning on the light.

"'I thought I heard a noise,' she said plaintively and then, catching a sight of the brass buttons, she gave a little frightened cry. 'What's the matter?'

"I whispered that we thought there were burglars around, and carefully we opened the door into the blue room. Auntie read my lips, for Sam had found the hall switch and given us some light on the subject.

"'The silver!' auntie exclaimed at once as we entered. For it seems that she had another funny habit of carrying the basket of silver upstairs every evening and hiding it in a cupboard beneath the window seat. This cupboard was wide open and the silver gone, as well as the basket.

"'I hear voices,' said the officer, sepulchrally.

"'Why, that sounds like Nebby, and Aunt Millie looked reproachfully at Sam. "You must have forgotten to lock him up this evening and, of course, he got cold and came in that window. But where can he be?'

"We hurried into the adjoining room, and in one corner sat the monkey, with the missing silver arranged about him, as he was accustomed to see it placed on the dining table. He looked up at us and grinned impishly as a child looks when caught in mischief, and blinked and chattered as auntie reproved him for his misdemeanors. After the fright and suspense, it was all so ridiculous that we had a good laugh."

"'But how did the door happen to be open?'

"It was Aunt Millie's turn to look guilty. 'I went out to see if everything was all right.' Then we shouted. 'So you left the door open for any chance burglar—'

"'At any rate, I locked my own door,' said auntie, with a triumphant tone.

"Auntie left us for a few minutes and disappeared in her room, while we escorted the officer to the door. When she returned and passed something from her hand to his, he grinned and thanked her.

"'Sure, an' it's lucky the burglarin' is all in the family or I'd have to be takin' these thieves to the lockup.'

"He went off whistling, 'The Girl I Left Behind Me,' and I locked the door emphatically, after which auntie gave it a try to see if it was surely fast, followed solemnly by Sam, who gave the doorknob a vigorous shake.'"

Esparto Grass Found Valuable for Paper

Alfa, or esparto grass, which covers the highlands of north Africa from Tunis to Morocco, is being increasingly utilized in the manufacture of paper. Since 60 years ago, when experiments on the grass for paper making were first carried out in Scotland, the alfa exports from Algeria and Tunis have risen rapidly. Great Britain is now the biggest market, receiving about 156,000 tons of alfa paper pulp every year, against only 11,000 tons to France. The total area of these vast evergreen steppes, which are almost unpopulated except for scattered tribes of nomads, who raise sheep, is estimated at about 17,500,000 acres. One can travel hours and hours without seeing anything but grass; occasionally a nomad's tent is sighted on a train journey through the "seas of alfa." Not all the alfa in north Africa is obtainable, however. The grass in the Moroccan highlands is at present left to waste owing to lack of transportation and labor. Steps will be taken by business interests to penetrate the region so that the natural wealth in grass can be fully claimed.—Chicago News.

Too Much Chatter

One day Dean Swift, the celebrated author, called at the home of a hospitable friend who, eager to please so distinguished a guest, with great anxiety inquired what he would enjoy for dinner. "Will you have an apple pie, sir? Or perhaps you prefer a gooseberry pie? Will you have a currant pie, sir? Or a plum pie, or a pigeon pie? You have only to express a preference and I'll be happy to prepare it for you—even a pigeon pie, if you desire, sir." To this ebullition of hospitable emotions, Swift replied: "Any pie, madam, but a magpie."—Market for Exchange.

Scene of Wild Beauty

The Garden of the Gods is a region in Colorado near Colorado Springs, covering about 500 acres, and remarkable for the strange forms of the rocks with which it is covered. The red and white sandstone assumes grotesque shapes, to which various names have been given. For instance, the gateway is formed by two huge masses of rock of a bright red color, which is 330 feet high and between which the road passes.

Older Than Solomon

In Utah a knotted old juniper tree has recently been discovered; men of science say that it had reached a vigorous life before King Solomon was born. Its roots are embedded in rock at an elevation of 7,800 feet.

PETER DELIVERED FROM PRISON

LESSON TEXT—Acts 12:1-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—Many are the afflictions of the righteous: but the Lord delivereth him out of them all.—Ps. 34:19.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God Takes Care of Peter.

JUNIOR TOPIC — God Answers Prayer for Peter.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Does God Deliver Us?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Power of United Prayer.

I. Peter's Imprisonment (vv. 1-4).

1. By whom (v. 1).

Herod, the grandson of the wicked Herod who slew the innocent children of Bethlehem.

2. The reason (v. 3).

It was to gain the favor of the Jews. Herod was not a Jew, but an Edomite, therefore knew that his success was dependent upon his having the good will of the Jews. Herod for the sake of popularity manifested a deep sympathy for degenerate Judaism. It was but the sympathy of the politician. Since the church had developed so as to be a successful rival of Judaism, indeed was already displacing it, he saw an opportunity to curry favor with the Jews by putting forth his hands against it.

3. The method (v. 4).

He was arrested, put into prison and guarded by four quaternions of soldiers. A quaternion is a guard of four soldiers. Humanly speaking, it was impossible to escape. They had doubtless heard of Peter's escape from jail before, so they thought they would take no risks this time. However, they made one fatal mistake—they left out God.

II. The Church of God in Prayer (v. 5).

The church was at a crisis. Her situation was most grave. James, one of the brethren of the church, was dead, and Peter, the most prominent of all, was in prison. In this desperate strait they did the wise thing—they betook themselves to prayer. It was a noteworthy prayer.

1. It was unto God, not unto men, or to be heard of men. This is a very common fault today. All true prayer is unto God.

2. It was united prayer.

There is peculiar power in the united prayer of God's people.

3. It was an intensely earnest prayer.

It was more than unceasing prayer, it was the earnest desire of the soul as it stretched itself out toward God.

4. It was definite prayer.

They specifically offered prayer to God for Peter. Their prayer was concentrated, definite and specific.

III. Peter Delivered by an Angel (vv. 6-11).

1. Peter sleeping (v. 6).

This shows that he was not greatly disturbed over the matter. The Lord keeps in perfect pence those whose minds are stayed on Him. (Isa. 26:3).

2. Peter leaves the prison (vv. 7-10).

A heavenly light shone in the prison. The angel smote Peter on the side; the chains fell off. Peter put on his clothes and passed by one guard after another through the iron gate out into the city.

3. The effect upon Peter (v. 11).

Although the matter was so wonderful to Peter, even outside his consciousness, when he came to himself he was assured beyond peradventure that God had miraculously delivered him from Herod's wicked hands.

IV. Unconscious Unbelief (vv. 12-19).

1. Behavior of Peter and the church (vv. 12-17).

Peter went to the house of Mary and knocked. The knock was answered by Rhoda who was so overjoyed that she forgot to open the gate, and ran in and told them that Peter was at the gate. The disciples were not prepared for such good news, and even accused her of madness. She, undaunted, insisted. They offered as an explanation that perhaps it might be Peter's guardian angel in his likeness. They got more than they expected. Peter rehearsed unto them the Lord's dealing with him, and instructed them to make these things known unto James and the brethren.

2. The behavior of the soldiers (vv. 18,19).

There was great agitation among them as to what had become of Peter. This was a serious matter since they were responsible for him. Not being able to account for Peter's escape, Herod commanded that they be put to death. After this Herod went down to Caesarea. Here he was adored as God. Because he arrogated this honor to himself, the Lord smote him. Herod died, but the Word of the Lord grew and multiplied.

MRS. BASSETT ALWAYS TIRED

Now in Good Health by Using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lansing, Michigan.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound whenever I needed it. When I first used it I was so bad I could hardly walk across the room without crying. I was tired all the time. I think my trouble was coming on me for six months before I realized it. I read of your wonderful medicine in the paper, and * * * my husband bought me a bottle, and after the first few doses I felt better, so kept on taking it until I was well and strong. I take it at times when I feel tired and it helps me. I will always have a good word for your medicine and tell anyone what good it has done me. I recommended it to my neighbor for her girl, who is sixteen years old, and it was just what she needed. She is feeling fine now, and goes to school every day."—Mrs. E. F. Bassett, 216 South Hayford Avenue, Lansing, Michigan.

Do not continue to feel all run-down and half sick when Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is sold by druggists everywhere. It is a root and herb medicine and has been used by women for over fifty years.

DAIRY FACTS

FAULTY FEEDING LESSENS PROFITS

Faulty feeding is one of the chief causes of unprofitable dairying, says Dr. W. B. Nevens, assistant chief in dairy cattle feeding at the college of agriculture, University of Illinois. In "Feeding the Dairy Herd," a revised handbook which is now being distributed by the college to interested farmers and dairymen.

At the same time proper feeding alone does not guarantee the greatest milk production, he points out. Care and management and breeding and selection that will build up the capacity of the herd also must get attention.

"It has been demonstrated, for instance, that poorly kept cows will give 50 per cent more milk with improved feeding and care, but after the level has been raised in this way, little more can be done except through a program of good breeding. Using sires of the best blood lines and replacing the poorest cows in the herd with heifers from the best cows usually will bring continued improvement in production year after year."

Doctor Nevens explains that a cow may use feed for five different purposes: Growth, maintenance, milk production, increase in weight and production of offspring. It is evident, then, that when cows are fed for milk production, these various functions must be considered with regard to the future development of the cow as well as to her immediate needs, he points out.

Liberal feeding, when intelligently done, usually pays more in the long run than scanty feeding. Although other things besides feeding has a bearing on the milk production of a herd, there is no doubt but that many dairy herds which make little or no profit could be put on a paying basis simply by giving more attention to this one factor—more generous feeding, he says.

He then points out that feeds are divided into two classes: concentrates and roughages. Concentrates—the farm grains and mill by-products—are heavy and contain little fiber or woody material. Roughages, such as hay, straw, silage, grass and roots, are bulky and contain lots of fiber, and in some cases water. Roughages with lots of water, such as fresh green grass, roots and silage, are known as succulent feeds.

Substances found in feeds are grouped into six classes: Protein, carbohydrates, fats, mineral matter or ash, vitamines and water. "Every dairyman should know these classes, should know what part they play in the nourishment of the animal and what common feeds will best supply them in the most economical and desirable form," Doctor Nevens says.

Young, tender pasture grass is more highly digestible than matured grass. From 65 to 80 per cent of the dry matter of farm grains and their best by-products are digestible, while only 50 to 75 per cent of the dry matter of the better kinds of roughage is digestible. Some of the poorer roughages, such as cereal straws and the hulls of various seeds, which contain lots of crude fiber, are low in digestibility and have little place in the ration of the dairy cow in milk.

Succulence, physiological effect, bulk, balance and cost are discussed as some of the other characteristics of spring grass which the dairyman should try to duplicate in rations used for barn feeding.

Under most conditions a dairy herd can be fed more economically on feeds that are raised on the farm where they are used than it can on purchased feeds, Doctor Nevens says in the handbook. It must be remembered, however, that cereal grains and nonlegume roughages are low in protein, he cautions.

Dried Beet Pulp Often Used in Testing Cows

Dried beet pulp is a bulky, carbonaceous concentrate that has a slightly laxative effect on dairy cows, and is used quite often by dairymen when they are feeding cows on test. It is not worth quite as much as corn or barley in feeding value in the ordinary ration, and as it usually sells for more than corn it rarely pays to buy it as a substitute for corn merely as a source of nutrients. However, where a maximum yield is desired regardless of cost, such as cows on official test, it can be used to make the concentrate more bulky, and as such will be worth more than corn. Where a succulent feed such as silage is not available it makes a very satisfactory substitute, though usually more expensive. Where much is used it is better to moisten it before feeding.

Cow's Producing Value

A cow's value as a producer depends upon her inherited ability to secrete milk, and her environment, or the feed and care. If a cow has not inherited the ability to produce milk, abundant feeding will not actuate her milk glands to secrete milk. On the other hand, a good dairy cow without feed and care is like a first class boiler without fuel. It is important to obtain a good dairy cow, but it is just as important to feed and care for the cow properly.

CAN ASPARAGUS BY "HOT PACK" METHOD

Sterilization Is More Certain and Product Better.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Use the steam-pressure canner for canning asparagus at home. The method now recommended by the United States Department of Agriculture for all vegetables and most fruits is known as the "hot pack." The point about the "hot pack" method is that the material to be canned is heated to the boiling point or cooked a short time before being put into the cans or jars, so that in the shortest possible time the temperature of the whole jar is raised to the required point. This results in more certain sterilization and a better product because of shorter cooking.

Like all other garden products asparagus ought to be canned as quickly as possible after it has been cut, so it is wise to do a little canning frequently while the season lasts rather than to attempt a large amount at any one time.

If you wish to can the asparagus whole, wash it carefully, and tie it in uniform bundles, cut to fit the containers, either glass jars or tin cans. Place the bundles in a saucepan with boiling water over the tough lower portion. Cover tightly and boil for four or five minutes. Pack rapidly into hot containers. The asparagus may, if you like, be cut up into half-inch lengths for canning. In this case cover with boiling water, bring to a boil and then pack hot into the containers. Whichever way you prepare the asparagus, the containers are completely filled up with boiling water, and each jar is salted in the proportion of one teaspoonful of salt to each quart canned.

Asparagus May Be Cut in Half-Inch Pieces and Canned in the Steam-Pressure Canner.

The hot-packed jars or cans are sealed at once, put into the hot canner, and processed for 40 minutes at 10 pounds pressure, or 240 degrees Fahrenheit. After processing for the required length of time, remove the containers from the canner. Invert glass jars and place them out of drafts. Cool tin cans by plunging them in cold water. Keep all canned products under observation at room temperature for at least a week. Discard any showing signs of spoilage and watch others of the same lot until it is certain that they are keeping.

Farmers' Bulletin 1471-F, "Canning Fruits and Vegetables at Home," will be helpful to you throughout the canning season. It is free while the supply lasts.

Care of Leather Coverings

Leather furniture coverings look better and last longer if they're rubbed occasionally with castor oil. This restores to the leather the oil that gradually dries out. The oil should be well rubbed in and any excess wiped off the surface, or it will collect and hold dirt which will darken the leather, and soil whatever touches it.

USING BACON FOR FLAVOR AND FOOD

Is Useful in Making Sandwiches for Luncheon.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The housekeeper who wishes to feed her family well at small cost should look into the possibility of utilizing bacon in more ways than heretofore. For example, in many families the school children, and often older members of the household, carry sandwiches. Bacon can be put in these sandwiches, either by itself or in combination with other meat, lettuce and salad dressing, such as one finds in a club sandwich. Either bread or toast may be used.

When time is short, plain bacon sandwiches consisting of bread and two or three slices of crisp cooked bacon can be put together in a very few minutes. Bacon sandwiches out-of-doors can be made wherever one's picnic party happens to be. The bacon can be toasted over a fire in the woods, each person cooking his own pieces with the aid of a forked stick; and either because of the jollity of the occasion, or the good flavor of the bacon, or the special taste given by the wood fire, the sandwiches will seem to be the best one has ever eaten. The addition of lettuce, with or without salad dressing, is an improvement for many persons.

Sliced onion or pickle in a bacon sandwich gives an acceptable flavor. Various kinds of "club" sandwiches are made, all of them including bacon as one of the chief ingredients. A chicken club sandwich is commonly made with three pieces of toasted bread as a basis, and between these, two fillings consisting of lettuce, bacon, tomato, and sliced chicken, with salad dressing. Veal or other cold meat makes a palatable filling in a club sandwich. These sandwiches are bulky and are intended to be served on a plate and eaten with a knife and fork. They constitute the main dish for a luncheon or supper, but as they are ordinarily made with toast they are not so suitable for packing in a lunch box to be eaten several hours later.

Bacon and cottage cheese combine well in sandwiches either of plain bread or toast. Eggs and bacon can be made as acceptable in sandwiches as when served together for breakfast. The egg may be scrambled and mixed during cooking with the bacon cut up in small pieces, or it may be hard boiled, minced, and mixed with the bacon when being put into the sandwiches. Liver and bacon sandwiches are made by chopping the liver to a paste, seasoning it with salt, pepper, and small pieces of bacon, and using the mixture as a sandwich filling. Bacon may be added to give zest to any cold meat used in sandwiches. If the sandwich can be served while the bacon is hot, the result is particularly good. A little salad dressing is needed on the meat. Lettuce, watercress, celery or tomato may be added, making the result similar to a club sandwich except that bread is used instead of toast.

Bacon can be cooked and served with greens and beans, and used to garnish and give flavor to many vegetables, poultry and meat dishes. A small piece makes any soup tastier. Bacon and eggs, scrambled or fried, is hearty enough for a dinner dish occasionally. By using bacon frequently the housewife adds greatly to the flavor and interest of the food she serves.

Frying bacon so that it is thoroughly delicious and crisp is chiefly a matter of getting the water and excess fat out of it, says the United States Department of Agriculture. In order not to burn it, one should be very careful that neither the bacon nor the fat in the pan becomes overheated. Throughout the process the fat should remain a light brown color and should not be allowed to get dark brown. It is easier therefore to cook it slowly than to cook it fast.

To be crisp, bacon does not need to drain while it is cooking. It can even be fried in deep fat with excellent results.

CREAM CHEESE FOR SALADS IS EXCELLENT

Cheese Accessories for Salads.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

From the dietary standpoint, neufchatel and cream cheese are valuable for protein, fat, phosphorus and calcium. Since the American diet is likely to run low in calcium, it is well to keep in mind that all cheeses are a good source of that much-needed mineral.

Neufchatel and cream cheeses are suitable in any course of a meal. They may be part of the appetizer at the beginning of a dinner or of the dessert at the end, and in any course between.

The illustration, which was made by the United States Department of Agriculture, shows some of the ways cream or neufchatel cheese may be used for salad accessories. Green peppers may be hollowed out and stuffed with the cheese, then sliced across to be used as a garnish or as the main part of a salad, on a bed of lettuce. Cheese balls may be rolled in finely minced parsley or watercress, or in chopped nuts. A mixture of cheese, nuts, and one or more green vegetables, chopped, may be spread in the hollow part of a stalk of celery and passed with the salad. Olives, pimentoes and green peppers give good flavor to such mixtures.

Some of the cheese mixtures with fruits or vegetables may also be frozen like mousse, and then sliced and served on lettuce leaves as a frozen salad.

Would You Dismiss Police, asks McCulloch, Talk on Preparedness

One of a series of Articles written by Indiana Citizens, Soldiers and Men of Letters for the American Legion, Department of Ind.

What would you think of a man who would hang a copy of the Ten Commandments from the door knob of his unlocked house and then work for the abolishment of the Police Force? What would you think of a man who would allow his wife and children to walk through the dangerous parts of the city, knowing that there were no patrolmen to protect them against bodily harm? Has the millenium so nearly arrived that all men obey the mandate, "Thou shalt not steal?" Are we so close to perfection in conduct that the Commandment, "Thou shalt not kill," has become obsolete?

No sane man would take such a position. We still lock our doors against the thief. We still maintain protection from the murderer. Respect for law and order, respect for property, respect for human life are not born into a child's mind. These things are matters of education by teaching and by example. So long as men and women are not taught these precepts in their youth or do not live them in their maturity, just so long must we maintain our guardians of the law.

Nations do not differ from individuals in their reactions. National emotions are only the aggregate of many individuals emotions. Power and glory and gold can be just as tempting to a country as to a single person, and we would be culpable in the highest degree, would be guilty of a negligence positively criminal, if we should fail to provide protection against aggression from without. Alliances won't do it. Treaties have been shown to be scraps of paper. History is full of instances where erstwhile allies have become enemies almost over night.

Any self-respecting country like ours owes it to its traditions, to its living citizens, and to posterity, to be watchful and on guard always.

Dr. Carleton B. McCulloch

It is with the deepest regret that patriotic citizens see the current efforts to diminish our Army and restrict our Navy, just as every individual citizen would cry out against dismissing the Police Force and ajdourning the courts.

The splendid isolation which we have enjoyed in the past, by virtue of an ocean on either side, exists no longer. The Atlantic has already been bridged by transports. To the ex-soldier in general, to the Legionnaire in particular, who realizes these things, falls the duty of unceasing vigilance against such suicidal efforts to cripple our defense as are now being made through well-intentioned pacifists.

America is not imperialistic. Not one man in a hundred would approve of a war of conquest. Arguments are ridiculous to the effect that a large Army and Navy lead to aggression. What every true-hearted American wants is that his fellows and his children shall be assured the opportunity to grow up and live their lives under the constitution which has guaranteed the principles for which our forefathers died. Every such American should visualize the danger to a rich and unprotected country surrounded by debt-laden and envious neighbors. Sentiment is fine, but sentimentalism is slush. We all believe in the Sermon on the Mount and vote for peace on earth and good will amongst men, but we know just the same that those things are many generations in the future. God speed the work of the churches in their effort toward this happy end, but until that end is attained we must remember to be wakeful.

Of a value equal to every other part of the program of the Legion in our State this year is the duty of each individual and of every soldier, of whatever organization, or of no organization whatsoever, to urge his representatives in Congress, House and Senate both, to vote for adequate lines of defense. Citizens, On Guard!

"As the Twig is Bent,
So the Tree is Inclined."

In line with the foregoing and as an adjunct thereto, we must stop the backward movement in our schools and colleges in the matter of Military training. Organized efforts by mistaken sentimentalists are under way to eliminate Military training from our high schools and our colleges, much might be said of the physical value to the growing boy of the training he now receives along this line:—the exercise, correction of posture, etc., would be sufficient justification for maintaining these corps. But the real argument is again the necessity for preparedness.

Distinguished authority to the contrary notwithstanding, a million men would not be ready to fight the next day in case the war drums sounded. We need a skeleton organization of officers familiarized as much as may be with their possible duties, on which to pad the rank and file. Other-wise we should have only an unorganized mob, requiring the tardy education of officers and leaders after the need had become a present one. Those who acquired experience in the late war in the various branches of the service are getting older every year. Who would take their places in the event of a National emergency? Where would the president look for officer personnel in case of national danger? Our various training corps in the schools and colleges and elsewhere are designed to supply these men if the call comes, but efforts are under way to undermine this scheme. Plans are proposed looking to the crippling or abolishment of compulsory training. Would you send your boy out into mercantile life with no knowledge of arithmetic? Would you send a girl to be the wife and mother with no knowledge of housekeeping? That would be just as reasonable as sending our men out in the case of a national danger, officered by men who did not know their craft. Every citizen in the state should use his influence and that of his friends to block any plan looking toward crippling our schools and colleges in their efforts toward the proper training of our youth. We demand that our representatives in our State Legislature vote against any bill opposed to the patriotic program now being carried out. We are false to our trust if we do not.

Citizens, On Guard!

FINANCIAL STATISTICS OF THE STATE GOVERNMENT OF INDIANA FOR 1926

Washington, D. C., June 6, 1927. —The Department of Commerce announces a summary of the financial statistics of the State of Indiana for the fiscal year ending September 80, 1926.

Expenditures:—The payments for maintenance and operation of the general departments of Indiana for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1926, amounted to $24,747,324, or $7.94 per capita. This includes $5,686,314, apportionments for education to the minor civil divisions of the State. In 1925 the comparative per capita for maintenance and aperation of general departments was $7.29, and in 1917, $4.28. The interest on debt amounted to $145,431; and outlays for permanent improvements, $11,188,908. The total payments, therefore, for expenses of general departments, interest, and outlays were $36,081,663. Of this amount $154,651 represents payments by a State department or enterprise to another on account of services. The totals include all payments for the year, whether made from current revenues or from the proceeds of bond issues.

Of the governmental costs reported above, $14,467,837 was for highways, $5,768,179 being for maintenance and $8,699,658 for construction.

Revenues:—The total revenue receipts of Indiana for 1926 were $42,294,392, or $13.57 per capita. This was $17,401,637 more than the total payments of the year, exclusive of the payments for permanent improvements. This excess of revenue receipts is reflected in purchase of investments, payment of short term obligations and cash balances, not shown in this summary. Of the total revenue receipts $154,651 represents receipts from a State department or enterprise on account of services. Property and special taxes represented 38.0 per cent of the total revenue for 1926, 40.7 per cent for 1925, and 61.1 per cent for 1917. The increase in the amount of property and special taxes collected was 85.9, per cent from 1917 to 1925, but there was a decrease of 2.6 per cent from 1925 to 1926. The per capita property and special taxes were $5.16 in 1926, $5.40 in 1925 and $3.10 in 1917.

Earnings of general departments, or compensation for services rendered by state officials, represented 9.1 per cent of the total revenue for 1926, 8.7 per cent for 1925, and 11.9 per cent for 1917.

Business and nonbusiness licenses constituted 36.9 per cent of the total revenue for 1926, 32.5 per cent for 1925, and 13.7 per cent for 1917.

Receipts from business licenses consist chiefly of taxes exacted from insurance and other incorporated companies and of sales tax on gasoline, while those from nonbusiness licenses comprise chiefly taxes on motor vehicles and amounts paid for hunting and fishing privileges.

The increased percentage of receipts from business and nonbusiness licenses shown for 1926 was due to greater amounts received from the sales tax on gasoline and from motor vehicle licenses.

Indebtedness:—The net indebtedness (funded or fixed debt less sinking fund assets) of Indiana on September 30, 1926, was $1,689,000, or $0.54 per capita. In 1925 the per capita debt was $0.55 and in 1917, $0.06.

Assessed Valuations and Tax Levies:—For 1926 the assessed valuation of property in Indiana subject to ad valorem taxation was $5,310,571,395; the amount of State taxes levied was $12,214,314; and the per capita levy, $3.92. In 1925 the per capita levy was $4.83, and in 1917, $2.63.

Community Building

Architect's High Place in Scheme of Things

Recently the great Swedish architect, Ragner Ostberg, the man who designed the Stockholm city hall, the perfect building, as it has been called, was honored at a great dinner in London at which the prince of Wales apparently was glad to preside. Thus is public, thus is national, recognition given by a people appreciative of the place such arts hold in their social and economic scheme of things.

The English people honor this Swedish architect because they know that the beauty that he caused to grow in stone will be a monument that people will honor 500 years hence, because they know that Sir Christopher Wren, architect of St. Paul's, is a greater figure in their national life than half a dozen much advertised present-day politicians.

The English know of what value to tradition and their consciousness as a nation have been their cathedrals and their universities. Take away a score of these architectural gems and England would be a poorer place. In America we've got to come to the same viewpoint, not merely with regard to our architects, but with regard to our creative thinkers generally.

It may be that the time will come again as it was in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth centuries—when a knowledge of architecture will be part of the mental equipment of every gentleman; and when his esthetic impulses will not be exhausted by the lines of a car or the range of a radio set.

Small Towns Behind in Health Promotion?

There is official authority for the statement that 84 per cent of the rural population is inadequately provided with facilities for the promotion of health. It is contained in the report of Surgeon General Cummings of the United States public health service, who intimates that conditions arising from this single omission cost the country in the neighborhood of a billion dollars a year. It may be said that the pecuniary aspect of health is not the most important one; it is nevertheless easiest to visualize and it helps to drive a fact home.

It is an odd paradox that the very advance of a science should have resulted in withdrawing its benefits from a large proportion of the people. Increase in the bulk of knowledge has encouraged specialization, which in turn has led to concentration. The passing of the general practitioner on whom the rural sections relied has left a void that the new dispensation has not filled. The cities, on the other hand, have the advantage not only of personal medical attendance, but of a new organization of preventive measures made possible largely by the co-operation of many men possessing especial, but relatively narrow, skill in each of many different fields. And loss of the country doctor is more than an individual matter, since he is more than ever needed in his capacity of general adviser and interpreter of the science of sanitation and hygiene to the community.—Portland Oregonian.

Brick Work in Garden

Brick is an excellent material for garden walks and paving, and their use is by no means confined to formal or costly garden landscaping. They adapt themselves charmingly to simple informal gardens and homes.

In the formal garden brick pavings usually follow some geometric pattern, but in the informal garden they may be laid out irregularly, directly on the ground, without mortar, but preferably on a layer of tamped sand. After a winter they become delightfully irregular, assuming an air of age with grass growing between them.

On terraces they are usually laid with a foundation of concrete so that they can resist frost. Brick work in a garden should be soft in tone, like the old-fashioned brick.

Selecting Home Site

The selection of the home site must be governed by its fitness to the architectural scheme; its neighborhood tendencies, its general surrounding characteristics of neat or slovenly neighbors, its attraction for the sort of associates that are desired, its proportionate dimensions, its proximity to schools and other desirable developments, its freedom from becoming a manufacturing or business district, and above all things, with respect to the fact that here is the plot that is to be adorned by your someday house.

OPENING CONCERT SATURDAY NIGHT

C. A. Woodcox, Director of Community Welfare Band Announces Program

The band concerts will commence for the season on Saturday night of this week and it is expected that the opening program will be heard by a big crowd. Throughout the summer months people for miles around will come to St. Joe to listen to the music of the band, the concerts proving a great drawing card in past years.

An excellent program has been prepared by Director Woodcox for this first concert. The expense is being underwritten by the merchants and as soon as the canvass is completed a statement will be printed showing the doners.

W E. Henly will have charge of the wagon and lights.

Following is the program starting at 8:00 o'clock;

March .....El Capitan
Overature .....The Champion
March .....Battle Mountan
Waltz .....Wandering Gypsy
March .....Washington Post
Jazz ....."That Certain Party"
Overature .....Old Ireland
Cake Walk ..The Colored Four Hundred.
Jazz .....Honey Bunch"

THIS STORY MIGHT HAVE BEEN FAKED BUT IT'S A DARN GOOD YARN, ANYWAY

An editor down in Texas, says the Stillwater (Minn.) Gazette, has been accused on several occasions of not telling the truth in his newspaper.

In newspaper parlance, his ire was roused, and he announced:

"A lot of people in this town fall out with the editor and brand him a liar when the ordinary mistakes of life show up in the paper. You have a little charity and fellow feeling for every man in town but the editor. You claim you want the facts and d——d if we don't give them to you. Read the next issue of this sheet and you will see facts with the bark off.

"I admit that I have been a liar, an editorial liar ever since I have been editing this sheet, but I have never printed a lie in these columns except to keep somebody's feelings from being hurt. I am not afraid of any of you and I'll be dad-blamed if I don't print the truth from now on or until you get out of the habit of calling me a liar every time I make some unavoidable typographical errors. Now watch my smoke!

And here are some paragraphs of his "smoke" in the next issue:

"John Bennin, the laziest man in town, made a trip to Belleview yesterday."

"Rev. Sty preached last Sunday at the local church. His sermon was punk and uninteresting except some stuff he quoted from Bob Ingersoll, for which he failed to give Bob any credit. He also cited a few passages from William Gilbert Munsey's sermons and had the unlimited gall to palm it off as his own."

"Tom Spardin married Miss Carolixe Meadows last trades day at the county seat. It wasn't generally known, but the marriage was brought about mainly by a Remington shotgun manipulated by the bride's father. Tom concluded that marrying was the healthiest thing he could do until other arrangements had been made."

"Regan Lloyd, cashier of the State Bank of Willow Grove, died last Wednesday and was buried by the Odd Fellows at Pleasant Mound cemetery. He had been taking this paper for several years and had not paid us a cent. We thought that being a banker he would certainly pay some time. We will sell the account for two bits of groceries."

"Married—Miss Susie Seruggs and Horace Griffin. The bride is a very ordinary girl who flirts with every traveling man she meets and never helped her mother three days in her life all put together. She is anything but a beauty, resembling a gravel pit in the face and walks like a duck. The groom is a natural born loafer and bum. He never did a lick of work until his step-daddy ran him off from home last fall. He went to the county seat and rather than starve to death he accepted a job as chambermaid in a livery stable. As son as his ma found out where he was she went up and got him and brought him home. They now reside at the home of his wife's father and he has no definite plans for the future. Susie will have a hard row to hoe."

The story didn't say what happened after the issue came out, but reprinting this might throw a scare into the gentry who are wont to howl "liar" when the paper makes a trifling mistake.

VICTORY FOR AMERICAN IDEALS

This country never faced such a period of prosperity as appears to be ahead of it.

And therein lies our greatest danger.

Can we as a nation keep our head and not become soft and discontented?

Will we in our quest for more of the nimble dollars allow political sooth-sayers to undermine our government with visionary schemes at public expense?

Will material prosperity give us the "swellhead" and cause us to feel that we are too "important" to attend to the troublesome little affairs of government?

If this attitude overtakes us, look out for trouble.

As individuals we are "small potatoes" in the scheme of economic development.

But if each individual does his part to maintain American ideals and sound conditions in government and industry, "small potatoes" will grow into big potatoes and our national "potato crop" (stability, security, prosperity) will be on a safe and enduring basis.

The feat which Captain Charles Lindberg accomplished is typically American. Nothing could better illustrate our spirit of individual initiative and enterprise. Every American might be called a pioneer, for every American has the right to strike out with his own ideas in whatever field of endeavor appeals to him.

It is this priceless heritage of freedom and opportunity for the individual which each of us should strive to uphold. Our government should always be maintained on a basis which protects and encourages the individual and private industry, rather than on a basis which restricts and destroys experiments, growth and ambition.

Not only was Lindberg's crossing of the Atlantic typically American in its freedom from pomp and ceremony, but Lindberg himself is aymbolical of American ideals. He had the ability, courage and driving force to accomplish results in the face of seemingly insurmountable barriers.

It is the Lindberg spirit, the American spirit, which has given us our wonderful modern conveniences and comforts.

The development of transcontinental railroads, telephones, electric power, radio, automobiles and our system of business, banking and insurance, while not as spectacular as Lindberg's feat, required a high type of courage, perseverance and enterprise for their successful accomplishment.

Our system of government which has given us unparalleled opportunities, was founded, built up, and is maintained by men capable of understanding the advantages to be derived from the fullest encouragement of individual initiative and enterprise.

OPEN SEASON TO START JUNE 16TH

The open season of lawful fishing for all kinds of species in Hoosier public waters begins on Thursday, June 16, and already many are preparing to be on stream bank and lake edge for an initial tussle with the elusive bass, crappie, bluegill, pike, rock bass or (Goggle-eye,) pickerel, wall-eyed pike and yellow perch, protected for the past few weeks.

According to George N. Mannfeld, superintendent of fisheries and game for the state conservation department, prospects for excellent lake fishing are bright. Such water bodies have not been materially affected by heavy rains, although the continued cold weather curtailed natural propagation to a great extent. Just the reverse condition prevails in stream and rivers all of which have been out of their banks many times this spring, working havoc with spawning. He points out this season more than ever before brings out the advantages of artificial propagation in the state's five hatcheries, for the crop of baby fish raised this year will aid in making up for the deficient natural reproduction lost through high waters and unseasonal cold weather.

The department has planted already this season 9,260,000 wall-eyed pike fry and 2,150,000 yellow perch. Each of the five hatcheries have produced some baby bass, but it is too early to predict the season's output though officials hope it may exceed any previous season's production.

Each year brings a greater demand on the state hatcheries for stock fish, Mannfeld says, and last year the division planted many million young fish in eighty-six counties of Indiana. This artificial propagating and stocking, together with rigid law enforcement, better general law observance and wider co-operation of the public becoming acquainted with the work, have gone far to make Indiana one of the best fishing states in the nation, this conservation department officials declares.

SPEAKS OF LUTHERAN ORPHAN HOME

The Rev. E. H. Dornblaser, of Springfield, Ohio, who is sent out among the different Lutheran churches in the interest of the Osterlen Orphans' Home, gave a talk at the Lutheran church, Tuesday evening, in which he gave a brief history of the founding and the maintaining of that most worthy institution, together with the present needs and the mode required to carry on the work at the Home.

In order to meet the increasing demands of the children seeking admission to the home, it was necessary to greatly enlarge the buildings that more children might be accomodated. So an urgent appeal was made in behalf of the home for more friends to meet the assumed obligations, to which many will gladly respond, no doubt.

I WISH TO SAY, THANKS

I wish to thank the W. C. T. U. for the beautiful bouquet delivered last week and also for their thoughtfulness in presenting the same. I shall always cherish the memory of these fine ladies and the work they are doing.

NATIONAL SPEAKER COMING TO ST. JOE

J. H. Larimore, who is scheduled at Winona Lake the week of June 20, has been secured to appear at the M. P. Church on Sunday morning, June 26, to discuss matters relating to our notional affairs. Next week will bring other information concerning the meeting.

Only after a public favorite has become a "has-been" does he begin to realize the emptiness of applause.

In the shadow of the "cheap" house paint can

Don't let the low price on "cheap" paint fool you. Once you get in the shadow of the "cheap" paint can you will have a gloomy outlook. You may think the low price is saving you money. But your reward will be a bigger paint bill—an inferior job — a short-life job — and big repainting bills.

There is only one way to real economy in house paint. Use the best paint money can buy—SWP. It costs more per gallon—but much less per job and per year. Ask us to prove it.

GUARANTEED!

SWP is guaranteed to look better, last longer, cost less per job and less per year than any paint on the market.

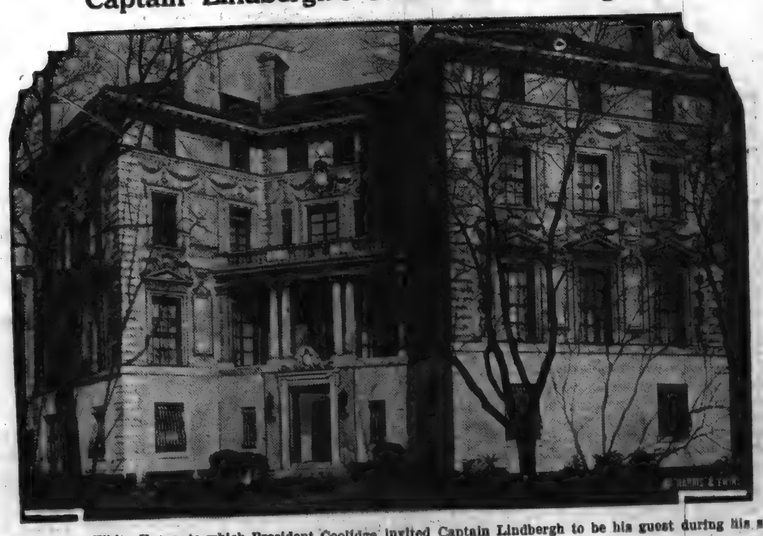
Captain Lindbergh's Home in Washington



Temporary White House, to which President Coolidge invited Captain Lindbergh to be his guest during his stay in the national capital.

HIS FLYING CROSS

Above is a sketch of the distinguished flying cross, new American decoration, awarded to Captain Lindbergh. He gets the first one of these crosses made. The medal is of bronze suspended from a silk ribbon of the national colors. It is a simple cross on which is superimposed a four-bladed airplane propeller projecting slightly beyond the ends of the cross. In the angles of the cross are sun rays, forming a square typifying the splendor and glory of the deed for which the cross is awarded.

"GOOD-BY"

—17—

Claude Dabbs looked at her, saw that she was leaving it to him, and though he had planned this meeting a hundred times, did not know which beginning to make. He could think of nothing but how blind he had been. "Good God! Why didn't I see it the first time?" he thought to himself. "She's so like my mother."

He turned to the girl, and said: "Mary, will your mother be in when we get to your hotel?"

"I think so."

"Then do you think you could come to my hotel, and talk to me for a few minutes. I've got a sitting room. We could be quite private."

Now Mary knew she was in for it, but she loved the nice, simple way he was taking it. Absolutely direct. What was Mother running away from?

"If I don't stay too long," she answered. "Mother will be anxious, if I am not back in half an hour."

"Then we'll do it." He spoke to the driver.

They said nothing more, except to remark on the weather.

At the desk, when he received his key, Mary noticed that, as she stood a little apart, Dabbs was evidently telling the clerk she was his daughter. She knew at once that this was his careful thought for her, and did not mind in the least the manner of his doing it. Indeed, it was a good manner.

As they went up in the elevator, Claude had a sudden dread that Ned might come back and find them, and he did not want that. Plenty of time for Ned, when he, Claude, found out where they stood. He opened the door of the sitting room and ushered Mary in. She had time to think, swiftly and confusedly, that this was doing it rather well for a country grocer. He seemed unable to speak. She felt a like disability lie upon her own tongue. She sat down and waited.

Claude crossed to the door and closed it. Mary instinctively felt the struggle and difficulty going on in his mind. He did not yet know how much she knew or did not know. She felt sorry for him, and quite involuntarily tried to help.

"Father—"

C. M. Dabbs shot out a strong arm. Mary was lifted out of the chair and held firmly. She heard a voice above her hat, imploring:

"Say that again, my girl, and say it slow."

"What?" asked the startled Mary, rather faintly. There was not much space to speak in.

"What you called me then. Oh, my God, girl, do you know that it's true?"

Mary drew back and looked up at him.

"Heavens!" she gasped. "Did I say it out loud? I was afraid I would."

"Say it!" commanded C. M., and shook her a little.

"Don't Dad, you frighten me."

She was engulfed in C. M.'s embrace. He held her closely and she found it not in the least alarming or uncomfortable.

He was murmuring to himself: "My little girl! My Mary!" Then he held her off, as she had him, and looked at her. Mary looked into a pair of blue eyes marvelously like her own. There was a softness of tears behind them, but none fell.

"Don't be frightened. Your father doesn't mean to be rough. Only—My God! All the years I've wanted you. I'll never forgive Polly for that."

Mary raised her head warningly. "Not a word against Mother!"

C. M.'s grasp upon her tightened again. "Not a word. Only she should have told me, long ago."

"Yes, I think so, too, Dad," Mary agreed, "but I can't make her see it."

C. M. looked down at her sternly. "How long have you known?"

"Since last night. I haven't been able to think about anything else, but Mother won't talk about it, and she meant me not to tell. I didn't tell, did I?"

"Not strictly speaking," C. M. assured her. "You just said 'Father,' all to yourself, and I heard you."

"Dear, dear," and Mary tried to sound distressed and repentant, "what will become of me when Mother knows?"

C. M.'s arm tightened about her, as though for protection. Mary leaned on it.

"The thing that's got to be understood between us at once, is that my mother is the sweetest, best-looking, most wonderful mother a girl ever had. Father, what were you thinking about to let her get away from you?"

Claude frowned. He led Mary back to her chair and sat down beside her. "See here," he said, looking at his daughter in alarm, "I don't know how much Polly has told you."

"Everything."

"Everything!" C. M. started from his chair, changed his mind and sat down heavily. "Then that saves me something. We're not going to discuss it."

Mary nodded. "Let's take everything for granted, and go right on from now. That will be the best thing."

"How can we?"

"We must," Mary announced with decision. "There's got to be certain reticences."

"Oh, Lord!" groaned Claude. "You don't think I want to talk over these 'certain reticences' with you." He breathed heavily. "No, it's Polly." He looked at Mary as though they had been in league for years. "How can we get round her?"

Mary shook her head.

Claude looked at her moodily. "I know Polly." He looked down at the carpet, busy with his problem.

Mary came to him quietly, perched herself on his knee, and put her arm about his neck. He did want petting so badly. "Mother will simply have to take notice of my father."

C. M. promptly kissed her. It was a nice kiss, on the cheek, and C. M. wasn't clumsy about it either. Mary's appreciation of him rose. He had a certain deftness, this big man. He wasn't clumsy nor was he vulgar. Mother might have—but Claude interrupted her train of thought.

"Say That Again, My Girl, and Say It Slow."

"One thing I can't forgive is keeping you from me. I can hardly keep from squeezing the life out of you, Mary. I'm so glad to have you within reach, and know you're my girl. But the little Mary! By Jiminy! How sweet you must have been with your hair down your back, or maybe tied with a big bow of ribbon, and little strapped slippers on your cute little feet. Polly cheated me out of that. Why, look, you're a great big girl, and I'm a strange man to you, and you may be engaged to some hulking fellow, for all I know, and no room in your life for a father."

Despite the fact that he tried to treat it lightly, Mary felt the poignant regret in his tone, and her heart ached for her father. What could she do to make him know that he had not only a place in her life but her heart.

"I'm not engaged," she assured him, as she put up her hands to her smart little hat and jerked it off, and slipped from his knee. "Maybe no one will ever ask me." Claude made a little noise of scornful unbelief, but Mary stopped him. "Stare hard at that picture and don't look around until I tell you."

Dabbs obeyed her, wondering a little, and Mary slipped the hairpins from her head.

"Now!"

C. M. felt something soft and silky touching his hand. He looked at Mary. Her hair down her back as a child would wear it, she was standing beside him, smiling fearlessly. The years seemed to have slipped away from her.

"There, poor old Dad. Pretend I'm little Mary."

Dabbs laid his big hand caressingly on the silky head, but shook his own. "You're a dear, Mary, but put it up, my girl. It isn't the same thing. Not but what I'd be content enough if I could have you running in and out of my house now, but there's Polly. I'll have to take you back to her, and then what?"

Mary could not answer him. She went to the mirror over the little writing desk and began piling up her hair. "Shall I tell her I've seen you?" she asked.

Dabbs watched her, fascinated. It was wonderful to think that slender lovely thing was his daughter. "Would that be a good thing, do you think?"

Mary thought for a moment, then shook her head. As she slowly put a shell pin in, she had made up her mind to tell him about Mother. It was the best thing, to be absolutely frank. She couldn't juggle things the way Mother did: "You'd better know about Mother," she announced. "We're sailing for Venice tomorrow."

"Tomorrow! Venice!"

Mary nodded as she drove home the last two pins and reached for her hat. "Mother's running away. We're running away from you, and my instinct tells me Mother will run far."

Dabbs sat down on the arm of the chair, thinking.

"And if I tell her I've seen you—why, she'll move again, and it won't be Venice, and I won't be able to tell you where we are going."

"You're not to tell her," Dabbs said, decidedly, "and it will be Venice. Do you know your hotel?"

"The Royal Danieli."

"Well, say nothing. I'll meet you there."

"You'll meet us! Oh, Father! Can you leave the grocery store?"

Dabbs nodded, smiling. "Easy I can, when it's you."

Mary settled her hat with a slightly saucy tilt. "Then you'll tell Mother there. My! It's romantic!" Dearly would she love to see the meeting.

C. M. crossed the room, took her by the dimpled chin and tilted her face so that he could look into the eyes that she tried to hide with her long lashes.

"It isn't romantic," he said. "And much as it would please you to manage the affair, young lady, you can't. Polly Johnston and I will manage that part of it by ourselves."

"Oh Father, how could you?"

"I'm not so slow as I look, daughter, and I know Polly. She was never to be driven, or coaxed either. Polly will have to settle it herself, and that's the only safe way."

Mary gave his arm a squeeze. "Oh, C. M. Dabbs, you're a wonder. If the angels had asked me, I couldn't have picked any father I'd like better."

Claude looked at her gravely. "I'm rough, in some ways, girl, but if you like me I haven't wasted my life."

"I only wish I was a boy, Father. How we would develop your grocery business together, and make money so that Mother would admire us!"

Dabbs frowned. "I don't want you a boy. The angels suited me, too, when they picked you." He held Mary's hand tightly in his. "Mary, is Polly like that still? Does she care as much about money, I mean?"

Mary studied her father as she answered: "She does and she doesn't. Mother isn't easy to explain. She likes the things money brings with it—and she hasn't much left."

Dabbs started. "How's that?"

Mary explained as much as she knew, and Dabbs frowned as she mentioned the borrowing from Loren Rangeley.

"Mary, shall we give her money?"

Mary shook her head. "Not now. It wouldn't be quite safe. Mother would use it to run further away from—us."

Highest Quality in Proper Self-Esteem

Humility is not always a grace, and sometimes is a close approach to hypocrisy. Lord Bacon was right when he warned public speakers to avoid excuses and professions of humility. "Though they seem to proceed of modesty, yet are they but bravery," he said.

There are people who seek to lash themselves into virtuous living by reminding themselves that they are poor worms of the dust. It is not always the best way. It was not the way Nehemiah held himself true to his principles.

There was a time of danger, and the leading men of Jerusalem were holding terrified counsel behind closed doors. "Let us meet together in the house of God, and let us shut the doors of the temple," they counseled. But Nehemiah would not heed their warning, though he was the man whom danger threatened most. "Should such a man as I flee?" he demanded. "And who is there that, being as I am, would go into the temple to save his life? I will not go in."

He was ashamed to disgrace as good a man as he knew himself to be!—Youth's Companion.

Cobbler a Philanthropist

John Pounds is a name familiar to most Englishmen, but meaning little if anything to the average American. He won fame as a philanthropist by his self-denying acts in rescuing and training the poor youths and waifs of Portsmouth, though he depended on his occupation as cobbler for his own support.

The War at Close Range Described In a Remarkable Series By an Officer of the Marines —

Brigade artillery officer—chap the colonel knew out on the Asiatic station—happened in. How about it—just about half as much stuff as you fellows wasted on the Tartar wall that time—eh? Sure: it could be arranged. Ten minutes' intensive; say one battery; where you want it? Best jump-off is from Terry's battalion—about here—he has two companies here.

Six hundred yards to go; keep the Bois well away—well starboard, as you Leathernecks say; come back the same route. Wheat. Little gully here. Craters just beyond. Main line at least a hundred meters back. Good! Let's call up Terry and see if he'll give you the men. . . . Terry would give him twenty-five men and two chaut-chauts and not a marine more. Who wanted a raid, anyway? Sending two support companies up to the Bois as soon as it's dark. Looks interestin' on the right. . . . Good! All set. Start your covering fire at 23 hours 15. You jump off at 23 hours 19. Take you six minutes to get over, huh? "All right, colonel, bonne chance!"

Just before dark the colonel and Captain de Stegur were at battalion headquarters. "Whitehead will give you your men, and I'm sending my scout officer along. Needs that sort of thing. Be sure you come back where you went out. Crabbe's to the right of there. You know Crabbe. Shoots quick."

"But, My Colonel," represented Captain de Stegur, "one should arrange, one should explain, one should instruct—in effect one should rehearse—"

"Rehearse hell, sir! I'm due in Paris tomorrow night. Where those marines, major? I'll tell 'em what I want—"

So it was that a wedge of men debouched into the wheat at 23 hours 19 minutes, it being sufficiently dark.

That battalion scout officer and a disillusioned sergeant, with hash-marks on his sleeve, were the point. The men were echeloned back, right, and left with an automatic rifle on each flank. In the center marched the colonel, smoking, to the horror of all, a cigar. Smoking was not done up there, after dark. With him was the elegant French captain, who appeared to be very gallantly resigned to it. The story would, he reflected, amaze and delight his mess—if he ever got back with it! These droll Americans! He must remember just what this colonel said: a type, Nom de Dieu! If only he had not worn his new uniform—the cloth chosen by his wife, you conceive.

The scout officer, leading, had out his canteen and wet his dry mouth. He was acutely conscious of his empty stomach. His mind dwelt yearningly on the mess-kit, freighted nobly with monkey-meat and tomatoes, awaiting him in the dependable Tommy's musette.

A hundred meters forward the last shells burst, and he saw new dirt. Ahead, a spot darker than the dark; he went up to it. Away on the right a flare soared, and something gleamed dull in the black hole at his feet—a round, deep helmet with the pale blur of a face under it; a click, and the shadow of a movement there, and a little flicker; a matter of split seconds; the scout officer had a bayonet in his stomach, almost—Feldritter Kurt Iden, Company Six of the Margrave of Brandenburg regiment (this established later by brigade intelligence, on examination of the pay-book of the deceased), being on front post with his squad, heard a noise hard on the cessation of the shelling, and put out his neck. Dear God, shoot! Shoot! quickly!

The scout officer was conscious of a monstrous surge of temper. He gathered his feet under him, and his hands crooked like claws, and he hurled himself. In the same breath there was a long, bright flash right under, his arm, and the mad crack of a Springfield. The disillusioned sergeant had estimated the situation, loosed off from the hip at perhaps seven feet, and shot the German through the throat.

Too late to stop himself, the scout officer went head first into the crater, his hands locking on something wet and hairy, just the size to fill them; and presently he was at the bottom of the crater, dirt in his mouth and a buzzing in his head, strangling something that flopped and gurgled and made remarkable noises under his hands. There were explosions and people stepped hard on his back and legs. He became sane again and realized that whatever it was it was dead. He groped in his puttees for his knife, and cut off its shoulder-straps and a button or two, and looted its bosom of such papers as there were—those being details the complete scout officer must attend to. More explosions, and voices bleating "Kamarade!"—terribly anxious voices—in his ear.

The disillusioned sergeant, a practical man, had ducked into the crater right behind the scout officer. The raiding party in his rear had immediately fired their weapons in all directions. A great many rifles on forward stabbed the dark with sharp flame, and some of these were very near. The sergeant tossed a grenade at the nearest; he had toted that Frog citron grenade around for quite a while, somewhat against his judgment; he now reflected that it was good business—"grenades—I hope to spit in yo' mess-kit they are—ask the man that used one—" It was good business, for it fell fair in the other crater, thirty feet away, where the rest of that front-post squad were beginning to react like the brave German men they were. Two of these survived, much shaken, and scuttled into the clever little tunnel that connected them with the Feldritter's crater, emerging with pacific cries at the sergeant's very feet. Being a man not given to excitement, he accepted them alive, the while he dragged the scout officer standing. "We got our prisoners, sir. Let's beat it," he suggested. "Their lines is wakin' up, sir. It's gonna be bad here—"

The colonel, as gallant a man as ever lived, but not fast, barked into them. "Prisoners? Hey? How many? Two? Excellent, by God! Give 'em here, young man!" and he seized the unhappy Boches by their collars and shook them violently. "Thought you'd start something, hey? Thought you'd start something, hey?"

The scout officer now blew his whistle, the sergeant shouted in a voice of brass, and the colonel made the kind of remarks a colonel makes. It is related by truthful marines there present that every German in Von Boehn's army fired on them as they went back but no two agree as to the manner of their return. It is, however, established that the colonel, bringing up the rear, halted about half-way over, drew his hitherto virgin pistol, and wheeled around for a parting shot—something in the nature of un beau geste. Seeing this, the tall French captain, to his rear and left, drew his pistol and wheeled also, imagining pursuit. The colonel—and to this attest the scout officer and his sergeant—then shot the Frenchman through the—as sea-going marines say—stern-sheets.

The scout officer and the sergeant got him back some way, both filled with admiration at his language.

By the time they stumbled through the nervous outposts to their own place, the French captain had lapsed into English. "As a wound, you perceive, it is good for a permission. But it is not a wound. It is an indignity! And, besides, my new breeches! Ah, Dieu de Dieu! Ce sale colonel-ci! What will my wife say! That one, she chose the cloth herself! Tonnerre de canon!"—and he sank into stricken silence.

The raiding party shook down in their several holes, praising God, and went to sleep. The colonel, with his prisoners, received the compliments of the battalion headquarters and departed for Brigade. The scout officer observed, to his amazement, that they had been out of their lines less than twenty minutes. "Where's the Forty-ninth?" he wanted to know first. "Hell, Jim, they went up to the Bois right after the major sent for you. An' the Seventeenth. We're moving battalion headquarters up there now. Get your people and come along. Attack or something."

After a very full night, the scout officer crawled and scuttled along the last tip of the Bois de Belleau, looking for a hole that a battalion runner told him about. "Seen the lootenant diggin' in just past that last Maxim gun, sir. Right at the nose of the woods where the big rocks is. There's about a dosen dead Heinies layin' by a big tree, all together. Can't miss it, sir." The scout officer had no desire to be moving in the cool of the morning, when all well-regulated people are asleep if possible, and if you moved here the old Boche had a way of sniping at you with 88s—that wicked, flat-trajectory Austrian gun—but he followed an urge that only Tommie could supply.

So he came at last to a miserable shelter scooped in the lee of a rock. Here two long legs protruded from under a brown German blanket, and here he prodded and shook until the deplorable countenance of his brother officer emerged yawning.

"Say," demanded the scout officer, "you save my slum? Gimme my slum."

"Why, hello, Jim! Why didn't you come back, like you said you was? Where you been? You said you was comin' right back."

"Didn't you save me my monkey meat? We went on a raid, damn it I—"

"Raid? Raid? What raid?"

"Oh, we went over to Torcy. Gimme my monkey-meat."

"Well, you see, Jim—the fact is—well, we got moved up here right after you left, and they attacked from in here, an' we came on in after them. Just got to sleep—"

"I haven't had any sleep or any chow or anything—two sardines, by the bright face of God—" The scout officer pounced upon a frowsy musette bag which the other had used for a pillow and jerked out a fire-blackened mess-kit. He wrenched the lid off and snarled horribly. "Empty, by God!"

His hands fell lax across his knees. He looked sadly over the blasted fields of Torcy, and he said, with the cold bitterness of a man who has tried it all and come to a final conclusion: "War—sure—is—hell."

There were places like this down in the Touraine country, around the town Americans called St. Onion. Canals with poplars mirrored in them, where it was pleasant to loaf at the end of the day. The women were kindly and disposed to make friends; it is a pity that there were not enough to go around. They had, also, an eye for corporals and sergeants; the bored privates on the bank, sentimental souls, are singing "Sweet Ad-e-line. . . . " or it may be something very different. The sergeant, a sensitive spirit, will presently see that they get some extra police duty.

CHAPTER X

The Rhine.

The bugles went while it was still as dark as the inside of a dog. There was swearing and sickly yellow candle-light in the billets, mean houses in a mean little Rhine-Province town, and the chow lines formed on the company galleys in an icy December rain. The rain pattered on helmets and mess-kits, and fell in slanting lines through the smoky circles of light where the cooking-fires burned feebly.

The faces of the marines, as they filed out of the dark for food, were gray and frowsy. The cooks issued corn-bill hash, and dared any man to growl on the coffee. How the hell could it be biled enough, with wet wood and very little of that—been up all night, as it is—you sports just pull in your necks!

The companies gulped their ration in sullen silence, rolled damp blankets into the prescribed pack, and when the bugles squawked assembly, they fell in without confusion or enthusiasm. Platoon sergeants, with flash lights or lanterns, called the rolls; somewhere out in front, first sergeants received the reports; officers clumped along the lines to their units, grumbling.—"All here, first sergeant?"—"Beg the capt'n's pardon—couldn't see you in the dark, sir—all present-counted-for, sir!—" "Nice day for a hike. Major says, goin' to the Rhine today. Eighteen or twenty kilomets—don't know exactly. Dam' such a war! I'd like the old kind, where you went into winter quarters—Brrr—" The captain pulled his collar around his ears.

Presently a bad-tempered drawling voice bayed "Squads right—march!—" There was a shuffle of hobnails in the mud, and the rattle of rifle-slings. The First battalion of the Fifth marines took the road.

Giraffe a Figure in Old Roman Pageants

The wonderful, long-necked, spotted creature, the giraffe, has an interesting history. Zoologists in deciding its actual species place it between the deer and the hollow-horned ruminants.

The name "giraffe" seems to be derived from the Arabian "serapha" which by some is supposed to have been a corruption of "soraphe" the Egyptian for "long neck."

In the days of imperial Rome giraffes from the Libyan desert were exhibited in the triumphs of various emperors, and were probably shown to the Romans during the dictatorship of Julius Caesar.

From the period of the Roman empire till the close of the Fifteenth century these magnificent animals were unknown in Europe.

In the last years of that century Lorenzo de Medici became possessed of a specimen, apparently perfectly tame, which was shown in Florence, and as it was led through the streets often halted, and raising its lofty head to some high balcony, received some dainty—fruit or confection—from the dwellers of the house before which it had stayed its progress.

From that date till the reign of George IV no giraffe was seen in Europe until the year 1827, when Mahommed Ali, viceroy of Egypt, sent one as a present to the king of England.

High Offices; No Salaries

Many high offices in England are filled by men who receive no salaries, among which is that of the prime minister. The prime minister, however, usually accepts some other post such as first lord of the treasury, which has a salary of $25,000 a year. Justices of the peace, guardians of the poor and district councillors give their services free. The lord mayor of London, though he receives a salary of $50,000 a year, cannot hope to escape with paying out less than $125,000 a year in the fulfillment of his office, so that it really costs him $75,000 a year to hold the office.

SOMETHING ABOUT LIVER

SCIENTIFIC research, together with many practical tests over long and short periods, show that liver appetizingly cooked and served frequently tends to increase the count of red corpuscles in the blood. A diet rich in liver is now being given in leading institutions as a corrective of anemia and ailments of such character.

Calf's liver is considered a great delicacy and as such is high-priced in most markets. Young pig's liver, young beef and lamb are very acceptable and are lower in price.

For those who are not familiar with the methods of cooking liver, the following recipes will be helpful:

Baked Liver.

Have the liver cut into inch or inch and a half slices. Cut gashes lengthwise three-fourths of an inch deep. Lay strips of fat salt pork into these gashes. Have ready a well-greased baking dish. Place in the baking dish a layer of thinly sliced onions to the depth of an inch and one-half. Lay the larded liver on the onions, completely covering, dust with salt, pepper and flour, then pour over a pint of stewed and strained tomato. Put into a hot oven; when the tomato juice begins to boil cover and reduce the heat. From that point bake for one hour in a moderate oven.

Calf's Liver Braised.

Lard the rounded side of the liver with pork (salt). Fry one onion in salt pork fat. Put the liver and fried onion into a baking pan, add hot water or stock to half cover, one teaspoonful of salt, one saltspoonful of pepper and one tablespoonful of herbs. Cover and cook in a moderate oven two hours, basting often. When ready to serve, strain the liquor, season with lemon juice and pour it over the liver.

Potted Liver.

Braise a calf's liver as above. When tender, cut fine and pound to a paste, adding enough of the strained liquor in which it was cooked to moisten it; add one-half cupful of butter melted, rub through a sieve after mixing well, pack into jars and cover with melted butter. Keep in a very cool place.

Beware of the Tempter

By EVELYN GAGE BROWNE

"A BIRD in the hand is worth two in the bush,"
Is a saying that's old but true,
And if you're full of pep and "push"
It surely applies to YOU.

The job you have that is sure today
Is worth your very best,
And if you give it—it's bound to pay
A whole lot more than the rest.

They are only promises hazy and dim
In fields untried and new;
And your present Boss, if you stick to him,
Will as surely stick to you.

So beware of the man who hands you a line
Of bluff and flattery stuff,
To tempt you to leave a job that's fine,
With the words, "You're not getting enough!"

For that's the time when it isn't wise
To see yourself as a Star,
Through some one else's nearsighted eyes—
YOU'RE JUST WHAT YOU KNOW YOU ARE!

It's what's within that makes success,
And can't keep a good man down;
And it rests with YOU—no more, no less—
And not with the job nor the town.

So give your best RIGHT WHERE YOU ARE,
Your brain, your heart and soul—
Then "hitch your wagon to a star"
And you're bound to reach your goal.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT

By F. A. WALKER

WOMEN AS SHOPPERS

IT WOULD be almost possible to prove the superiority of the feminine intelligence over the masculine by the fact that all women and very few men know how to shop.

The average male person is a pathetic creature in a department store. He is lost and bewildered. He does not know his own mind, and so does not know what he wants.

As a consequence he usually takes what is offered to him. His main object is to get the ordeal over and done with so that he may find himself once more out on the sidewalk in the security of the street.

This masculine helplessness as compared with feminine resourcefulness in the matter of buying explains one of the greatest tragedies of bachelorhood.

In the last century the political economists invented an imaginary creature called "the economic man."

He was absurd because he never existed, except in the minds of those who created him.

He was supposed to "buy in the cheapest market," for example.

If a man wants a few shirts or a few pairs of gloves, he is as likely as not to go to a shop and pay a lot more for them than the same articles would cost him in another establishment in the same street.

But his wife or mother or sister does not do anything foolish like that. She seems to know with unerring instinct where she can do business to the best advantage to herself.

If a man is charged twenty cents, or thirty cents, for a glass of orange juice at his breakfast in a restaurant, he may grumble because he notices that the price has been raised.

He does not think of the price of the orange that went into the squeezer, as a woman would do, and make up his mind to go somewhere else in the future.

So man, the lord of creation, is the natural prey in most cases of the modern offender, known to the law as the "profiteer," while woman is always feared by that creature.

It is a simple matter but significant.

The supposedly wise philosopher who imagined the "economic man" made a great mistake to start with.

They would have been on safer ground if they had talked about the "economic woman." For she is "economic" in the other sense. She knows how to shop.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"GOOD AS A PLAY"

FREQUENTLY, when something particularly amuses us we say that the occurrence or the remark was "as good as a play." In many instances the reference is sarcastic, meaning too "good" to believe!

Most of us in using the expression are quite unconscious that we are quoting royalty. For in "as good as a play" we have something more than four mere words. We have a phrase coined by a king.

He was Charles II and it was while visiting parliament and listening to the debates that he is known to have used the expression for the first time.

In Macaulay's "Review of the Life and Writings of Sir William Temple" we find these words:

"The king remained in the house of peers while his speech was taken into consideration—a common practice with him, for the debates amused his sated mind, and were sometimes, he used to say, 'as good as a comedy.'"

NEVER Wear GLASSES

This advice has been quite faithfully kept by a number of people who are now unable to get glasses that give proper relief. It is just as logical to wait until life is almost extinct before calling a physician.

What chance has the doctor when your vitality is about all gone? None—neither can you get comfortable glasses if your eyes are so exhausted that the muscles can't respond to artificial aid. We are prepared to make the required examination and fit you with glasses (if needed) that will fit your pocket book and your eyes.

Unless we observe the law, we can not be free, remarked President Coolidge in his Memorial day address. That differs from the viewpoint of some lawless folks, who look upon law as the restriction of individual liberty. They declare that this is a free country, hence people have the right to do as they please, subject to slight limitations. The only place where people can have absolute freedom is in a savage country where no laws exist. And there they are not really as free as in our own country, because in the absence of laws, cruel and tyrannical people set themselves up to manage things, and the people have to submit to their threats and oppressions.

Funeral processions have been speeded up since horse-and-buggy days, but Chicago city council thinks they now move rapidly enough. Alderman Frank J. Ringa, undertaker, proposed an ordinance, permitting sirens on hearses so that funerals might move more rapidly through traffic jams. The council laughed it into oblivion.

E. E. Stinson, DeKalb county agricultural agent, Tuesday received a message from F. E. Faulconer of the U. S. corn borer control headquarters at Toledo notifying him that Peter Kandel, R. F. D. 1 out of Butler, was the first man in DeKalb county to be issued a voucher in payment for his work in the preliminary clean-up for the eradication of the borer. Mr. Kandel cleaned twelve acres of corn stubble ground, being alloted $2 an acre for his work.

Applications were filed in the DeKalb circuit court Saturday by Charles A. Dohner and George W. Blaker of Troy township, for orders restraining agents of the Indiana department of conservation from entering upon their farms in the campaign against the corn borer. The plaintiffs say that notices were served upon them by Benjamin S. Miller of Union township, an inspector for the conservation department, demanding that they remove corn stalks and stubble. They refused to comply declaring that to do so would damage their crops to a great extent. Mr. Dohner has growing crops of oats, barley and corn that would be affected, while Mr. Blaker has oats, barley and alfalfa. They contend that the demands of the state officials are unreasonable and not justified.

WAYS TO GO BROKE LISTED FOR FARMERS

Ten ways for a man to go broke farming have been suggested by the agricultural college at the University of Tennessee. Since they apply to Indiana as well as Tennessee, here they are:

1. Grow only one crop.
2. Keep no livestock.
3. Regard chickens and a garden as nuisances.
4. Take everything from the soil and return nothing.
5. Don't stop gullies or grow cover crops—let the topsoil wash away, then you will have "bottom" land.
6. Don't plan your farm operations. It's hard work thinking—trust to luck.
7. Regard your woodland as you would a coal mine: cut every tree, sell the timber and wear the cleared land out cultivating it in corn.
8. Hold fast to the idea that the methods of farming employed by your grandfather are good enough for you.
9. Be independent—don't join with your neighbor in any form of cooperation.
10. Mortgage your farm for every dollar it will stand to buy things you would have to buy if you followed a good system of farming.

The sting of reproach is the salt of truth.

The dread of dying is one thing that makes life worth living.

Many men are like flint; they don't blaze up until they are struck.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Snellbaker left the first of last week for Toledo, Ohio. Mrs. Snellbaker expects to remain all summer employed at dress making.

Dewey Miller moved to Auburn last week. Elsworth Traxler took a load of goods for them. Dewey wanted to get closer to his work as he works at the Musser blacksmith shop and has been employed there for more than four years. Elsie Mendenhall accompanied them to Auburn for a few days to assist Mrs. Miller in putting things to right.

GAS TANK ON FIRE

Monday while Ernest Steward was filling the Furnish gas tank, fire broke out in the bottom of the pump, blowing the door open, following the hose to the truck. By this time the hose was jerked from the tank and about fifteen gallons ran out on the ground and all ablaze. Ralph Furnish used his fire extinguishers to put out the fire. Both men were burned about the hands and the truck was scorched on one side. Just what caused the gas to ignite, no one is able to figure out.

OBITUARY

Albert H. Hull, son of Joseph and Caroline Hull, was born in Concord township, DeKalb county, Indiana, July 14, 1873 and departed this life June 6, 1927, at the age of 53 years, 10 months and 24 days. His death was caused by a complication of diseases.

He was united in marriage to Daisy Dewett, March 16, 1898. To this union five children were born, all of which survive. Stella and Lillian of Fort Wayne, Flossie Kisabeth, of Hicksville, Ross and Floyd of Spencerville; also one grandchild, three brothers and one sister, survive, John Hull, of Concord, Martin, of Spencerville, Frank, of Auburn Junction and Mrs. Mary Shuff, of St. Joe.

Mr. Hull was a lifelong resident of this comunity. He will be missed by his neighbors and friends. During the past eight years of his affliction he was patient and deeply appreciated the kindness of those who ministered unto him.

Those who loved him so much will see him no more but with tender memory they will continue to think of him. His casket was laden with beautiful floral tributes which his near friends deeply appreciated.

The service was in charge of Rev. J. F. McKnight, was conducted at the Walter Funeral Parlors at Spencerville, Thursday afternoon. Interment was made in the St. Joe cemetery.

TUBERCULOSIS CLINIC

The DeKalb County Tuberculosis Society will hold a Clinic in the assembly room of the court house, Tuesday, June 21st from 1 to 4 P. M. The Clinic is free to every one. The sale of the Christmas Seal pays for the Clinic. Any one expecting to attend please notify secretary of the society or the County Nurse.

Home Bureau Activities

The Home Bureau Club of Spencer tiwnship met at the home of Mrs. Gertrude Wasson, June 8, in an all day meeting. The project leaders, Mrs. Claude Hafner and Mrs. Gertrude Wasson gave the recipes of third meeting and a potluck dinner was served.

There were twelve members who answered the roll call and five guests, Mrs. Alfred Blough, Misses Gaylon Goldsmith, Virginia Goldsmith, Ada Bowser, and Miss Sweeney, the county nurse.

The president, Mrs. Hafner, opened the meeting by singing the club songs and repeating the Lord's prayer. Then business was discussed, and a secretary was elected in the absence of Mrs. Clara Smith, who moved away. An interesting talk was given by Miss Sweeney on the Girls' and Boys' Health Club, which all enjoyed. The meeting was closed by the singing of the club songs.

Pastor's One-minute Sermon

Children's Day is the time we express our appreciation of the worth of our children. They are worth too much to us to be estimated. We want that they shall be worth something to others also. And knowing that every human soul is of infinite worth to Almighty God, we are desirous that He be not disappointed in our children. To this end we rededicate ourselves. And in the interests of our children would we live in the home and in the church.

Children's Day is the time also that we emphasize Christian education. Christian character is the only thing of infinite worth and eternal value. And to the education of boys and girls that makes life a partnership with God, we dedicate our offering.

Roy S. Brown, Minister.

MONEY THAT WORKS

A MAN visited our bank a few weeks ago who had just sold some property.

HE WAS not ready to invest the money again for a few months but he did not want the money to 'loaf' and earn nothing for him during that time.

SO HE wanted to know what he could do with the money to make it earn some profit and be available in case he needed it.

OF COURSE we suggested a Certificate of Deposit. You can have a "C. of D.," for any amount and continue it as long as you wish. It pays a nice profit, too.

THERE IS no better plan for your money that is not otherwise employed. Let us tell you more about this plan.

DELIGHTFUL FAMILY AUTOMOBILE PICNIC

Why Not Take the Ice Cream Freezer Along?

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Part of the fun of the week-end motor outing is the picnic lunch. If the drive covers much distance there may be two out-of-doors lunches. It is a good idea to keep a special basket or picnic box on hand with enamel or paper plates, cups, knives, forks, spoons, bread knife, can and bottle openers, salt, pepper, waxed paper and paper napkins ready for the call of the open. Preparations can be quickly and easily made if these essential accessories are at hand in one place.

There is no hard and fast rule that all sandwiches must be made before starting. Put a loaf of bread, a pat of butter, and whatever filling you have available, into the picnic kit. When a halt is made for lunch, bread may be cut by one person, buttered by another, spread with filling by a third, and in the midst of much sociability the sandwiches will be produced as fast as they can be eaten. When sandwiches are thus, as it were, made to order, one stops to think whether another is really wanted or not. When boxes of sandwiches are brought from home the tendency is to keep eating them while they last. Most people eat more bread in this way than usual, and with other starchy food carried because of convenience, the meal becomes unbalanced.

Why not take salad ingredients along, suggests the bureau of home economics? Lettuce and celery, wrapped in damp cloths, tomatoes, and cucumbers can be carried in good condition. Put the mayonnaise in a screw-top jar, and the butter in another. If the day is very warm set them in a box or bucket of chopped ice. People sometimes take an ice cream freezer if there is room in the car. Butter and milk will keep splendidly beside the ice cream can.

You need not have bread sandwiches at all. Split rolls or biscuits answer the same purpose, or unsweetened crackers may be used. By way of dessert, cup cakes and cookies are easier to handle than layer cakes and pies. Figs, prunes, dates, and raisins satisfy the desire for something sweet that may be eaten with the fingers, while almost any fresh fruits are excellent. Try taking washed strawberries with the hulls on. Use the hulls to hold the berries as they are dipped in powdered sugar and eaten.

If you make a fire in the open you can have toasted frankfurters or bacon or a steak or chops. Fresh-caught fish may be cooked in a skillet over a camp fire, too. Don't forget to take the proper precautions for extinguishing any fires you make. In lieu of building a fire, a hot drink, such as cocoa or coffee, may be taken in a vacuum bottle. Ice-cold milk may be put in these bottles for the children.

If you are likely to have two roadside meals, provide something different for each, just as you would at home. A small cooked ham is a good addition to the lunch basket for the second meal, or some American cheese, or hard-boiled eggs, or any canned meats that slice conveniently. Don't forget the can opener, however! Automobiles sometimes develop troubles at awkward spots where no food can be obtained, and it is a comfortable feeling to know that you have the next meal with you whether you need it or not. Extra bread and butter may not be amiss.

The bottle opener, too, must not be left at home. You will surely need grape juice or ginger ale before the day is over. Orange juice and milk are good for the children if the grownups are having coffee. Carry drinking water from home rather than risk drinking from strange springs or wells. Leave one or two drinking cups out of the packed-up lunch kit, with the water, and a box of graham crackers for the children. Driving in the open air is likely to whet their appetites, and a mid-morning cracker with milk, orange juice, or water, may be counted as an extra meal, rather than "piecing." Sweets, salted nuts, chocolate bars, and other thirst-provoking foods often nibbled at between stops are best omitted.

Your picnic spot will undoubtedly be chosen for its charm and beauty. When the meal is over, pick up all papers and other refuse, and burn or bury them. Leave the woods as you would like to find them.

SERVE SHORTCAKE TO EACH PERSON

Attractive Way Is to Have Individual Cakes.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

An attractive way to serve strawberry shortcake is to have what the Chinese call "each-person" portions. Use your own recipe for biscuit dough, but make it somewhat richer than usual. One-third to one-half cupful of fat to each three cupfuls of flour is a good proportion. A little sugar may be added if you wish. Cut out rounds rather larger than ordinary biscuits, about three to three and one-half inches in diameter, and roll them thin enough to bake one on top of the other. Brush butter on the under round before setting the upper piece on it, and when they are done the two sections will split apart easily. The oven should be hot (450 degrees Fahrenheit) for individual shortcakes, suggests the bureau of home economics.

Individual Strawberry Shortcake.

Prepare the strawberries at least an hour before you need them. Hull them and wash a few at a time in a pan of cold water, skimming them off the top so that any sand sinks to the bottom. Do not allow them to remain in the water or they will lose flavor. Select the largest and most attractive berries for the top layers, sprinkle with sugar and set aside. Cut up some of the berries to be used on the lower layers, mash them lightly to start the juice flowing, and sprinkle with sugar. Butter the shortcake while hot. Add whipped cream, sweetened and flavored with vanilla, just at serving time, or pass it in a bowl as each person is served with the shortcake. Some people prefer this type of shortcake without cream.

JELLIED PEEL IS TEMPTING DAINTY

Can Be Made From Grapefruit, Oranges or Lemons.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

You can make jellied peel from grapefruit, oranges or lemons. Most people like the flavor and size of the pieces from grapefruit best, when the peel is to be eaten as a confection. Jellied orange and lemon peel are often used in place of citron in fruit cakes and plum pudding. In fact, all of these peels are good for this purpose, and for garnishes for desserts.

Stored in tin or glass containers, the jellied peel should keep in good condition for two or three weeks, so it is safe to make a supply a little before Christmas, in anticipation of the holidays and on the chance that you may need a few jars or boxes of the peel for last-minute gifts. The United States Department of Agriculture gives the following directions for making all kinds of jellied peel:

You will need for each 5 ounces of peel, 1 cupful (7 ounces) of granulated sugar for sirup, 2-3 cupful of water for sirup, or enough to cover; ¼ teaspoonful of salt; ½ cupful granulated sugar for rolling strips. Thick, soft, unblemished peel from smooth fruit should be selected. Light-colored grapefruit skins are best. Orange skins may be bright or pale in color, but not russet or spotted. The peel should be weighed, rather than measured.

Cut the peel into strips one-fourth to one-half inch wide. Parboil three times, for half an hour each time. Use a quart of cold water for this, cover the pan partly, and drain off the water after each boiling. The strips should then be tender. Handle them very gently to prevent breaking.

Place the water, salt and sugar for the sirup in a saucepan about six inches in diameter, and stir until the sugar is dissolved. Then add the strips of grapefruit peel, carefully arranged parallel to each other to prevent being broken when turned. Cook rapidly for about 20 minutes, then reduce the heat and continue to boil for about 20 minutes longer or until the sirup is all absorbed. Great care must be taken at this point that the sirup does not scorch.

Lesson for June 19

PETER TEACHES GOOD CITIZENSHIP

Temperance Lesson.

LESSON TEXT—I Peter 2:11-17; 4:1-5.

GOLDEN TEXT—Love worketh no ill to his neighbor.—Rom. 13:10.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Tells Us How to Behave.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Rules for Right Living.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Makes a Good Citizen.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Character of a Good Citizen.

In order to get an intelligent grasp of today's lesson, one must get a view of the entire epistle as to its purpose and method. The purpose was to establish all who were passing through suffering and testing (see ch. 1:7, 3:14, 4:12, 5:10-12).

The principles of Christian behavior set forth in the text of this lesson are of broader scope than citizenship. They embrace:

I. Behavior as Pilgrims and Sojourners (vv. 11, 12).

Christians are merely sojourners on the earth. They have not here their permanent home but are journeying through the earth on their way to the eternal home in the heavens. Our heavenly citizenship (Phil. 3:20) should constrain us to the maintenance of conduct consistent with our high calling.

1. Abstain from fleshly lusts (v. 11).

The term lusts includes the entire army of unclean forces springing from our carnal natures. They are enumerated in Gal. 5:19-21. These war against the soul. The Christian should not be under the sway of carnal passion.

2. Behavior as citizens (vv. 13-17).

While the Christian's true citizenship is in heaven he has a responsibility as a citizen on the earth.

1. Obey all requirements of civil rulers (v. 13).

Fidelity to Christ is shown by loyalty to civil authority. The intelligent Christian recognizes the necessity of government and graciously submits to those in authority over him regardless of the form of government. His duties as a citizen he performs as the Lord's free man—not through servile fear. Government even of a low order is better than anarchy.

2. Honor all men (v. 17).

He will see in every man the image of God and therefore give honor to him. This applies to all relations wherein we touch human life.

3. Love the brotherhood (v. 17).

The Christian has a peculiar love for those who are of the same household. The brotherhood is composed of those who are children of God by faith in Jesus Christ.

4. Fear God (v. 17).

5. Honor the King (v. 17).

This has a peculiar significance because in all probability the wicked Nero was then reigning as emperor.

II. Behavior in a World of Opposition (I Peter 4:1-5).

1. Armed for the conflict (v. 1).

Christians are engaged in a tremendous conflict with evil forces within and without. Satan and his angels are bent on the believer's defeat and destruction. The only way to keep from being overcome with his darts is to arm oneself with the mind of Christ.

2. The salutary effect of suffering (v. 1).

Suffering has a remedial effect upon God's children. The one who suffers with Christ as an example will have the consciousness that it is his identity with Christ that calls forth the opposition of the world.

3. God's will, the regulating force of his life (v. 2).

Not the lusts of the flesh, but the will of God is the directing force of his life.

4. The consciousness of a wasted life (v. 3).

Since the flesh has so long had sway over the life, God is entitled to the rest of the believer's energy. Looking back upon a wasted life in serving the lusts of the flesh will move one to give no more time to serving such a master.

5. The attitude of the world toward the one who separates himself from it (v. 4).

The world speaks evil of those who will not go its way. The world not only wonders at the life of the Christian who separates himself from its pleasures, but will heap upon him nicknames and reproach.

6. Account shall be given (v. 5).

The Christian should so live as to be able to render an account to God.

The Joy of Christ

O believer, the joy of Christ is within you; give it room, let it spring up within you like a well of living water, and you will rejoice in the Lord always, and again rejoice.—G. H. C. McGregor.

Praising God

When you find that a man has got to praising God it is a good sign. Oh, let us get to personal love, to personal praise! That is what is wanted in the church today.—D. L. Moody.

POULTRY

YOUNG GOSLINGS NEED GOOD CARE

When the goslings are raised in brooders they must be closed up at night for the first two or three weeks. After that they may be allowed to come and go if their pen is safe from dogs and other prowlers. Their runs should be so arranged that they will have plenty of grass.

By the time the goslings are a month old they will have reached a size which is comparable to small hens and may then be given wide or free range or be kept confined in yards where grass is available. If the grass in their yards gets eaten down it is necessary to supplement it with waste from the garden, lawn clippings or similar green stuff. On such feed the goslings will make good gains but the addition of a little grain is advisable.

Water for drinking should always be available for the goslings. While they are small the vessel should be protected so they cannot get into it. While the weather is cool it is well to provide water only for drinking. After the weather settles and becomes warm there is no harm in giving them water so they can splash around in it.

Stale bread or a mash comprised of corn meal and shorts are the feeds most often used to supplement the grass ration of little goslings. Others use a more complete mash similar to that fed to chickens which contains animal food, skim milk or some dried milk products.

The profit in raising geese comes from the fact that they are great foragers and make the bulk of their gains on feed that is otherwise unsalable. It is a mistake to try to raise them largely on a grain ration which increases the expense; besides, they do not do so well as when given more forage.

What Good Hen Consumes During Course of Year

What one good hen eats in a year was shown by the poultry department of the Minnesota College of Agriculture in an exhibit at the Minnesota state fair. Of scratch grain she consumes 20 pounds cracked corn, 10 pounds oats, 10 pounds barley. Her laying mash, which is fed in a hopper, totals 8 pounds each of corn meal, ground oats, wheat bran, wheat middlings, and beef scraps with the addition of 1 per cent charcoal and 1 per cent salt. She eats 4 pounds of oyster shells and 2 pounds of grit fed separately in a hopper. Her feed bill totals $15.23 a year.

If she eats she must more than pay her board bill, says the poultry department, and they showed the yearly egg production of four different hens: 1, pays board and little more; 2, pays board and 90 cents; 3, pays board and $1.80; 4, pays board and $4.70.

Poultry Facts

Milk is a valuable feed for hens.

Hens should have vigor and good size before they lay.

Ducks or geese should be killed by sticking in the back of the mouth.

Hard luck may be an alibi, but it isn't always an excuse.

Giving the chicks some form of milk at the start stimulates their appetites and promotes growth.

It's a good plan to start culling the flock with the chicks, by killing the weak, sickly ones that will never repay their cost.

The way brooder chicks act in the evening is a good guide as to the heat. If too much, they will stay away from the hover, and if too little they will crowd up near the stove.

• • •

Free range away from the poultry yard should be provided with clover for pasture whenever possible. It is the best known way to get good, healthy, vigorous pullets for winter laying.

The main reason for the variations in the prices of eggs and dressed poultry is the variation in their quality.

Exercise generates heat and promotes health. Make the poultry flock work for their grain by feeding it in a deep, clean litter of straw.

Eggs for hatching should not be kept longer than 10 to 14 days before setting. They should be held at a temperature between 40 and 50 degrees Fahrenheit and turned once each day.

Statement Put Issue Squarely Up to Teddy

"Have any of you children had a birthday the last week?" Mrs. Morrow, the Sunday school teacher, asked.

Three of her pupils raised their hands.

"Well, Charles and Betty and Jimmie, you may come forward and put your birthday pennies in the birthday box."

The three marched proudly to the front and dropped in their pennies. As each child dropped the pennies Mrs. Morrow counted so all could hear. Five for Charles, six for Betty and—

"Why, Jimmie, you're more than three years old!" Mrs. Morrow exclaimed. Jimmie had dropped in three pennies and started back to his seat.

"Yes'm," Jimmie agreed readily, "I'm six."

"But you only dropped in three pennies," protested the teacher.

"Yes, but I'm twins," Jimmie explained. "Teddy couldn't come to Sunday school this morning, but it was half his birthday, and he'll have to put in the other three cents."—Kansas City Star.

Never Quite Forgotten

I don't reckolekt ov ever doing eanything that I was just a little ashamed ov but what sum one was sure to remember it and every once in a while put me in mind ov it.—Josh Billings.

Eskimos Eat Bird Raw

The Greenland auk or dove-kie is a greatly relished food among the Eskimos, who eat the bird raw, biting through the clean feathers into the firm meat of the breast. A hungry Eskimo, it is said, will eat as many as 100 little auks at one sitting. This would be more than could be crowded into four frying pans. The little auks live mainly on shrimp, and their meat is said to be very palatable. They lay their eggs among the rocks, to protect them from enemies.

FARMER WOMAN IN OKLAHOMA

Praises Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Because It Gave Her Health and Strength

In a sunny pasture in Oklahoma, a herd of sleek cows was grazing. They made a pretty picture. But the thin woman in the blue checked apron sighed as she looked at them. She was tired of cows, tired of her tedious work in the dairy. She was tired of cooking for a houseful of boarders, besides caring for her own family. The burdens of life seemed too heavy for her failing health. She had lost confidence in herself.

One day she began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and her general health began to improve. She took it faithfully. Now she can do her work without any trouble, sleeps well and is no longer blue and timid.

This woman, Mrs. Cora Short, R. R. 9, Box 387, Oklahoma City, Okla., writes: "Everybody now says, 'Mrs. Short, what are you doing to yourself? I weigh 135 and my weight before I took it was 115. I have taken seven bottles of the Vegetable Compound."

Other women who have to work hard and keep things going may find the road to better health as Mrs. Short did, through the faithful use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Ask your neighbor.

The Reason

"Why do you punch that hole in my ticket?" asked the man of the railway official.

"So you can pass through," was the reply.—Vancouver Province.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 68

Mother! It's Cruel to "Physic" Your Child

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even if the child is chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens or upsets the most delicate system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself.

Dr. Caldwell's SYRUP PEPSIN

Constipated?

Take NR—Nature's Remedy—tonight. Your eliminative organs will be functioning properly by morning and your constipation will end with a bowel action as free and easy as nature at her best—no pain, no griping. Try it.

STRIPES IN BATHING SUITS; FOOTWEAR FOR THE JUNE BRIDE

BATHING suits tell a story of infinite mode this season ranging from the ultra-elaborate to the severely simple. As to the fanciful sort fashioned of silk, satin, crepe and other materials their novelty knows no bounds. Perhaps those of taffeta in plaids of every description pronounce chic most definitely. Sometimes the plaids are contrasted to achieve a most startling effect, such as a bathing ensemble which emphasizes a bizarre novelty plaid for the suit with a plain black plaid for the beach coat.

There are also many charming models of gay silk print. Those fashioned of cretonne or gingham, processed so as to be waterproof, are as unique as they are fashionable.

A Jersey-Knit Bathing Suit.

Let those who are inclined to the fanciful bathing suit select models of such fabric as makes its appeal, but for the bathing enthusiast who goes in for the best of the sport the two-piece jersey-knit swimming suit consisting of form-fitting slip and trunks or tights is the popular choice. Just as in the case of so many of the new sweaters which so fashionably flourish stripes that run around and around, so are many of the smart bathing suits distinguished by their stripes of many colors as here pictured.

It must be kept in mind, however, that even the simplest bathing suit is expected to be accompanied by a spectacular beach equipment. When milady emerges from the ocean blue she will don a pair of dainty rubber shoes which proudly boast shapely high heels, with straps across the ankle in latest approved fashion.

Another novelty is the triangle of pliable gay rubber which is designed to serve either as a cap or a shoulder protection. Interesting, too, among beach accessories are cushions formed of multi-colored leather strips.

The model bootery is a scene of superlatively lovely footwear such as a few years ago would have been thought to be the dream of a visionary. But it is real, very real these days, indeed as vital and thriving, likewise as esthetic as milady's favorite millinery salon, with a clientele just as eager and discriminating.

The fascinating interest of footwear as now exists may be directly traced to the outstanding importance of the ensemble theme. It is as if the milliner, the couturier, the jeweler and the shoe-fashionist have formed an alliance to work together in bringing each detail of the costume into a unit. That is why women of fashion are so enthusiastically maintaining a wardrobe which shall include footwear to complement the individual costume.

A most enthusiastic patron of the fashionable shoe-shop just now is the summer-time bride-to-be. From the daintiness of the footwear everywhere displayed, one suspects that the makers thereof must have had the requirements of the June bride's trousseau in mind.

When Lady Newly-Wed makes her appearance at the country club, she may very properly choose to accompany her all-white or pastel sports frock with a pair of white kidskin oxfords such as is shown in the lower right corner of this group. An interesting lace treatment and tiny perforated scallops add a charming touch. The white kidskin pumps with handmade buckles of jet beads interpret the smart black-and-white mode for afternoon dress. A center-strap sandal of white kid (see below to left) is an essential for the all-white costume. Another popular sandal pattern exhibited at the top to the right in this group is of rose-blush kidskin. Spiderweb kidskin, and it comes in any pastel shade, is used for the dressy model displayed in the center of the picture. The necklace and the ostrich fan, as shown in illustration, are fetching accessory suggestions.

Quarantined!

Millions of cockroaches already exterminated! Beware!

THERE'S PANIC in Bugville! Cockroaches are dying by the thousands!

Use Peterman's Roach Food in your house. Exterminate every roach.

Don't fight roaches with a spray. You must have a powder. Peterman's is the right powder.

It entices roaches from their hiding places. They carry it back on their legs and bodies to their nests behind base-boards, under floors where no spray could possibly reach.

Every adult roach, the young, every egg in the entire colony is exterminated. No odor. Nothing is left but a little dry dust. Use Peterman's Roach Food now. Keep them out. Don't let them get a start.

Here is the right insecticide for each insect:

PETERMAN'S ROACH FOOD exterminates that cockroach army.

PETERMAN'S ANT FOOD exterminates ants.

FLYOGAN kills flies and mosquitoes.

PETERMAN'S DISCOVERY exterminates bedbugs.

PETERMAN'S MOTH FOOD protects against moths.

You must have a specific insecticide for each insect. No single insecticide will exterminate them all. We have had nearly 50 years' experience. We know that is true.

Peterman has the right insecticide for each insect. Or, ask wherever drugs are sold.

Cat Adopts Skunks

A mother cat with four kittens came to the farm of F. A. Jones at Brookfield, Mo., but Jones, having other ideas on the subject consigned the four kittens to the creek. The next day his small son informed him that the kittens were safe and sound. Recalling the traditional nine lives, Jones investigated and found that the cat had acquired four other kittens without doubt, but instead of their being some other feline's offspring they were of the genus mephitis, or common American skunk.—Indianapolis News.

Corporation Runs Farms

One Boston corporation is running 20 farms in Iowa bought at sacrifice prices, says Capper's Weekly. Babson, the statistician, believes that during the next few years a number of such corporations will buy up at bargain prices the best of the farms now for sale. Several concerns have been organized for this purpose. The farming of the future, Babson believes, may be done by big business corporations the same as in other branches of industry.

NATIONAL DEFENSE FOR COMMON GOOD AND PROTECTION OF AMERICAN INSTITUTIONS SAYS INDIANAPOLIS BANKER.

By Felix McWhirter, President of the Peoples State Bank

One of a series of Articles written by Indiana Citizens, Soldiers and Men of Letters for the American Legion, Department of Ind.

"A well regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of all people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." So it is written in the keel document of our United States, the Constitution.

Freedom of an initiative and an equal opportunity permits the son of the section hand of yesterday to be a Railroad President of tomorrow.

The philosophy of American social and business life has been builded on a foundation of ethics too broad and too fair and too virile to decay. Organization—the institutions of Government—have been built and nurtured for the common good.

And we here in this land more than any other on earth should recognize the need for defense. For the common good it has proven that you and I may have the utmost of freedom in movement in speech and endeavor so long as our movement, our speech, or our endeavor is not inimical to the interest of the many.

We have courts, we have schools we have peace officers, we have a militia. We have all these and more because we believe in orderly procedure and because we have something to defend.

We have wealth to defend—wealth simply is that which we produce more than we consume—we have our homes and we have our institutions of Government to defend.

There is a rate of literacy in the United States higher than that of any other comparable area in the world—and yet there are those who would tell you that the world of people over half of whom can neither read nor write should now arbitrate any and every difference.

Most of the proponents of scrap all arms are humans of lopsided development, afflicted with a commercial selfish "hoof and mouth disease." They travel and talk—for pay. There are some philanthropically inclined who lend their name, and upon flattery oftimes their money to the efforts of Pinks because they are thoughtless—lazy minded. Then there are a few indeed, who really and truly are conscientious objectors—with those, and those alone, we have no cause for alarm or criticisms.

Where is the person who does not believe in insurance. The defense act of our Government is based upon the minimum necessary for insurance purposes—to insure the endurance of this land of yours and mine—made possible by our fathers.

The United States is spending less than France for defense purposes, little more than one half Great Britian, less than one and one quarter of a cent per day per capita. For your average family less than the insurance of your automobile against fire and theft.

What is your savings account worth? What is your life insurance worth? What is your home worth without a security for the future of the United States assured?

But do you say we will never be involved in any more wars—that may only be proven by the future. Since Adam has there been greed, selfishness and usurpation—since Adam there have been wars. Most of us believe in and are satisfied with the United States as the best home, the best nation on earth. Lets not permit paid Reds and Pinks who travel around sowing under the cover of religion, brotherhood of man, and economy, the seeds of discontent and Communism, to find us applauding their platitudes and their hysteria.

The influences which seek the interest and helpfulness of the good church people of our country in their subversive work are the same influence which have shown their inherent sacrilege by destroying churches elsewhere.

Things equal to the same thing are equal to each other. America for Americans, first; America for those who wish to swear allegiance and act and live it, second; and, Communistic for the Reds and all the Pinks.

WELL KNOWN AUBURN MAN FOUND DEAD

The sudden death of Warren A. Austin, clerk of the DeKalb circuit court from 1908 to 1912 at his home in Auburn Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock, shocked the entire community.

Mr. Austin was up town Monday morning but went home before lunch time, not feeling well. He had not been well for several days and had been at home taking treatments for varicose veins but aside from this trouble he was apparently normally well. Monday evening he conversed happily with members of his family and Tuesday morning was up, reading the papers.

A short time before 10 o'clock Mr. Austin went to the bathroom. Remaining so long that Mrs. Austin became alarmed, the bathroom door was opened and Mr. Austin was found dead. Heart disease was the immediate cause.

Mr. Austin while at Ashley was prominently identified with local democratic politics and served as a member of the town board. In the fall of 1908 he was elected clerk of the circuit court and moved to Auburn with his family. Serving his term of four years he was later elected a member of the city council and in that capacity served four years. Following the fire which destroyed many of the county records which were kept in temporary quarters in the W. H. McIntyre factory building then on the site of the resent Masonic temple building during the time when thenew court house was under construction, Mr. Austin was engaged by the county commissioners to restore and recopy the records. This took him a number of years.

Mr. Austin was a member of the Masonic bodies from the Blue lodge to the Commandry. He is a member of DeKalb Lodge, No. 214, F. and A. M., William Hacker Chapter, No. 63, DeKalb Council, No. 57 of Auburn, and of the Angola Commandry, Knights Templar. He is also a member of the Order of the Eastern Star and of Auburn Lodge, No. 191, Knights of Pythias and of Red Cross Temple, No. 47, Pythian Sisters. He was also a member of the Uniform Rank of the Knights of Pythias order. For a number of years Mr. Austin served as secretary of the Blue Lodge of Masons in Auburn.

The funeral services will be held Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the Dilgard Funeral home, and will be in charge of the Blue Lodge of Masons with a guard of honor of Knights Templar. Rev. Ira C. Boyts, pastor of the Church of Christ, will officiate. Burial will be made in Wodlawn cemetery.

CHURCH MEMBERS WILL APPEAL FROM FINE OF $10

An appeal from a $10 fine imposed for attacking another member of the First Christian church of Mishawaka, was planned Friday by two of the board of the church, Lem Sheets and Don Austin.

Judge E. J. Bowers declared that it was "the most disgraceful case I have heard in 30 years" and that "the church should be closed until the quarrel between the two factions of the congregation is at an end."

Perry Staley, the prosecuting witness, charged that he was beaten during a free for all fight in the church last Sunday. The church has been the scene or quarreling for two years. The Rev. Stephen O. Redacre, the pastor, leads the faction of which Sheets and Austin are members.

DEMANDS ARREST OF INDIANA OFFICIALS

Arrest of Governor Ed Jackson and Attorney General Arthur L. Gilliom as "common bootleggers" is demanded in resolutions adopted by the Indianapolis Tuxedo branch of the W. C. T. U., and made public by Mrs. Etta Miller, president of the branch.

The resolutions criticised Jackson and Gilliom for their use of whiskey for medicinal purposes. Gilliom procured whiskey for three of his children while they were ill a year ago and whiskey was administered to Mrs. Jackson recently.

Declaring that Jackson and Gilliom have broken the Wright bone dry law, the resolutions "demand that both officers be dealt with according to the law, the same as common bootleggers."

A BLESSING TO BE TIRED

Minerva Hunter

When Maggie Marshall pushed the carriage out on the front porch so that the baby could get the sunshine and fresh air, she found a row of mud pies along the top step and foot prints all over the porch. This was the last straw! All day Maggie had struggled and worked getting ready for Tom's boss who was coming to dinner, and here at four in the afternoon to find the porch must be cleaned again.

Hastily she set about her work. She must get through in time to take a bath, rest a little and dress herself and the children before the men came from the office.

As the last touch was given to the porch she saw Lydia Benson driving down the street. Lydia's new car gleamed in the afternoon sun and Lydia's becoming costume brought Maggie a twinge of envy.

Lydia stopped the car on the drive between the two houses and called to her girlhood friend, "O, Maggie, I hear Mr. Denning is in town and will take dinner with you. Let me keep the children in the nursery for you."

Maggie's envy changed to gratitude. "I wish you would. They have worried me nearly to death today. Charles has cried a lot and Lucy has been under my feet or in mischief the whole day. I could not get help anywhere."

With the children off her mind things went a little better for Maggie, but even then it was no easy task to prepare and serve the meal and be a gracious hostess at the same time. She welcomed the moment when Tom announced they must be leaving to catch the train Mr. Denning was to take.

Wearily Maggie climbed the stairs to see how Lydia was getting along with the children. She found the little ones asleep and Lydia sitting at the window.

"Aren't you worn out?" Maggie asked. "The children tried themselves today."

"I am tired," Lydia agreed, "but not because of the children. I am tired every night, but tonight there is a sweetness and happiness about being tired that I usually do not feel. I have been wondering why and have decided that I have worked with different material. I love my work; there is great satisfaction in fitting up a house with suitable furniture and draperies that harmonize, but when the job is done, it is turned over to the owner and I move on to another house. I never stay with the lovely things I have created. Really I do not care to stay. But children, Maggie, what a difference with children! One has to work with them and work for them. It is an unending job, and because it is unending one can enjoy continual development. During the last four years while I have been working to make homes lovely you were working to make Lucy and Charles lovely, and even though they have naughty days and try your patience and your strength, they will be far more worth while in the years to come than all my houses. I envy you, Maggie."

Maggie recalled with a throb of deep pity that Lydia had lost her husband and tiny son. "Yes," she nodded, "I believe every tired feeling I have is blessed, Lydia. I hope I shall not forget any more."

BALLOU EXPLAINS 1927 RENT LAW

Compare Old Law With the One Passed in 1927

SAYS OLD LAW ONE-SIDED

Without Lease a Renter Is Month to Month

(By Judge Ballou)

Since 1881 and until 1927, the last legislation, the statutes of the state of Indiana provided "All tenancies unless otherwise specified shall be deemed tenancies from year to year" the effect of which was that where people contracted to rent a house but nothing was said as to when the lease should end, it became a lease for year after year, and could only be brought to a close by one of the parties giving three months' notice before the expiration of any rental year, and the law applied to all classes of property, residences, farms, business property, and all other kinds.

As a matter of law neither party could end the lease except by three months' notice; as a matter of practice the tenant stayed as long as he paid rent and until the proper notice was given. Frequently the date of the beginning of lease was lost and it was a difficult thing to give a proper notice; other times, the landlord would neglect to give the notice or give an insufficient notice, and tenant would get an additional year. Very frequently the landlord thought because the tenant paid rent each month it was a lease from month to month and could be terminated on 30 days' notice and did not discover the error until he wanted possession; frequently when he had sold and had agreed to give possession. On the other hand, the tenant desiring to end the tenancy moved out and left the landlord with a remedy of a suit for breach of contract which when the cost and probability of collecting the judgment are considered are generally abandoned as unprofitable for the reason that many tenants had no means of property above their statutory exemption and for that reason a judgment would be worthless. It was decidedly one-sided.

The 1927 Law.

The legislation of 1927 passed the following statute:

Sec. 2. That a tenancy at will cannot arise or be created without an express contract; and all general tenancies, except those tenancies covering lands used for agricultural purposes, in which the premises are occupied by the consent, either express or constructive, of the landlord, shall be deemed tenancies from month to month."

And now, by reason of this statute, the landlord may get possession of his property after 30 days' notice at any period of the year, and thus one of the disadvantages of renting property is overcome.

Under the old law it was often said that a tenant or renter had a greater hold on a property than the owner; it was a one-sided affair and discouraged the building of houses for rental purposes. On the other hand it seems to me that the operation of the new law will tend to make our city one of home ownership even more than it has been in the past, and home ownership means better and more stable citizenship.

POULTRY CLUB HAS MEETING

The St. Joe Valley Bank Poultry Club held their second meeting last Friday evening, June 10th at the school house. Not a very big percentage of the members responded to roll call when Gordon Maxwell read their names but enough were present to make a big noise for the club yell and club song.

The main feature of the program was a discussion of the problems of growing and developing chicks by Mrs. Goldsmith of Spencerville. Mrs. Goldsmith emphasized the importance of getting the chicks out of the small coops and up on roosts. Chicks are too hot in the small coop and their vitality is lowered. Diseases play an important part in successful chick raising and need to be guarded against continually. The best insurance against clean ground is ground on which no chicks have been and clean sanitary coops.

The refreshment committee were on the job and had ice cream and cake for all the members who were present and their parents after the program.

AUBURN WIFE ASKS $2,600 AS ALIMONY

Mrs. Ida May Herrick of Auburn Accuses Her Husband of Iifidelity

In a divorce complaint that she has filed in the DeKalb circuit court, Mrs. Ida May Herrick of 351 Enaley avenue, Auburn, accuses Melvin J. Herrick of infidelity.

The Herricks were married June 21, 1913, and separated Monday. They have no children. Mrs. Herrick states that her husband frequently absented himself from home and concealed his whereabouts from her; that he associated with other women and repeatedly told her he did not care for her, preferring other women.

The plaintiff demands $2,600 alimony.—Star

PRACTICAL JOKER GETS OFF A GOOD ONE

The occasion of the marriage of Miss Mary Fisher and Mr. Howard H. Miller at the Dr. Richer home, Sunday, was the opportunity for some practical joker to pull off a good one.

During Saturday night placards were put up at the entrance of several churches, announcing the marriage in the garden at the Richer home at four o'clock p. m., Sunday and inviting everybody to come. The children were especially invited and the promise of eats was held out to them. A number of guests had really been invited, but the parties most interested in the ceremony were surprised when the larger crowd appeared, as they had heard of the "joker" invitation.

The whole thing was taken in good grace and those who responded to the general invitation had the pleasure of witnessing a very pretty ceremony.—South Whitley Tribune.

When anyone tells you that a "cheap," low price, inferior paint will cost you less than good old SWP—the best house paint money can buy—that's plain "apple-sauce," buhk, taffy, soft soap—or whatever you want to call it.

No cheap, inferior paint is as economical as SWP—because you need nearly twice as many gallons to do the job—and your paint job lasts only about half as long.

Don't be fooled by a low price per gallon. If you want the real truth about paint economy we have the facts. Come in and talk it over.

GREAT DAY SUNDAY FOR ST. JOE

Whatever your convictions might be regarding prohibition, hear the latest information about this world problem at St. Joe Methodist Church next Sunday morning, when J. H. Larimore, Director of Publicity of the World League Against Alcohol, of Westerville, Ohio, will deliver an address on the subject "Two Rivers to Cross."

Mr. Larimore comes to St. Joe on special invitation, from Winona Lake, where he is for the week, and the importance of this issue ought to challenge the presence of every adult in this section. It is very rare that men of his caliber are permitted to take time to talk to the rural groups, but by special courtesy granted the local committee, Mr. Larimore has consented to give his attentions to St. Joe for this one day.

The public in general is invited to come and get the inspiration of this wonderful address.

SPUD CLUB BOYS HAVE MEETING

The St. Joe Potato Club held their second meeting of the summer at the home of Basil Sheffer, Friday evening, June 17th.

In the absence of the president Clifton Draggoo, Eugene Harman called the meeting to order. After a few yells and songs the committee on initiation reported favorable and reported that a form be adopted. DuWayne Kinsey entertained with a Saxaphone solo and Ellsworth Morr a reading. The questions pertinent to planting and cultivating were discussed. Dragging several times before the potatoes are up and then deep thorough cultivation the first time through were the points emphazized.

The host, Basil Sheffer and his assistants, Eugene Harman and Robert Coburn, then served the guests with excellent home made ice cream, strawberries and cake.

The next meeting will be held at the home of DuWayne Kinsey, July 18th. He will be assisted by Keith Curie, Dale Walter and Everett Collins.

RED SQUIRRELS NO LONGER PROTECTED BY INDIANA LAW

Red squirrels, commonly called pineys or pine squirrels, are not protected by a closed season under Indiana's new game laws.

As the old law repealed by the 1927 legislature protected all squirrels during closed season, considerable confusion and misunderstanding prevails, according to George N. Manfeld, fish and game superintendent.

State conservation officials point out that because some people can not distinguish red squirrels from gray or fox squirrels, protected by law, it has resulted so far this spring in numerous arrests when hunters were found possessing such species it is unlawful to kill in closed season. They describe the red squirrel, piney or mountain jack, often called, as having a coat of rusty red with white on breast and belly. The red squirrel may be shot at any time. The new hunting law established the open season for gray or fox squirrel shooting from August 1 to November 1 and imposes a bag limit of five squirrels for each hunter per day. The old law which held a month longer or until December 1, had no bag limit provision.

The baited breath of the fisherman is doubtless responsible for most of the big fish stories.

PURDUE STAFF MAN TELLS HOW TO FIGHT POISON IVY

Dangerous poison ivy which is frequently confused at this season of the year with the harmless common ivy or Virginia creeper, may easily be identified, according to A. A. Hansen of the Purdue extension staff, and painful consequences avoided. It should be remembered that the poison ivy has three leaflets to the group, while the harmless ivy has five.

Boston ivy may be distinguished from both of these types of ivy by its maplelike leaves. Hansen called attention to the fact that poison oak, so frequently referred to, is not an oak, but simply another name for poison ivy, while poison sumac, a very dangerous contact-poisoning plant, more familiar poison ivy, is found only on wet land, particularly in swamps.

Hansen also denied the the popular theory that the wind will carry poison ivy, but said that the disease can readily be contracted by contact with shoes or any other objects that have touched the dangerous ivy. It is true, however, that when any part of the ivy plant is burned the smoke is capable of carrying the irritating poison.

In cases where the skin is known to have been in contact with poison ivy, the oil that causes the trouble may be removed by repeated washings with cheap laundry soap and running water, or the poisonous effect can be counteracted by rubbing with iron dust. Preventive action should be taken as soon as possible, as these measures lose their effectiveness several hours after contact when the poison begins to act.

BIG MILK FLOOD COMING NEXT FEW MONTHS

A flood of nearly 2,063,000 gallons of milk is due on DeKalb County farms during the next 150 days. About two-thirds will be consumed within 48 hours after it is produced. But fully 687,000 will be separated, converted into cream, held for four or five days perhaps, then marketed as butterfat. It is the handling of this last third of the production in warm weather that largely determines the farmer's yearly profit from his cows.

Three times as much milk is produced in summer as in winter, just at the time when it is most difficult to care for milk products properly. Cleanliness and low temperature are the secrets of producing high quality products. One of the big factors in the price paid for cream is its quality. Progressive farmers are increasing their incomes by taking advantage of the new system of handling milk products recommended by the agricultural colleges.

Absolute cleanliness and cold water are the basis of the college methods. Prof. E. H. Farrington, of the University of Wisconsin, one of America's greatest agricultural instructors, explains the procedure of making sweet cream in substance, as follows: After each skimming, take the separator bowl and tinware apart immediately, wash with cold water, then wash with hot water, a brush and washing powder, finally scalding them with boiling water or steam so that wiping will be unnecessary. Cool the cream as it comes from the separator or immediately after, and keep it below 60 degrees.

In the absence of ice or a running spring, a cooling tank can be arranged by placing a covered barrel or tub, large enough to hold two cans, between a pump and a watering trough. The smaller of the two cans should be used to hold the warm cream until it is thoroughly cooled down, then it can be added to the cold cream in the larger can. Never mix warm and cold cream. By following these directions, the average farmer with home-made equipment, if not always a sweet product, at least a high quality product that will fetch high prices.

DEKALB COUNTY IN 100 PER CENT RANK

The State Convention of the Indiana Council of Religious Education, was held at Martinsville last week and DeKalb county was again accorded high honors as in the past years. Seventeen delegates were present. The registration reached 2,066.

DeKalb county again won the flag and a gold crown as a one hundred per cent county on Sunday School organization. The flag is awarded counties which comply with all of the state requirements and the crown for the payment for a year in advance of the county's apportionment.

DeKalb county was one of five counties in Indiana which won the honor of a hundred per cent record. The others were Morgan, Randolph, Tipton and Tippecanoe counties.

Seventeen delegates from DeKalb county registered at the convention which was attended by fully three thousand during the sessions. Logansport was selected as next year's convention city.

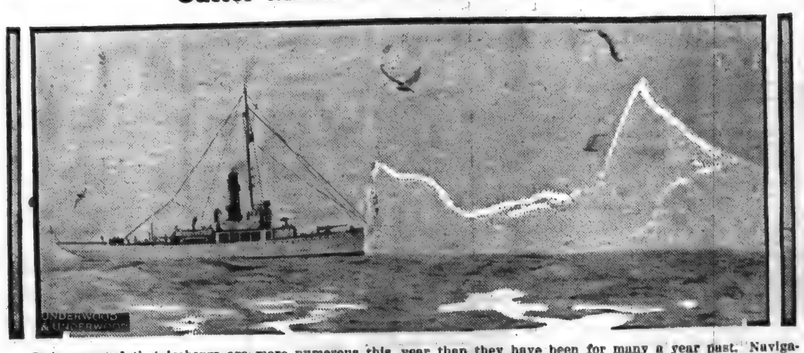
Cutter Meets a Terror of the Sea



It is reported that icebergs are more numerous this year than they have been for many a year past. Navigation experts are of the opinion that Nungesser and Coli may have hit one of these bergs. But these white terrors of the sea are little feared by the United States Cutter Modoc which appears as though it is prepared to ram the huge berg. In reality it is safely behind it. This photograph was taken from one of the Modoc's gigs.

LACE AND CHIFFON NEGLIGEE; USE EARRING TRIM FOR HATS

MILADY'S boudoir is the scene of a picturesque warfare, where the negligee of ultra-feminine type is arraying its beguiling charms against the gorgeous and modernistic coat and trouser mode. So far the score is a tie, wherefore stylists declare that due recognition shall be given to each.

Speaking from the viewpoint of the ultra-feminine negligee, one is tempted to indulge in rapturous terms of "perfectly lovely," "adorable" and "just darling," in describing them. To come down to "what's what" in teagowns and boudoir apparel, of the daintier type, it is largely a matter of lace and chiffon, styled in an alluringly feminine way. Which means that befrilled and beflurbelowed robes are lending their enchantment to the boudoir scene.

Negligees of the esthetic nature reflect the influence of the lace vogue, which at present everywhere dominates the fashion situation as it has not succeeded in doing for years. Sheer fabrics, too, abound in unstinted quantity.

The exquisite negligee in the picture is just such as should be included in the trousseau of the summer bride. It would be entrancing in pure white or in any of the "sweetly feminine" pastel colorings.

For the more formal types, yards and yards of filmy lace or chiffon transparencies resolve themselves into flowing draperies, with sleeves losing their identity in voluminous panel and angel-wing effects. Many of the newer negligees use chiffon and cobweb-like all-over lace, half-in-half, sometimes the floating panels being entirely of lace, with wide borderings of the lace at the hemline of the robe.

For daytime wear during the warm-weather months, dainty little negligees which really look like summertime frocks are made of flower-printed voiles.

Dingle-dangle, dingle-dangle, goes the earring ornament at the side of milady's hat as if to proclaim its entree into the realm of millinery.

Sometimes an idea is launched which takes the world of fashion by storm. This is exactly what has happened in regard to the new earring trim. With the dangling of the first earring ornament from the side of a snug-fitting little chapeau, the idea has gained momentum until the vogue is at this moment one of surpassing importance.

Especially is the new earring trim performing a bit of magic in the way of contributing becomingness to the hitherto not-always flattering-to-the-face snug helmet-shape or molded-to-the-head skull caps. Promise of becomingness no doubt accounts for the fact of hat after hat being animated with cunning ornaments which sometimes require more than a passing glance to discern whether they are really pearl-set earrings revealed from beneath the "bob," or decoration for the hat.

An Exquisite Negligee.

Even brimmed hats sometimes subscribe to earring embellishments, as will be seen in this picture, where, posed to the right below, is a handsome multi-colored hat with the fashionable earring trim, suspended from each end of a "slave-bracelet" band. While this model is enhanced with a pair of earrings, it is just as good style, particularly for the snug-typed hat, to pose a dangling ornament at one side only.

Just-from-Paris hats emphasize a wide use of buckles, especially for little felts and ribbon hats. The smart felt shown at the top to the right in the picture illustrates a smart buckle placement.

Not only buckles and earrings are in favor, but there is a decided trend toward employing ornaments of all sorts. Among popular ideas dagger pins and twin pearl pins stand at the top of the list. A clever use of two sets of twin pins is shown in this group of hats, also the effectiveness of the dagger pin as a trimming for the small hat.

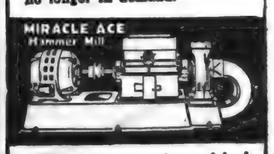
Grind Feed for Money

Own the feed business with this new kind of feed mill. Every community is now, or soon will be demanding feed ground quickly in large quantities and very fine. Medium grinding, done by many kinds of mills, is no longer in demand.



This is the latest form of feed grinder. It combines the cutting action of the attrition mill with the hammering action of the hammer mill.

This mill will grind 100 lbs. of ear corn, oats, rye, barley, alfalfa, or anything grindable to any fineness, with 25% to 50% less power than any other type of grinder.

This saving in power alone makes these mills money makers all over the country. They will give you a better profit grinding feed than any other business in which you can engage on the same amount of capital. There should be one in your community.

Send for free booklet "THE STORY OF A WONDERFUL FEED MILL" which tells you about this mill and the opportunity of making money in the all-year feed business. Complete equipments in capacities from 2,500 to 25,000 per hour, costing from $750 and up. Many mills pay for themselves in a few months.

The War at Close Range Described in a Remarkable Series by an Officer of the Marines

Capt. JOHN W. THOMASON, Jr.

[Illustrated by the Author From Sketches Made on the Battlefield]

These German roads were all honestly metaled, but the inch or so of mud on the surface was like soup underfoot, and the overcoats soaked up the rain like blotting-paper. It was the kind of a morning with no line between night and daylight. The blackness turned to gray, and, after a while, the major, on his horse, could look back and see the end of his column. The battalion, he reflected, was up to strength again. It hadn't been this large since it went to Blanc Mont, the end of September.

He shut his eyes on that thought—a hundred and thirty men that came out, where a thousand went in—then replacements, and, after the armistice, more replacements. Perhaps the quality was running down a little. The new chaps didn't seem as tall and broad as the old men, the tall, sunburnt Leathernecks that went out the road from Meaux, toward Chateau-Thierry, in the spring.

Odd, just six months since the spring. . . . But a few veterans and hard drilling between fights would keep the temper in an outfit . . . one remembered a phrase in an order of the division commander's—"The Second division has never failed to impose its will upon the enemy. . . ." And today it crossed the German Rhine. . . . He swung out of his saddle and stood by the road to watch them pass; 1,200 men, helmets and rifles gleaming a little in the wet gray light. . . .

The road led eastward through a country of low hills, sodden in the rain. Untidy clouds sprawled on the crests and spilled wet filaments into the valleys. The land was all in cultivation, laid off in precise squares and oblongs; some newly plowed, some sparsely green with turnips and rape. It looked ugly and ordered and sullenly prosperous. There was slow conversation in the column.

"—Anybody know where we goin' today?" "Damfino—naw—I did hear the skipper's orderly say we'd make the Rhine, some time—" "How far—" "Some guy was lookin' at a map at battalion. Said it was about thirty kilomets." "It's always 'bout thirty kilomets in this dam' country—" "Yeh! But I remember one time it was twelve kilomets. The night we hiked up to Verdun, back last March. Had a Frawg guide—little shrimp wit' a forked beard. Ask him how far, all he'd say was: 'Doos kilomets—doos kilomets—'

"Hiked all night in the rain, like this, an' at daylight we came to a sign, wit' the name of the place we're goin' to, an' it said 'Doos kilomets'—that guide, he let on that he was right su'prised—" But there were very few men in the column who remembered the hike to Verdun, in the early spring of 1918; in one company eight, in another eleven; in the whole battalion the barest handful. It had been a long road. The first way-station was the Bois de Belleau; a lot of people stopped there, and were there yet. And there were more, comfortably rotting in the Foret de Retz, south of Soissons. And more yet, well dead around Blanc Mont. And a vast drift of them back in hospitals. Men walked silent, remembering the old dead. . . . Twelve hundred men hiking to the Rhine, and how many ghosts. . . . The mist rolled around the column.

"—You replacements never knew Corp'ral Snair, that got bumped off at Soissons, dailyin' with a Maxim gun. He was a musical cuss, an' he . . . song to the tune of the Old Gray Mare—She Ain't What She Uster Be'—somethin' like

'The U. S. flag will fly over Germany
Less than a year from now—'

—and now it is, an' it's a pity he ain't here to see it—" "Well, but he's restin' easy where he is—me, I'm cold as hell an' this dam' drizzle is drainin' down my neck—"

There was nothing but the mist and the rain, and a mean, cold little wind with a bite in it. North and south, from the edge of Holland to the Metz gateway, all the armies were marching. Ahead, just out of contact, went the German armies. The battalion passed a dense little wood of firs—Christmas-tree woods,—the battalion called them.

This clump showed unmistakably that it had been a camp; but there was no litter; the Boche who bivouacked there had left it neat and clean. Along the road in orderly piles were some hundreds of the round German helmets, and parked precisely in a cleared place, where horse-lines had been, was a battery of 105 field howitzers. The old Boche was jettisoning what he didn't need. The battalion observed and was thoughtful.

"What about the ole Boche?—You think he was licked enough?" "No, I don't. That stuff back there, they laid it down under orders, like they do everything. It's stacked—it ain't just thrown away. An' look how they police up behind themselves—" "Yeh! Remember the other day, when we was advance-guard, we could see their rear-guard, sometimes—perfect order, an' all that—not like a defeated outfit, at all!" "Sure! I hope to spit in yo' mess-kit it ain't! An' those little towns back yonder, with the arches an' the flags and the welcome returnin' heroes stuff—none o' that was for us—" "They ain't licked enough. Look at this country—winter plowin' done—everything ship-shape—no shell-holes—no barb' wire—who in hell won this war, anyway?"

"You said it. We oughter got up in here an' showed the old Boche what it was like, to have a war in his own yard." "Well, I've been in all of it, an' pers'nally I was glad when the shootin' stopped. I got me some sleep an' a full belly, an' a pair of new shoes—an' some fireman's underwear, too. An' I was right proud not to be killed. I ain't prepared to die—" "We know you ain't; sergeant—we know" "Aw, belay that—I mean, I was glad, myself, but we oughter gone on—oughter've finished it while we was at it. He wasn't licked enough, an' now he's goin' home like a peacock wit' seven tails—!"

This was the consensus of opinion, delivered with consideration in the rain. The replacements, especially those who had joined up after the armistice, in Belgium, were savagely regretful. The chaps who had come in after Champagne, and been among those present at one fight, were bloodthirsty, but to a lesser degree. Only the veterans were entirely calm.

The rain fell, the road grew heavier. The battalion, soaked and miserable, plodded on. They passed through many villages, all alike; all ugly and without character. The houses were closed and shuttered. You saw few people, but you always had the feeling of eyes behind the shutters. One thick-bodied Boche, in uniform—an artilleryman, by his leather breeches—stood in the doorway of a house, smoking a porcelain pipe that hung to his knee. His face was set in a cast of hate. He stood and stared, and the battalion, passing, looked him over with respect.

"Understand a bird like that." "Yeh—he's honest. Those dam' Heinies in the billet last night, they made me sick. That fellow that talked English. Says he was glad his American frien's, present by agreement in the Rheinlan', to welcome—says that to me, an' would the Herr Soldier like a good cup of coffee?" "Dam' his remarks—how 'bout the coffee?" "Well, it tasted funny, but it was hot." "Old guy at our billet gave us some cognac. Hot stuff! He didn't let on, though.—You know those trick certificates a soldier's family gets in Germany?—Colored picture like a Crol' Guerre certificate, shows a fat, beer-drinkin' Heinie angel standin' over a dead Boche—signed Wilhelm I. R.—you know.

"Well, this bird had six of them in his front room, all framed on the wall. I gathered they was his sons. Four bumped off at Verdun in 1916. One very recent—Soissons, July.—Wonder if we met that fella? He stood there an' looked at me while I was readin' them, an' he looked like a wolf. I don't blame him. But how come he gave us the cognac—?" Later the battalion learned that the Boche had orders to be hospitable. . . .

Toward noon the clouds lifted, and the rain slowed to a thin drizzle, although it did not stop. The battalion filed between hills toward a great valley, dimly seen. The hills towered over them, dark, menacing— "No wonder the ole Boche has such a mean disposition, livin' th a country like this—" The battalion came into a town with paved streets and trolley-cars and tall factory chimneys that did not smoke. Platoon commanders said it was Remagen; those towers to the right would be the bridge. There was a bridge, a great steel structure of high black arches. The battalion filed upon it. Under it black water flowed swiftly, with surges and eddies dimpled by the rain. High rocky hills came down out of the mist on the farther side.

"So this is the Rhine," remarked the battalion. "Hell!" A few files were interested. A lank Texan said: "I don't see much to make a fuss about. You boys ever see the Trinity in overflow time? Ten miles from bank to bank, in the McKenzie Bend country—why, we'd call this a creek down where I come from—" "Naw, it ain't much river—an' no more is your dam Trinity! I was raised in Sent Louie—Ole Miss'sip', now—" "Well, rivers in this country are mainly over-touted. That Marne, it wouldn't be much more'n a branch, down South. I never saw that there Vesle river, but a guy in the Thirty-second division, that was with me in Neuilly, he says you could mighty near jump across it." "Heard anything about chow?—Galleys went on ahead awhile ago—when do we eat—"

For four years no hostile troops with arms in their hands had seen this river; only sad files of prisoners had crossed it, under German guard. The battalion turned right on the eastern bank and went up the river, on a broad road between a cliff and the swift black water. There were many houses, a continuous town. It was past noon of a Friday, the 13th December, and the Boche school-children were out. They gathered to look at the passing column. The marines eyed them keenly.

These kids were different. They did not point or talk or cry out, after the manner of children. They stood in stolid groups, wooden-faced, with unwinking pale-blue eyes. The boys were nearly all in field-gray uniform cloth—cut down, perhaps, from the cast-off clothes of an elder. Some of them wore boots and round soldier-caps. They carried books and lunch-boxes, knapsack fashion, on their shoulders.—"Look, will you—that kid there ain't more'n a yearlin', and they've got him in heavy marchin' order a'ready!" "Yeh,—they start 'em early—that's howcome they're the way they are—these Boche."

There were round-faced little girls with straw-colored braids, in cloaks. They did not look poorly fed, like the waxen-faced children the battalion remembered in France. And at every corner there were more of them. The battalion was impressed.—"Say—you see all those kids—all those little square-heads! Hundreds of 'em, I'll swear! Something's got to be done about these people. I tell you, these Boche are dangerous! They have too many children—"

One more song—"Long Boy."

One of the very few soldier songs that survived the Atlantic voyage—although it suffered some sea change—was "Long Boy." It ran (with variations):

"Good-bye, Maw! Good-bye Paw.
Good-bye, mule, with your old hee-haw. . . .
* * * * * * *
I'll bring you a Turk an' a Kaiser too,
And that's about all one fellow can do. . . ."

This file pictured above is cheering his soul in the angle of the bridge at Silly-le-Long, just outside of Cognac Pete's buvette. In a little while an M. P. with no ear for music will run him in.

[THE END.]

Nature Prodigal in Gifts to the Great

The great man has usually looked the part. Lowell said of Emerson that there "was a majesty about him beyond all the men I have ever known." Washington impressed those about him as being no ordinary man, and Dr. James Thatcher said "the strength and proportion of his joints and muscles appeared to be commensurate with the pre-eminent powers of his mind." Goethe was likened in his youth to an Apollo, and the physician Hufeland declared that never had he "met with a man in whom bodily and mental organization were so perfect." Tennyson was "one of the finest looking men in the world." Wordsworth was, according to the artist Hayden, "of very fine heroic proportions." Southey looked an ideal poet, Byron was as beautiful as his verse and was likened to "the god of the Vatican, the Apollo Belvidere." Leonardo da Vinci had a figure of beautiful proportions and a noble and engaging presence. Walter Scott was eminently handsome, "much above the usual standard" and "cast in the mold of young Hercules," with a "fresh and brilliant complexion and a countenance of great dignity."—Scientific Monthly.

Vantage Points

A certain motorist, very indignant, indeed, drew up beside a young man on a country road. "See here!" he shouted to the young fellow, "why do you have these humps every here and there on this road?"

"Why," said the young fellow, with a simulated air of surprise, "didn't you notice? They were put there so as to give a fellow's car a start to jump the puddles!"

Dabbs looked pleased at the "us" but he frowned a moment afterward, and when Mary touched his arm gently, looked down at her warily. "I'm trying to figure out, daughter, whether you're right about the money. I guess you are, though. As you say, Polly'd only use it to get further away from me, and that would keep us apart. Besides, it mustn't be money that brings Polly to me. It must be—you. You can see that."

"Of course. I can Mother's point of view, too," Mary admitted, wishing to be absolutely fair to the absent, which is always so difficult a task when sympathies are mostly with those present. "But I somehow feel on your side, Dad, and when the pinch comes, I'll warn you and we'll act together. Then we will see what Mother does. She's—well, surprising! You can never tell about Mother."

She moved toward the door. Mother would be waiting, and that was beginning to trouble her. "Oh, hurry after us to Venice, Father. We've got so much to say to each other, and there's no time left for us today. And," she paused to make this emphatic, "you must not come further than the elevator with me. If Mother saw me with you, she wouldn't say a word, but it would not be Venice."

"Just as you say, dear, and I suppose it's safer, but I hate it." Claude moved to the door with her, and as they reached it he said, hesitatingly: "Mary, do you need any money? I've plenty."

"Generous old dear," Mary thought, but what she said was: "Oh, I'm quite all right, as long as Mother's holds out. The question is, how long can you stand the pace Mother's setting?"

Claude started to speak and stopped himself. "Oh, I can hold out for some time," he told her cheerfully, "and there's always the grocery business."

Mary patted his arm. "Of course, and if it wasn't for Mother, I'd go back with you now like a shot and keep books or sell things behind the counter. Wouldn't it be fun? It's Mother who keeps me from doing it. Mother can't be left alone, you see."

Claude Dabbs put his arm about his daughter. "I knew it. I always knew you were all right, Mary. It won't come to leaving Polly. We'll try and arrange it so we can each have a share of you—sort of share and share alike."

Mary patted his hand, but looked a little dubious. She put an arm about his neck and drew his head down and kissed him. "I may have to lie a little for you," she warned him, "but surely in such a good cause, I'll be forgiven. At least I'll chance it."

The elevator came and she was gone, and he knew that the better part of valor should keep him from watching from his windows. But all the fears and cares of a family man, which begin with the child's birth and spread gradually and with decreasing force through the long years of the child's growth and maturity, had suddenly assailed Claude Dabbs, and he wondered, fiercely, what Polly could be thinking of to allow such a girl as his Mary to go about alone.

CHAPTER XI

Mary marveled that she was able to conceal from her mother the exciting fact that she had met and talked to her father. It seemed to her quite impossible that she could sit beside her mother, and think about her father, and her mother suspect nothing and think—well, Mary did not quite know what Mother was thinking about.

For the first time in her life Mary realized that souls could be lonely. People could be as close as Mother and she had always been, and yet so wide apart that when one deliberately drew down the curtain, the other sat in darkness and could know nothing of the thoughts and feelings behind the curtain.

Claude's heart and head were full of Mary. She occupied his thoughts to the exclusion of everything else. So absorbed was he in his own visions, that Ned, returning in triumph from a successful visit to the steamship office, for the first time in their acquaintance was at odds with Claude. His indignation was roused by the news that Claude had actually had Mary there, in the hotel, and yet had said nothing at all about Ned. As though that were not enough, Claude calmly demanded that he transfer their reservation to the next ship, sailing a few days later.

It had been a difficult matter for him to obtain passage on the same boat with the Johnstons and now these efforts were in vain.

When the change had been made Ned asked: "Why didn't you tell Miss Johnston I was in town?"

"Because I forgot you, and everything else, Ned. All I could think of was that Mary is my own girl and nothing that Polly does will keep me away from Mary—when she wants me."

Ned's feeling of exasperation gradually gave way to the thought that in reality Claude had done him a good turn. By not mentioning him to Mary, Claude had saved the explanation that he was not Carter, but Ned Carter Rangeley. Moreover, there would be no need, if they traveled on different ships, for her to know it until they met. There are some explanations that should come from the lover. This was one. Mary still believed him the grocer's clerk.

The next morning Ned determined that, by hook or crook, he would have speech with Mary before the steamer sailed. He could easily get on board, and the chances were that he would be able to have a word alone.

He became aware that Claude was regarding him steadily across the breakfast table.

"Far be it from me, Ned, to worm myself into any business of yours, but if you should be thinking of looking up Mary before she sails, my advice is—Don't!"

"What's wrong with the idea, supposing I entertained it?"

"Everything," said Claude, all the kindness gone from the blue eyes. "It's a bad idea. It would mess up my plans. If necessary, I'm prepared to rope and tie you, to prevent it."

He leaned across the table, his eyes growing soft again: "Why boy, can't you see? There's some women you can rush, and others you've gotta let run a little before you throw the rope. Of course, I haven't been so successful in my own affair that I should set up for a guide, but I know about Mary. If I were you—I wouldn't."

"Enough said," Ned quickly agreed. "But once over the water, C. M., I'll play my game without interference."

Claude's caution prevented Ned meeting his father. Loren Rangeley bade Mrs. Johnston an impressive farewell. He carried himself so paternally toward Mary that only her fear of antagonizing her mother prevented her from raging aloud against him.

The same jealousy, in a different degree, prevented Mrs. Johnston from telling Mary of Ned's message. The sight of his flowers, a modest bunch of violets chosen as befitting a grocer's clerk, annoyed her still further. It was not until New York harbor was well behind them that Mary was told.

Something in the way her mother gave the message, with the inference that Carter was a pushing, obnoxious creature, made Mary place his flowers conspicuously in the stateroom.

All this Mrs. Johnston received in silence, and Mary, sore at heart, could not understand it. After all, they were Americans and her mother had never been a snob. What could have made her take this attitude toward a perfectly nice young man who had saved her daughter's life? Mary decided not to blame her mother at all, but to put the blame on that detestable Mr. Rangeley, who had probably been quite difficult.

Why had her mother borrowed from him? Surely things might have been arranged with less haste. There seemed something inherently unjust to C. M. Dabbs in this wild desire to escape.

Just or unjust, she could not question her mother. Mrs. Johnston's face was set and worried, and though it changed a moment after to smiles and graciousness, as an old acquaintance greeted her, Mary remembered that anxious look. If her mother had promised to consider that awful Rangeley, Mary would have to warn her father.

Polly told Mary nothing, and Mary danced, walked, talked, played games, flirted a little, stayed in bed and read when she grew tired of everybody on board ship.

Polly's routine was much the same, save that she spent more time in bed reading feverishly and without discrimination. They talked in the usual jolly, casual way at night. But certain subjects were avoided—Clover Hollow, Claude Dabbs, Ned Carter and Loren Rangeley.

Just three days behind them, on the same course, Claude Dabbs and Ned Carter followed. Ned was finding Claude a delightful traveling companion, utterly free from the shams of ignorance, and willing to acquire knowledge of all sorts. Ned also discovered that others found Claude attractive, and Ned even accused Claude of being too popular.

"Polishing up for Mary," was his explanation and excuse.

A curiously congenial pair they were, finding an infinite variety of things to talk about. They seldom mentioned Mary, and Ned wanted to talk about Mary. He had reached the stage when if the beloved's name is not mentioned by some one, there is no conversation. Some one, any one, every one must speak of her to him.

Claude, a charming companion in every other respect, was, on the one vital subject, dumb.

Ned fumed, in secret, knowing that with Claude Dabbs all half-measures were useless; he would either have to declare his whole purpose, or keep silent. Since he knew nothing yet of Mary's feelings, he kept silent.

He wished, heartily, that Claude and his Polly would play out their comedy by themselves and leave him a clear field with Mary. Mary in Venice! The combination would be heavenly, but not if everywhere that Mary went a mother and father, utterly estranged, followed.

As their journey brought them closer to Mary, the two men communed in their hearts with the totally different images they had set up of the same girl.

The real and very different Mary—in that instead of only being what they thought, was all that and more—slept as tranquilly as an Italian railway carriage would permit.

As the time drew near when she might reasonably expect her father to appear, Mary thought of nothing else, and grew nervous lest she should betray, in some unguarded speech, the thoughts that were uppermost in her mind.

Polly Johnston steadily refused to disclose her plans to Mary. Polly's nights were sleepless, her days restless. It was as though she felt some approaching change and strove to evade it.

Several wakeful nights followed their arrival in Venice, and one morning Polly awoke with a headache. Though she kept up valiantly until after luncheon, she was compelled finally to seek her darkened bedroom. Mary knew that Polly could not endure being read or talked to when her head was like that. So, when Mary proposed that she should spend the afternoon in St. Mark's, just around the corner, there was no excuse Polly could justly offer to oppose the plan, though she did not like it.

Mary laughed down all suggestions that she was quite too attractive to wander about alone. Mary was an American, though she had had a foreign bringing-up, and she reminded her mother of this, and that she knew how to take care of herself.

Polly, who had wandered about as she chose when Mary's age, realized she was being absurd.

She told Mary to go, but not to stay late, and if she, Polly, did not feel better, she would have her dinner in bed. In that case Mary might dine with the Farleys, whom they had met on the train. Mary acquiesced, somewhat absent-mindedly. Having made her mother comfortable, or at least as comfortable as a headache would allow, Mary set forth.

Venice, that lovely city of the sea, seemed to Mary to be looking her best that afternoon. The sun shone warm on the piazza. The shops had a sleepy look, their awnings like drooping eyelids, and the patches of shade were grateful to the eye. Mary thought Venice was like a lovely, seductive woman, who, past her first youth, stirred men's hearts to pity for all she had lost, and then to passion for the ageless beauty which she still retained.

Soldier's Name Well "Worth Army Corps"

When the French revolution flamed out, the aristocratic La Tour d'Auvergne, disdaining pleas of his fellow officers to leave France, threw in his lot with the revolutionists. Time after time he emerged from battle with his clothing torn by bullets, but unharmed, and so he gained his reputation of bearing a charmed life. Stories of his amazing courage reached the enemy and inspired terror.

This reputation enabled him to capture San Sebastian, Spain, single-handed. He arrived in a little boat bearing a tiny cannon, disembarked, marched to the citadel, announced he was the advance guard of the French army and demanded that the place be surrendered. The Spanish commandant was so intimidated that he was willing to surrender, but asked La Tour d'Auvergne to fire one shot, so it could not be said he had given up without being attacked. La Tour d'Auvigne obligingly consented. A volley replied and then the commandant capitulated.

NEVER Wear GLASSES

This advice has been quite faithfully kept by a number of people who are now unable to get glasses that give proper relief. It is just as logical to wait until life is almost extinct before calling a physician.

What chance has the doctor when your vitality is about all gone? None—neither can you get comfortable glasses if your eyes are so exhausted that the muscles can't respond to artificial aid. We are prepared to make the required examination and fit you with glasses (if needed) that will fit your pocket book and your eyes.

Meantime, people who are deathly sick will go out and "beat the bushes" to find enough to save their lives. —Cromwell Advance.

A judgment of $4,000 was given Tony Schweitzer of Auburn in his suit against the City of Auburn for alleged permanent injuries by a jury in the Steuben circuit court. The case was placed in the hands of the jurors at 5 o'clock Friday afternoon and they agreed on a verdict at 9 P. M. Friday. Tony was injured in June 1926, when he took hold of a guy wire charged with electricity, inflicting permanent injuries.

Hanry Paul Zicca, three year old son of Camillo and Frances Aversa Zica of Garrett, was killed Friday afternoon in an unusual accident in the Baltimore and Ohio railroad yards at Garrett. When discovered by the child's mother and Mrs. Jeanette Thibault the boy was dead, lying beside a pile of railroad ties with one of the ties across a part of his face and chest.

Workmen will start Monday to put the room formerly occupied by the Schaab & Brother company ready-to-wear store in shape for the occupancy of E. W. Hicks, jeweler. Mr. Hicks expects to install new wall cases and a separate optical room and move to the new location about July 1st. The Hicks jewelry store is at present located in the building at the corner of Main and Seventh streets. —Star. Mr. Hicks is one of our regular advertisers and we are pleased to inform our readers of this change and of the improvements to be made in his equipment, which is evident that a greater service will be rendered his patrons.

The earth eventually will cease to rotate and will become a stationary object, one-half with sunshine and the other half with eternal darkness, according to Dr. Andrew Crommelin, formerly assistant astronomer at the Royal Observatory, London, who recently retired after 36 years of service. Dr. Crommelin declared recently that at the present rate of "slowing" in its rotation, the earth would cease to rotate in some "few millions of years." He attributed the "slowing" to friction of the tides. "The world is safe enough, however," he said, "so far as everyone who is on it now is concerned." What a relief that last statement is.

Peachey Gets a Promotion

By H. IRVING KING

(Copyright.)

PEACHEY WALTON had officiated behind the gilded wire of the cashier's desk in Roberts & Co.'s restaurant for five years. Her real "front name" was Mary Ellen; but they called her Peachey because of her peachblow complexion, which she retained unimpaired in spite of the fact that she had seen twenty-five years which she acknowledged—and two more which she ignored in the reckoning. Peachey was a wonder at figures; you could swear to all her accounts without checking them up—except her account of her age. She was efficient and well aware of her efficiency; good looking and well aware of her good looks; popular with the customers and proud of her popularity. She could give correct change for a two-dollar bill, exchange repartee with an old customer and sit on a young man inclined to "get fresh" at one and the same time. Her wages were fair; she supported her widowed mother and made her indolent younger brother work—the latter no small job.

Roberts had long ago died out of the firm of Roberts & Co.; and "Co."—whose other name was Perkins—was sole proprietor of the establishment, which boasted of giving the best cup of coffee for five cents that could be purchased for that modest sum on Manhattan island—to say nothing of Staten Island, Long Island and the Bronx. Mr. Perkins was getting along in years, but none of his employees ever thought of his ever retiring. Roberts & Co. without Perkins was simply a thing impossible to imagine. Then one day a great, big bomb fell into the establishment and blew up all ancient traditions. Mr. Perkins announced that he had sold out to a man named Thomas Carlingford.

The employees were all in a flutter. The restaurant of Roberts & Co. was an institution and a conservative one; and those who patronized it regarded any change in it as little short of sacrilege. They were all sure they were going to hate the new proprietor, who would probably be brimming over with innovations.

Thomas Carlingford appeared. He was a man in his late thirties. They had expected an older man. The changes he made were few and unimportant. Things jogged along as usual. In a month the regular customers were calling the new proprietor Tom. The cashier's department was the only one over which Tom exercised a painstaking and even nagging supervision. He was constantly hovering around Peachey's gilded cage and made her stay behind every afternoon, when the night cashier came on, and go over her accounts with him. He never called her Peachey, as the others did, but Miss Walton, and treated her with a formality somewhat marked. Peachey thought he might be "splendid" if he only were not so fussy. She wondered whether he suspected her of dishonesty that he was always keeping an eye on her.

Then one day when Tom and Peachey were in the proprietor's little office going over the accounts, he took what Peachey considered an unpardonable liberty. "Miss Walton," said he, "I must request that you will cease chatting with the young men patrons of this establishment when they go to pay their bills."

"My," said Peachey in surprise and not a little resentment, "I don't chat with them. They are regular customers—were here long before you appeared on the scene—and we just exchange a few pleasantries with each other. I don't see where the harm is."

"Well," replied Tom, frowning, "I don't like it. Let us go on with the accounts."

Peachey felt like telling Tom that he could keep his old job—she would have no more of it. But there was the mother to be considered and brother Bob was out of a job again.

There were tears in Peachey's eyes by the time she reached her own door—and then a smile broke over the face of Peachey. "Oh golly," she said half aloud; "I wonder if I've hit it! If I have—oh, joy!" And she went into the house, astonishing her mother by breaking into song.

The more she thought of the matter the surer she was that she was right in her surmises, and entered the restaurant in an extremely cheerful state of mind the next morning. But her faith in her own prescience was badly shaken when Tom, in a solemn manner, called her into his office, and, after fidgeting a little, said: "Miss Walton, I have decided to get a new cashier."

Peachey looked at him hard. He seemed to be terribly embarrassed. "Why, what's the matter with me?" she asked.

"Oh, nothing," stammered Tom, "only, you see—that is, I have another position in mind for you."

"Really? What is the pay? What is it?"

"As to the pay," said Tom, "there is no salary attached; but—but—oh, confound it! Can't you see? Haven't you understood? I want you to be my wife."

"And the reason you raised such a row about my talking with the young men customers was because—"

"Because I was jealous, I guess," replied Tom sheepishly.

"I guessed right, then," cried Peachey, and began to laugh. But Tom caught her in his arms and smothered her laughter with kisses.

Home Bureau Activities

The Concord Township Home Bureau met last Friday at the home of Mrs. Nelia Morr. The hostess assisted by the committee, Mrs. Lee Jackson, Mrs. Carrie Morr, Mrs. Diadem Bone and Mrs. Vera Elson, gave an entertainment consisting of two piano solos by Miss Hilda Morr, a reading by Margaret Elenor Hamilton and a humorous lesson in a foreign language. Mrs. Marie Draggoo gave a talk and led an interesting round table discussion on "Beautifying the Grounds." Response to roll call was made with "Things worth remembering." As the state project leader will not be with us until August, a committee of three was appointed to arrange a lesson for the next meeting, the subject to be "Threshing dinners." Mrs. Mary Krise, Mrs. Hattie Widney and Mrs. Anna Tustison acting as the commojttee. After roll call the entertainment committee served ice cream and strawberries and white cake to twenty-one members and guests.

Pastor's One-minute Sermon

The evening service at the Methodist Church was dismissed and all attended the Children's Day exercises at the Lutheran Church. While listening to the Community Orchestra the following outline of lessons came to the Pastor:

1. The orchestra has and acknowledges a leader. Imagine the sight with each one trying to be the director. Community interests are often spoiled because there are too many who want to be the leader.

2. They are in tune:

Because they have each one tuned to a common instrument—the piano.

When we are each tuned with Jesus then we are in tune with each other and we have harmony, providing—

3. We play the same piece. Other selections may be equally good but all of them would be spoiled if we tried to play them at the same time.

4. Then, we must have prepared ourselves. Place the instruments in the hands of those who had not studied and practiced, and you would indeed be surprised should they produce music.

Our most flagrant failures as Christians are because we have failed to study that we might know Him, His plan and His program of life.

Roy S. Brown, Minister.

WINONA LAKE SEASON OPENS JUNE 26, UNUSUAL TALENT SECURED

This year's announcement of Winona's array of talent is most unusual. The Chautauqua features are among the best that can be secured. Programs varying each day, offering concerts, lectures, plays, photo-plays and entertainments of magic and demonstration. An entire season's pleasure is provided at little cost; a vacation worth while, amidst flowers and shrubbery, and an atmosphere surcharged with healthgiving and reatful virtues. Winona is among the leading summer resorts of its kind in the nation. Visitors find many things to their liking, and they never forget the inspiration they receive from listening to great teachers, preachers, artists, players and entertainers, each in his field of interest.

Among the special attractions this year is "Elijah," Mendelssohn's wonderful oratorio, presented as a grand opera production with soloists of national reputation. Among them Rollin Pease, baritone of Chicago, and Arthur Kroft, tenor of New York. Two performances will be given. Spectacular in presentation, elaborate costumes, unusual electrical effects. To see "Elijah" will be revelation to those who may be familiar with the masterful.

These performances will be directed by William D. Chenery, who presented them in Boston, Kansas City, Springfield, Ill., and other musical centers; dates are July 14 and 22.

Rev. "Billy" Sunday lectures July 6th, giving his very best and newest address. He is "The one and only 'Billy' Sunday." Many have tried to do as he does, but have failed. He is a unique personality, beloved and admired by millions, tho' criticised and slandered by certain elements. He is a true friend of Winona and his lecture will be one of the outstanding events of the season.

Madam Schumann-Heink gives a recital on August 16th, stopping on her Golden Jubilee Tour, rounding out fifty wonderful years before the public as a singer of exceptional ability. This is also her Farewell Tour, and many who have heard her in other years will be glad for the pleasure of hearing her again, and many who have never had the opportunity will count it a privilege to listen to one of the greatest artists of the world.

Alberto Salvi, the Wizard Harpist, appears August 4th, and promises to be a bright spot in the season's program. His music is fraught with beauty, soothing to the ear, and a benediction to the soul. The harp in the hands of Salvi is an instrument, varied in expression, a fountain, a brook, an organ, an orchestra, a living thing of enchantment. Coexistent with the Chautauqua and special attractions are a score of other activities each carrying a full program.

The Summer School, directed by Prof. E. M. Linton, Indiana University, is conducted creditably, offering Normal course, and College courses in Art, Biology, Chemistry, Domestic Science, the Languages, Mathematics, Physics, Psychology, Business, and Music.

The John Herron Art School of Indianapolis, conducts a branch School, offering three courses, Fine Arts, Commercial Arts and Teachers' Training.

The Biological Station, near Kosciusko Lodge, offers courses. Dr. Will Scott, Professor of Zoology at Indiana University will be in charge.

National Photographers School will be in session again, directed by William J. Towels of Washington, D. C.

The Bethany Girls Camp, directed by Mrs. Carrie Stewart Besserer, of Chicago, a camp designed for the purpose of producing a fully developed womanhood spiritually, physically, mentally and socially,—July and August.

Rodeheaver Summer School of Sacred Music,—this school brings to Winona a gifted band of young people, anxious for instruction in church singing and directing, as well as evangelistic courses,—August 9 to 28.

The Bible Conference, claimed to be one of the best in the world,—speakers brought from many countries and climes; the best that can be procured,—Conference lasts 10 days, August 5 to 14. Director Dr. W. E. Beiderwolf.

Winona School of Theology, with Dr. Beiderwolf as Director and Dr. J. A. Huffman, Dean, is a thorough evangelistic accredited school of Theology. Ministers can vacationize with profit; tuition reasonable, July 14 to August 18.

The Great World Congress, World League Against Alcoholism, will convene August 17 to 23. This will be an unprecedented gathering. Speakers of international note, a world-wide representation, a history-making conference.

Nnmerous other activities are scheduled for this summer, and any desiring detailed information should write Winona Institutions, Dr. J. C. Breckenridge, General Secretary and Manager, Winona Lake, Indiana.

Silver Fox Most Valued

The biological survey says that the silver fox is the most valuable individual pelt. The marten brings the highest price for the size of the pelt of all North American fur-bearing animals, while, taking into consideration, the total annual catch, the muskrat brings the greatest returns.

Man Using Both Hands Can Accomplish More

Out of every hundred babies born, 17 are naturally right-handed, 3 are left-handed, and the remaining 80 are capable of using either hand with equal ease. Yet, owing to our method of training the young, by the time those hundred babies are three years old all except the three who were left-handed will use the right hand for such essential work as writing, painting and the use of all tools.

There are said to be over 400 different sorts of work in which the equal use of both hands is an advantage, but even in those in which one hand only is generally used it is a tremendous advantage to be able to use the left hand in order to rest the right.

Sir James Barrie, when his right hand failed him, had to learn to write with his left, but Sir Robert Baden-Powell, when bitten by a dog and forced to carry his right arm in a sling, went right on with his work, writing and drawing with the other hand, for he has been able to use both hand equally all his life.

The great animal artist, Landseer, could paint two pictures at the same time, using both hands. The famous Leonardo da Vinci was equally accomplished, and so was Holbein, the portrait painter. More wonderful seems the fact that the well-known surgeon, Mr. Simeon Snell, could operate equally easily with either hand. Sir Oliver Lodge is another well-known man who uses both hands with ease.

It is the left side of the brain that controls the muscles of the right side of the body, so by learning to use the left hand a person actually rests one side of his brain and is therefore able to do more work at a stretch.

Beautiful Church Tower

Many of the parish churches of England and Wales are beautiful, but the tower of the church at Wrexham, Wales, with its corner turrets high as medieval fortresses, its spirulets and crockets, intricate bands and graceful cornices, is a thing of astonishing beauty and worthy to have graced a minster. As a noted traveler once said: "One cannot look at it without acknowledging a debt of deep gratitude to those who built it so many centuries ago."

Lesson for June 26

Review—Life and Letters of Peter (Read I Peter 5:1-11).

GOLDEN TEXT—Follow me and I will make you fishers of men.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Lessons from Peter's Life.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Peter in the School of Christ.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Peter as a Leader.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Peter's Life and Work.

At best, suggestions as to the method of review have only a relative value. The individuality of the teacher, the aptitude of the pupils and the department of the school are factors which determine the best method to use. Three methods are suggested, the first two of which are in part taken from "Peloubet's Notes."

I. Peter's Characteristics.

Among the outstanding characteristics of Peter may be mentioned impetuosity, leadership, courage, cowardice, changeableness, outspokenness. These traits and others are to be found in the quarter's lessons.

II. Biographical.

The features to be stressed in this plan are Peter's early life, discipleship, sad fall, restoration, preaching at Pentecost, imprisonment, writings.

III. The Summary Method.

Lesson for April 3.

Jesus had first called Peter and John to become His disciples. Afterwards he called them to become fishers of men. He first calls sinners to come to Him for salvation and then calls those who are saved to serve Him in winning others to Christ.

Lesson for April 10.

Following the feeding of the five thousand, some were disposed to compel Christ to be king. Seemingly to prevent the disciples from entanglement in this movement He sent them across the sea. From His place of prayer in the mount He saw them struggling against the storm on Lake Galilee and went to their rescue, speaking words of comfort. At his invitation Peter walked on the water, but when he took his eyes off of the Savior he began to sink.

Lesson for April 17.

To give the disciples a clear conception of His person, to prepare them for the dark hour of the cross, Jesus put to them two questions, "Who do men say I am?" (R. V.) "Who say ye that I am?" (R. V.) One's conception of Christ's person determines his character and his service.

Lesson for April 24.

To revive the crushed hopes of the disciples and to show them how the kingdom was to be realized, Christ was transfigured before them.

Lesson for May 1.

Peter's downfall began when he refused to hear about the cross. The steps in his downfall were self-confidence, sleeping at the post of duty, lack of prayer, zeal without knowledge, following Christ afar off, warming himself at the enemy's fire, and open denial. The look of Jesus brought him to repentance.

Lesson for May 8.

Upon word by Mary that the Lord's tomb was empty, Peter and John hurriedly made an investigation. After Jesus had shown Himself to be alive by many infallible proofs He recommissioned Peter. Resurrection must be beyond a peradventure before there can be missionary effort.

Lesson for May 15.

Fifty days after Christ ascended the Holy Spirit was poured out. When the promise of the Father was sent the disciples were empowered for witnessing of Christ.

Lesson for May 22.

In the power of the Holy Spirit Peter wrought miracles and witnessed for Christ with such power that great numbers were added unto the church.

Lesson for May 29.

After Pentecost Peter, who had cowered before a Jewish maid and shamefully denied his Lord, witnessed for Christ in spite of persecution.

Lesson for June 5.

In keeping with Christ's command to witness to the ends of the earth, the missionary program had so widened as to include the Gentiles. Cornelius, a prominent Gentile of good reputation among the Jews, was used of God to break down the middle wall of partition.

Lesson for June 12.

Peter was imprisoned for preaching the gospel. A great crisis was upon the church. The church prayed and God sent an angel to deliver Peter.

Lesson for June 19.

Though Christians are sojourners in the earth they have responsibilities as citizens. They should be obedient to the laws of the country.

HELP FOR SICK WOMEN

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Has Restored the Health of Thousands

Brooklyn, New York.—Mrs. G. Hegmann of 328 Schaeffer St., was in a run-down condition and could not do her housework. She could not sleep at night. Her story is not an unusual one. Thousands of women find themselves in a similar condition at some time in their lives. "I found your advertisement in my letter box," wrote Mrs. Hegmann, "and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and got relief." Mrs. Hegmann also took Lydia E. Pinkham's Herb Medicine and Lydia E. Pinkham's Pills for Constipation, with good results. She says, "I am recommending your medicines to all I know who have symptoms the same as mine, and to others whom I think it will help. You may use my statement as a testimonial, and I will answer any letters sent to me by women who would like information regarding your medicines."

There are women in your state—perhaps in your town—who have written letters similar to this one telling how much Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped them.

The Pinkham Medicine Company, Lynn, Mass., will gladly furnish other women with these names upon request.

Sugar Be Praised

Dr. Woods Hutchinson finds health in the sugar bowl habit. Pitying our forefathers, he says they obtained their carbohydrates, not in granulated sweetness, but in cannon-ball dumplings, loaded with chunks of fat, spices and sour prunes, which they called plum pudding. Small wonder, he says, those dumpling-eating pioneers awoke with a head like a concertina, and a mouth like a lime kiln.

SUNSHINE CAKE IS DELICATE IN COLOR

Contains Large Proportion of Eggs, but No Butter.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Sunshine cake is one of the sponge group, containing a large proportion of eggs and no butter or other fat. Some of the egg yolks are used, but not all of them, hence it has the delicate yellow color that gives it its name, but differs in texture somewhat from plain sponge cake.

Farmers' Bulletin 1450-F, "Home Baking," which may be obtained by anyone on application to the United States Department of Agriculture, contains the following recipe for sunshine cake:

Sunshine Cake.

8 egg whites	1 cupful sifted soft wheat or pastry flour
8 egg yolks	1 cupful sugar
1 teaspoonful flavoring	½ teaspoonful salt
1 teaspoonful cream of tartar

Beat the yolks and whites of the eggs separately, adding half the salt to the egg whites so that they will beat up very stiff. Add the sugar to the beaten egg yolks and begin adding the flour which has been sifted with the cream of tartar and the rest of the salt. This mixture will be so stiff that you will have to add some of the beaten egg whites for moisture before all the flour is mixed in. Fold the egg whites in very carefully so as not to release any of the air which you have been so careful to beat in. The air is the only leavening in this kind of cake. Last of all add the flavoring. Vanilla, lemon or orange extract may be preferred. Pour the batter as soon as it is mixed into a smooth, ungreased tube pan. This type of pan is best to use for baking a cake of the sponge type because the center opening allows the mixture to heat evenly. The oven should be ready for the cake as soon as it is mixed and in the pan, but be careful not to have the oven too hot.

Sunshine Cake.

Secret of Custard Pie With Crisp Undercrust

Here's the secret of a custard pie with a crisp undercrust—a prebaked shell—according to the bureau of home economics.

Custard Pie.

1¼ cupfuls milk	3 eggs
½ teaspoonful salt	¼ cupful sugar
1 teaspoonful vanilla

Put the milk and the sugar in a double boiler and bring to the scalding point. Add the well-beaten eggs, salt and the flavoring. In the meantime bake a pie crust in a deep pie pan until the crust is golden brown. Pour the custard into the baked pie crust, and place in a moderately hot oven. After a few minutes reduce the heat, and allow the pie to bake at this low temperature until the custard is set in the center of the pie.

Spring Onions

Try cooking spring onions whole with about 3 or 4 inches of stalk left on them. They will be done in from 15 to 20 minutes. Lift them out carefully and pour a white sauce over them. They may be served on toast.

THRIFT IN BUYING FOOD FOR FAMILY

Know What Is Liked, Buy Carefully and Don't Waste.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Being thrifty in buying and using food need not mean going without everything the family likes. It may not mean having a lower food bill than your next-door neighbor, for the food needs of her family may be altogether different from those of your household. You will be thrifty if you know what constitutes the right kind of food for each person in your home, if you buy carefully, and allow nothing to be wasted.

Do you know how many pounds of sugar, butter, flour, coffee, and other much-used foods your family requires each week? How many dozen eggs when eggs are plentiful—how few you can manage with when they are scarce? How much of a given kind of meat to buy for a single dinner, for two dinners, or for a dinner and lunch next day? How many slices of pineapple there are in a can—in other words, how many it will serve? How many makings of breakfast cereal there are in a box of each kind?

Definite knowledge on such points as these, together with a good system of planning meals and buying for them will go a long way toward thrifty management of the food supply. Some housekeepers who keep accounts go over the preceding month's food bills, and not only discover some of the facts of this kind that they need to know, but also arrive at an estimate of how much the food per day averages, or, in some cases, the food per person per day. The advantage of having some such figure as this to guide one is that it helps one to plan for the next week or month and to buy more exactly. If you know just what use is to be made of every pound of food material you purchase, there will be fewer disconcerting left-overs to use up, and the tendency to use materials too lavishly will also be checked. In small families, it may prove most economical to buy perishables in day-to-day amounts, rather than to lose part through spoilage; but as a rule, buying in very small quantities is expensive, either because of the uneven division of the selling price for halves or quarters, or because the dealer charges a higher rate. It takes him four times as long, for instance, to handle and wrap four quarter pounds of butter as is required for one pound of butter.

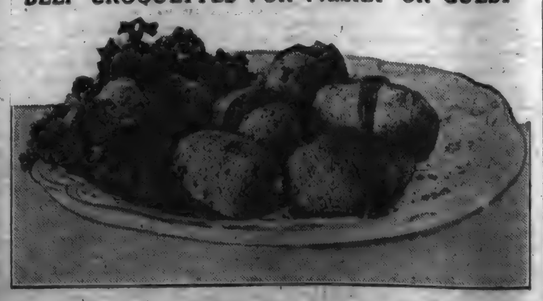
Staple groceries and canned goods are often sold at a lower rate in dozen or half dozen lots, and consequently may be wisely purchased that way. Time as well as money is saved by shopping for such articles in quantity at intervals of several weeks or more. Clubbing with neighbors is often a means of buying perishables at wholesale rates.

Foods in season are cheaper than those out of season, but locally produced foods may sell higher than those brought from a distance, because of freshness, according to the United States Department of Agriculture.

Buy by weight when you can. Estimate the pound rate on package goods and compare one kind with another. Foods in packages are often preferred to those sold in bulk because of the sanitary protection given by the sealed carton.

Selling services are paid for by the customer. Stores run on the "cash-and-carry" plan have eliminated the cost of delivery and credit. If your time is valuable, however, it may be better for you to buy in quantity where delivery is furnished, even if you have to pay more. True thrift sees all the needs of the home as a whole and finds, sometimes, that the lowest dollars-and-cents cost may not be the thriftiest management.

BEEF CROQUETTES FOR FAMILY OR GUEST



Made of Any Cooked Left-Over Lean Meat.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Good croquettes can be made of any cooked left-over lean meat. Beef makes particularly tasty croquettes, suitable for a family dinner or for a guest luncheon. The proportions in the following recipe are given by the United States Department of Agriculture:

Beef Croquettes.

1 pound upper round steak, or other lean beef	2 eggs
1 teaspoonful salt	1 teaspoonful parsley, chopped
½ medium-sized onion, grated	Stale bread, finely grated into crumbs
1 cupful mashed potato, seasoned, or 1 cupful thick cream sauce

Simmer the meat in a small amount of water until tender and then grind, using the fine knife of the grinder. Add the other ingredients, but reserve one egg for dipping. Mix well. Form the meat into balls, or mold into oblong or cone shapes. Dip into the beaten egg which has been well mixed with one tablespoonful of water. Roll in finely sifted bread crumbs and place on a pan or board, and let stand for an hour or longer for the egg coating to dry.

Heat in an iron kettle any desired fat until hot enough to brown a bread crumb in forty seconds. Then carefully place the croquettes in a wire basket, lower them slowly in the fat, and cook until a golden brown. As the croquettes are removed put them on a paper to absorb the excess fat and keep warm in the oven until all are prepared. Serve with garnished parsley and tomato sauce.

Or for an oven-browned instead of a fried croquette, use 1½ instead of 1 cupful of cream sauce in the mixture. This is a little more difficult to mold. Shape the croquettes in the way described, dip them in egg and crumbs, and place them on a greased pan to brown in a hot oven. Serve as described above.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

(©, 1927, Western Newspaper Union.)

When a man will trust his wife with his name, his honor, and his children and will not trust her with his purse, it is easy to see on which he put the highest value.

FOODS FOR OCCASIONS

Some time when you want the dessert especially attractive, serve ice cream in an angel food. Bake the cake in a round tin. Remove the top, take out the center and fill with vanilla ice cream. Cover with the cake lid and pour over the top enough crushed and sweetened strawberries to cover.

Chocolate Waffles.—Make a paste of one-half cupful each of cocoa and hot water, then add one cupful of milk, two well-beaten eggs, two cupfuls of flour sifted with four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth cupful of water and two tablespoonfuls of melted butter. Mix all together well, add a half teaspoonful of vanilla and bake on waffle iron. Serve with a chocolate and marshmallow sauce.

Mixed Fruit Salad.—Use one-half cupful each of shredded pineapple, chopped nutmeats, orange pulp, grapefruit pulp, halved maraschino cherries, and one and one-half cupfuls of sliced bananas. Mix the fruit and nuts and chill. Serve with one-half cupful of heavy cream whipped, adding two or three tablespoonfuls of mayonnaise dressing. Serve in nests of lettuce.

Angel Food Marquis.—Prepare an angel food, using one cupful each of egg whites, sugar and flour, a pinch of salt, one-half teaspoonful of cream of tartar and a teaspoonful of vanilla. Beat the egg whites, adding the salt and half of the cream of tartar; add the sugar when the whites are beaten stiff but not dry, adding it gradually, then fold in the flour, to which the cream of tartar that remains is added. Bake in a tube pan for two hours in a very slow oven, browning the last few minutes in a hot oven. When the cake is cool, cut in three layers and put together with whipped cream, chopped banana and pineapple, with a few nuts and raisins if desired. Cover with whipped cream and serve.

Galantine.—Put a pound of steak through the meat grinder, add two eggs beaten, the juice and rind of a lemon, one and three-fourth cupfuls of bread crumbs, a grating of nutmeg, salt and pepper to taste and one teaspoonful of tarragon vinegar. Pack into a well greased pan and steam four hours. Serve with tomato salad. Cut into thin slices when serving.

Eat much lettuce; it is rich in vitamines, lime, magnesia, has some sodium and a generous portion of phosphorus.

Seasonable Reminders.

This is the time of year when we dispose of the things we do not need and which add to our labor or discomfort, by needing care.

A small garden, even a few square feet, will bring to the table the crisp and tender lettuce—so good for us to eat, the rosy succulent radish and green onion, all with very little care and labor.

Save the bits of leftover paraffin from jelly glasses. When well washed it may be used again for another season of jelly.

Those who still use the old-fashioned irons will find a piece of paraffin a great help in keeping the irons smooth and free from rust.

It is wise to remember, when the berry season is on, that fruit picked after a rain will not jell and loses much of its flavor.

Fruit for jelly making should not be too ripe. The pectin which thickens the jelly is found in larger quantity in unripe fruit. Pectin is the thickening agent which makes jelly jell.

Some fruits have more pectin than others. Apple is always a good fruit to add to those fruits lacking in pectin. Strawberries do not make good jelly alone, but added to apple juice or a commercial pectin, are most desirable as a jelly.

Keep a cork on the spindle in your desk. It may save a scratch or an eye.

Any green vegetable while cooking is of better color if kept uncovered.

The uncooked stems of fresh mushrooms cut fine and served with almonds on lettuce with a good dressing make a fine salad.

Save meat and gather the delicious mushrooms now until frost in the fall; they will be found in fields, woods and pastures.

Post Grows Beets

Tall corn is not the only thing that grows in Iowa. The Corwith (Iowa) post of the American Legion grows beets. A final report on last season's activities showed that the post earned nearly five hundred dollars from its beet field. The post rented 18.61 acres of land and put the tract into beets, harvesting a crop which brought $1,189.96. Virtually all the labor was hired but after deducting wages, cost of seed, fertilizer and land rental, the post had a profit of $476.69.

Nothing New in Idea That Men Are "Funny"

"Men are funny." That's not such an unusual statement as to be startling. The startling part about the observation is that a man made it—a man who, in his daily task of giving shaves and haircuts, has plenty of opportunity to know whereof he speaks.

"In the old days before women invaded my shop," explained the barber, "men would come in and sometimes wait as much as two hours for their turn in the chair. Now, because I have so much feminine trade, some of my work is by appointment.

"If a man comes in on chance and has to wait for some one who comes in after him, but who has an appointment, he's so disgruntled he's likely not to come back. And probably he's waited only a half hour. It isn't the wait—it's the fact that some one comes in after him with the privilege of going ahead of him. Yes, men are funny."—Philadelphia Record.

Russia's "Sunday College"

Russia's first "Sunday university" for peasants has just opened in the town of Gorky, in White Russia, writes the Moscow correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. The Sunday university is an established institution in the Russian cities and might be compared with university extension courses in America. Its purpose is to give broader education to wage earners who are unable to carry on their studies on week days. The peasant university will offer a two-year course of instruction and will specialise in agricultural subjects.

What they think about it

Last Saturday evening during the band cncert several boys were shooting B. B's. from sling shots around the streets and a wind shield was broken in an out-of-town car, while the people were visitors, they were not strangers in St. Joe and knew the boy who broke the wind shield. Such things give a bad impression of the town, and tends to keep visitors away instead of bringing them to the town to enjoy the concerts. A sling shot is at best a dangerous thing in the hands of a boy and should certainly never be allowed on a crowded street.

OVER HALF MILLION PAID IN TAXES

The collections during the spring taxpaying period were $565,958.33, County Treasurer Ward Jackman reports.

This is approximately the same as a year ago and indicates that the total for the year will be close to that of 1926, $1,020,000, which set a new record.

The New York Central Railroad Co. was, as usual, the largest single taxpayer, sending $56,998.05. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Co. was next with $32,925.10. The Auburn Automobile Co. with $12,117.67.

The Wabash Railway Co. remitted $10,212.82, the Pennsylvania Railway Co. $5,656.04, the Indiana Service Corporation, $2,464.50, the Indiana Bell Telephone Co. $1,185.88, and the Auburn Rubber Co. $4,194.41.

The Farmers and Merchants State Bank at Spencerville paid $497.64 and the St. Joe Valley State Bank paid $303.75.

"The Flames of Destruction"

A VERY TIMELY ARTICLE ON FIRE PREVENTION THAT EVERY CITIZEN OUGHT TO READ AND PROFIT BY. IT IS WRITTEN BY PETER SLETTERDAHL IN THE INDIANA FIRE PREVENTION JOURNAL.

Every time your watch "ticks sixty," the flames of destruction drop a thousand dollars worth of American property in the ash can of the Fire Czar. Every time the clock on the mantel strikes the hour, two people are killed and seven injured by fires in the United States. Every time you sit down to your evening meal, nine hundred homes and five schoolhouses have been practically or entirely wrecked by the "fiery fiend" on a rampage within the boundaries of the United States. Every Saturday night we enter in our national ledgers losses by fire that total eleven million dollars.

Enough property is destroyed every day in the year throughout the United States to feed and clothe a city of 50,000 population for ten days. Our monthly fire losses are equivalent to a sum of money which would buy the buildings and provide an endowment fund sufficient to pay the operating expenses of a large college. The annual American losses by fire represent wealth sufficient to finance all the public schools in this country for a period of six months.

Fire engineers and insurance underwriters contend that eighty percent of the destructive fires are preventable. They point to six national needs in the curbing of the flames of destruction.

(1) An extensive program of education emphasizing the folly of carelesness and ignorance in all matters pertaining to fire.

(2) Building codes that will compel the construction of better houses.

(3) Stricter laws governing the storage of inflammable compounds, rubbish deposits, the congregation of people in theatres, department stores and school houses.

(4) A general realization of the fact that the fire insurance companies do not pay fire losses, but merely act as agents to collect insurance assessments whereby the burden is spread more widely over the entire community;

(5) The elimination of the disposition to tolerate waste and the tendency to "trust to luck" and to "take a chance;"

(6) Strong liability laws which compel the builder, owner or tenant to establish beyond a possibility of a doubt that he was in no way responsible for the fire, either by carelessness, disregard of regulations or otherwise.

"The Terrible Ten" causes of fire are: defective chimneys and flues; matches—smoking; petroleum and its products; sparks of all kinds; stoves; electrical wiring and appliances; lightning; spontaneous combustion; ashes rubbish.

Defective and improperly installed chimneys and flues reap a "red harvest" annually in the United States amounting to over twenty million dollars. Eight hundred miles of concrete roads could be built with the wealth which fires originating with chimneys and flues destroy every twelve months.

The government of New Amsterdam, now New York, in 1618, took an action against the wooden chimney then quite common. It seems that the authorities of the Dutch colony realized the danger of the poorly constructed chimney. Eleven years later a tax of one guilder (about forty cents) was levied upon every chimney in the community and the money used to buy fire-fighting equipment such as ladders, hooks and leather buckets.

A well-built chimney occasionally inspected should never cause a fire. A defective chimney is a constant fire hazard and you never know when the hungry flames "slip through cracks" in its sides. The toleration of a seemingly innocent aperture in the walls of a chimney may result in the burning of your home and the death of near and dear ones. Remember that 15,000 people are killed in fires of the United States every year and many of them die by flames in the home.

"The match has a head but no sense," therefore, it costs much trouble. The match and its twin, smoking, have started many a conflagration. We often throw a glowing match or burning cigarette without thinking of the possibilities of fire. Millions of dollars worth of property have been destroyed by such carelessness. Throwing a "stub" or "butt" from an automobile as we drive along the road may ignite dry grass and carry flames to a nearby house or barn. This has happened many times. Somebody threw a cigarette from a window of a building. It lodged in a woman's hat and set a fire that burned her around the face and head. This just goes to show how easy it is to start a fire with a carelessly thrown cigarette.

Children and matches make a bad combination. As Fireman Bill says, "A match and a tiger ain't no playthings fer kids." Parents should exercise every precaution to keep matches from their youngsters. You can never tell where or how they will use them. Sometime ago several children playing in the basement of their home built a fire in the laundry tub. The flames ignited a wooded partition and shortly the fires spread and burned down the house. Matches should be placed in a metal container placed where children can not reach them. The older children should be taught the dangers of playing with matches and instructed to take away all matches from younger brothers and sisters when they find them in their possession.

Highly inflammable substances are a prolific source of fires. We use them without, seemingly, realizing that their kindling temperatures are very low. Gasoline explosions are nearly always due to carelessness and its running mate, ignorance. Not long ago a newspaper reported the destruction of a house in, what seemed to be, an impossible manner. A housewife, according to the news item, cleaned a garment with gasoline and hung it on a doorknob outside of the house to dry. The wind whipped the silk dress sufficiently to generate static electricity and ignite the gasoline particles in it. The burning dress set the home on fire. Filling the automobile tank with the motor going is obviously dangerous. Thousands of fires have been started because "I didn't know there was gasoline in the can."

The housewife should never use gasoline, naptha or benzine as a cleaning agent. It isn't safe to do so in the home. Seven hundred women lost their lives in one year because they did "dry cleaning" with gasoline or other inflammables in the home. The inflammable liquids usually employed for cleaning purposes evaporate rapidly and from highly explosive vapors. A quart of gasoline has the explosive power of twenty-one pounds of dynamite.

When sparks fly there is danger in the air. Sparks from an locomotive started a forest fire in Minnesota that destroyed thousands of acres in timber and devastated a large area. Many towns in the region were burned to the ground. A countless number of people lost their homes. This fire cost the United States government millions of dollars (for it was operating the railroads at the time) and brought suffering and death to a large number of men, women and children.

Tourists, hunters, trappers, fishers often build camp-fires and, without covering them with dirt, abandon them. A chance wind comes along and blows the burning embers hither and thither. Thus from what may appear to be a harmless pile of ashes comes a hurricane of flames.

The burning of accumulated soot in the chimney has been the beginning of many conflagrations. Little carriers of fire can easily find something to ignite. Sparks from machinery alone caused an estimated loss by fire of eight million dollars in one year over the United States.

Stoves, furnaces, boilers, with their pipes, are responsible for enormous losses by fire. Improper installations are frequently to blame. Often it is a defective heating devise. Overheated stoves cause numerous fires. The leaky smoke-pipe is an ever present menace.

Most American cities of the first and second class have codes governing the installation of heating unites. Such regulations prevent poor installations of furnaces and boilers. If they prevailed generally, many fires would be averted. As it is, heating devices are being used that may start a fire when least expected. Between the top of the furnace or boiler and the beams there should be space enough to absolutely insure safety. In addition, the beams and floor above the furnace or boiler ought to be protected by asbestos and sheet metal. All "hot" pipes to be free from danger need asbestos "coats." Smoke-pipes that are not securely wired may fall down making it comparatively easy for a fire to start. Never pass them through an attic, a closet or a concealed space. "Hidden" smoke-pipes can "work in secret for the destruction of your home."

Electrical wiring has had a multitude of sins placed at its door. We like to attribute to "crosed wires" those fires that we can not explain in any other way. However, electrical wiring can justly be blamed for innumerable fires. As long as we permit "dabblers" to operate as electrical engineers we are going to have homes and other buildings destroyed by fires which originate with wiring. If all electrical installations were made according to the National Electrical code fostered by the United States Bureau of Standards, there would be practically no fires from electrical wiring.

Elictrical appliances are only as safe as the people who use them. The electric iron alone, in carless hands, causes thirty-five fires daily. Housewives will connect the iron and while they are waiting for it to become hot enough to use turn their attention to something else and forget it until they smell smoke or see flames. The electric curling iron has come into general use and frequently through the carelessness of users they start serious fires. Only a short time ago, a governor's mansion burned down because somebody "forgot" a connected curling iron. Electrical appliances are very convenient and with a little "hoss sense" quite safe.

Lightening is a seasonal "firebug." Every year it destroys eleven million dollars in property over the United States. Perhaps the majority of the forest fires are caused by lightning. The National Forest Service with its extensive organization constantly patrols and otherwise protects 156,000,000 acres of trees. Twenty-six states have laws for the protection of state forests. Eighty per cent of the forest fires are brought under control before they burn beyond a ten-acre. In the National forests there are approximately 6,000 fires a year.

Lightning starts fifty-five per cent of the fires on the farm. A fire in the rural sections is always a serious matter in that the facilities for fighting fires are very limited there. The total representing the losses by fire in rural America is nearly equal to the selling price of a year's crop of potatoes. The incendiary of the skies can be overcome more easily than is generally realized. The lightning rod is the tamer of Thor's hammer. It's achievements under the eye of scientific investigation should convince the most skeptical person. Today the lightning rod holds the same place on the farm as the sprinkler system does in the city. Insurance companies recognize the safety of properly rodded buildings.

Spontaneous combustion isn't a myth. A fire that starts by itself we designate as one due to spontaneous combustion. Stacked "green" hay sometimes bursts into flame without any visible cause. The fire was "generated" from within the stack. Any chemical change causes heat. Hay with a certain amount of moisture in it "heats" if air is not moving freely through it. When the chemical changes taking place within the stack produce enough heat to reach the kindling temperature of hay, then there are smoke and flames. Wet paper, cotton waste, sawdust, oily rage, coal in big piles and other things often burst into flames mysteriously. Spontaneous conbustion usually explains the "phenomonon."

Dustless mops may be handy articles, but the house-wife should know that they are not "fireless." The oil in the dustless mops adds the "touch" that may start a fire. Oily rags should never be carelessly thrown here and there. You never can tell when they will take a notion to have a "hot time." It is well to play safe and either burn them in the stove or put them in a metal container.

Ashes, rubbish and litter sing a doleful dirge on the stage of the Fire Czar. This unholy trio has conspired against many a fine building. Ashes, on being removed from a furnace or other heating device, should be placed in metal cans, never wooden boxes or barrels. Rubbish accumulations in the attic and elsewhere in a house are sinister hazards. "The most expensive stock in a place of business is litter," observed a prominent fire marshal recently. Waste paper, packing straw, cartons and boxes, trimmings invite fire as they are usually found in stores and factories. A playful mouse sometimes finds a match in rubish and nibbles it, with no malicious intent, and starts a fire.

When a fire "jumps" or "creeps" from one building to another the second building is said to have been the victim of exposure. In round numbers, $70,000,000 worth of property is destroyed by communicated fires each year in the United States. This is a staggering loss of wealth. Through a systematic condemnation of delapidated buildings by the authorities, the aplication of the little judgment in the location of new structures and the use of more fire-resistive materials in construction of homes, stores and factories losses by exposure can be materially reduced.

Sparks on roofs start fires in the United States that destroyed $15,000,000 in property annually. Wooden shingles are largely responsible for this heavy loss. Unpainted wooden shingles when exposed to the weather rot before they are very old. It isn't long until they become tinder-like and very burnable. Any chance spark might then set the house on fire. On the market there are now roofing materials far superior to the ordinary woden shingles. Not only do they resist fires but they add to the attractiveness of a building. Through the gradual elimination of the wooden shingle in new constructions and replacements, there will come a lowering of the losses by communication fires.

"An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure" is trite but nevertheless, true. As one fire chief put it—"We should fight fires before they start." Hudson Maxin said in speaking of the annual fire losses:

"It would take a thousand tons of gold coin to pay the bill. It would take more than fifteen thousand tons of silver coin to pay our annual loss by fire. It would take a train of cars more than seven miles in length to carry the silver coin necessary to pay for the procoin necessary to pay for the property that fire burns every year in the United States."

THE POWER OF EXAMPLE

Margaret Conn Rhoads

I inquired of a certain mother who had three wonderful children what problems she had found most difficult in training them so well.

She answered without a moment's hesitation: 'My greatest problem in raising my children was myself."

Then she went on to explain.

"I was fortunate enough a few months prior to my marriage to hear a broken-hearted mother who was returning from a criminal court-room say, 'I see it now. I was a model housekeeper but a poor mother. I kept my mahogany dusted but had little time left for Jim and Edward.'

"That night when I was talking to my husband-to-be I told him that all my plans for furnishing our house were changed. I had decided I would have the simplest kind of furnishings and the most efficient kind of household helps. 'I am going to specialize on being a good mother, provided I am fortunate enough to have children,' I told him, 'and I want to be given the chance.'

"I had the children—three of them—and I determined they should be physically well, mentally keen, and morally clean. How did I bring it about? Not by giving most thought to rules for their conduct but by specializing on my own.

"Can you conceive of children in the home never hearing cross words, never getting sharp commands that antagonize by their very unkindness, never being overwrought because the mother is unstrung and never hearing jangling between Father and Mother?

"We all agree that children are mimics. If you use sharp tones be assured that you will hear their echo. If you are overworked and your own temper is on edge expect the children to react in like manner.

"Too many parents spend precious time making rules for their children's conduct when they should study their own. I found filling up my children's leisure with interesting work or play left them no time to idle, fret or get into mischief. I found if I kept myself physically fit so that I could think clearly and advise gently I avoided scoldings and family bickerings. Both my husband and I found that specializing on being good parents made us bigger and finer and gave our children an example to follow which helped much to make their conduct what we desired.

"You can't teach ease of manner when the household in which your children live is continually upset; you can't keep children well if you allow food to be served continually that hurts them; you can't make children morally clean if you condone the white lie, are lax in your own morals and do not fight for clean living and right thinking; and you can't lay down a set of rules for your children to follow and expect them to live by them unless you show that you are living by them yourself.

"My advice to all young parents is: simplify your household duties in order to give time to yourself and your children; set a rule of conduct for yourself, rather than for your children; provide health-giving foods, insist on enough sleep, show an interest in each child's inclinations; fill the children's time with enjoyable occupations and thus give them a chance to learn good habits which are, fortunately, just as hard to break as bad habits."

TEACHER ON TRIAL IN CIRCUIT COURT

Youth Says Wm. Lake of Spencerville, Jerked Him Out of Seat and Kicked Him

An altercation between Richard Shook, 13, and his teacher, William N. Lake, was described to a jury in the DeKalb circuit court Monday in the trial of the charge made against the teacher for assault and battery by the boy's father, Dr. Benjamin O. Shook.

The trouble took place in the Spencerville schools Friday, April 1. Richard was a pupil in the eighth grade and later he graduated. The teacher is the son of William O. Lake, former trustee of Spencer township. Capt. W. D. Stump was retained by Dr. Shook to assist Prosecuting Attorney H. C. Springer in the trial, while Edgar W. Atkinson appeared on the side of the defense.

The jury is composed of Forrest Dermott, George E. Blaker, Burl Moughler, Carl K. Bercaw, L. A. Staley, J. L. Harding, J. W. DeWitt, Floyd Rynearson, Henry Smith, Chas O. Stoops, Roy Whittington andEdward Riccius.

Richard testified that the eighth grade was preparing for examinations and the members of the class were permitted by the teacher to help each other. He had gone to sit with Richard Andrews to study grammar and they were asking questions of each other. Catherine Kimes, who sat nearby whispered to ask Richard Shook the difference between the terms pharse and clause. He said he answered the question.

Then, according to the boy, the teacher walked across the room and asked him what he was doing. He told Mr. Lake that he had whispered to Catherine. Then, he said, the teacher seized him by the shoulders and jerked him out of his seat. He proceeded to kick him two or three times and then Richard said he dodged into his seat. As he did so, he said Mr. Lake kicked at him, but missed. Richard said he asked his teacher if he thought he was within his lawful rights in punishing him in that manner. Mr. Lake answered that when Richard was in school he was under his jurisdiction. Then he pushed him from his seat onto the floor. The teacher, said Richard, got onto his chest with his knee and seized him by the shoulders. He then pulled him up and shook him and in doing so he tore the boy's shirt, acording to Richard. Mr. Lake put the boy in his seat and then ordered him to go to the front of the room and apologize.

Richard said he went to the front and started to say that the only apology he had to make was that he was sorry he had made a disturbance. Then, he testified, Mr. Lake slapped him on the cheeks several times with the palm of his hands. Mr. Lake then ordered him to go on and apologize and he again started to when he said Mr. Lake again slapped him and with such violence that he moved his head. Mr. Lake again ordered Richard to proceed with an apology. Richard said he attempted to obey when Mr. Lake repeated his slapping. Mr. Lake then permited him to go ahead with an apology. Mr. Lake accepted the apology and ordered Richard to take his seat. Richard declared that he did not strike beck at the teacher, nor kick, nor offer resistance of any kind. He said the teacher was angry and his face was red. Richard said the "trouncing" he received made his head ache. His eyes and cheeks were swollen and his mother put cold applications on his face after he went home. He couldn't return to school that afternoon, he said, but went back on Monday morning.

Boy is Cross-Examined

On cross-examination, Richard said that he went to school to Mr. Lake for two years and a half and that Mr. Lake punished him four days before the controversy in question. He also admitted he had been punished by the principal, A. J. Smith. He admitted he had not asked permission of the teacher to sit with the other boy, but he said Mr. Lake had told the pupils the week before that they could do so. He denied that he thought his judgment should enter into what the pupils should do. He denied also that he defied the teacher, but declared he was trying to be obedient and that he did not give Mr. Lake cause to renew punishing him when he started to apologize. He described the teacher as angry and said he "let his anger convince his conscience."

Richard admitted telling his aunt, Mrs. Wm. G. Erick, that he didn't want his father to prosecute the teacher, but later he decided that Mr. Lake "should get what was coming to him."

The state here placed in evidence Richard's grade card showing his grades and deportment during the year and his promotion to the ninth grade.

Ray Farver of Spencerville, was next called to the stand by the state He has a child who was a pupil in Mr. Lake's room and he was visiting the school when the trouble in question took place. He corroborated Richard in most of the details. At one point he said Mr. Lake remarked to Richard, "you have it in for me" and that Richard replied, "Just the same as you have it in for me." According to Mr. Farver, Mr. Lake put one fist at Richard's chest and shook the other at him with the remark that he would "control him."

Mr. Farver said that Mr. Lake seemed to have no control over his temper at the time. He admitted on interrogation by Mr. Atkinson that he did not interfere with the punishment given the boy by the teacher and he said nothing to the teacher about it. He heard that Mr. Lake had kicked the Wasson boy, but he also heard that Mr. Lake was "too easy" with his pupils.

The trial will require at least two days' time.

Richard Andrews testified on half of the state, corroborating the evidence given by Richard and Mr. Farver. On cross-examination he admitted Mr. Lake had a reputation of being an "easy-going" teacher.

Will Spitler, whose seat was between those of Richard Shook and Richard Andrews, gave similar testimony.

TUESDAY'S PROCEEDINGS

The punishment that Wm. N. Lake, teacher in the Spencerville schools, meted out to Richard Shook, 13, one of his pupils, on April 1, was not as severe as the boy and other witnesses had testified, the defendant declared Tuesday in the DeKalb circuit court when he was telling his side of he affair to a jury.

Mr. Lake also tried to show by his testimony in his trial for assault and battery that Richard had been defiant in his attitude towards him; and that when he was punishing him on the occasion in question the boy, who is large of his age, made a move as if to strike him.

The teacher, interrogated by his attorney, Edgar W. Atkinson, said he had found it necessary to scold the boy at previous times and had slaped him once. On April 1 the eighth grade pupils were preparing for examinations. Victor McCrory and James Vallieu were sitting together in a seat and the Shook boy had gone to sit with Richard Andrews. The boys told the jury their teacher had given them permission to do this, but he denied it. He said he noticed Richard Shook whispering to Kathryn Kimes, who was across the aisle. He walked to where the boy was sitting and asked him what he was doing. Richard's answers were not considered sufficient by Mr. Lake and he said he pulled him out of his seat; and that then he gave him a push and shoved him with the side of his foot towards the boy's own seat.

Mr. Lake insisted he did not kick Richard several times with the toe of his shoe, nor did he miss him once and his foot shot into the air several feet, as the state's witnesses testified. He admitted that as the boy was then siting on the floor beside his seat he shook him and pulled him onto the seat. Richard remarked to him, he said, that he had no right to punish him in this way and that he had punished him unnecessarily. Mr. Lake ordered the boy to go to the front of the room to make a "sincere apology" to the school. Richard, said Mr. Lake, looked at him in a defiant way and at first refused to apologize. The teacher admitted slapping him, but said he struck him only with his fingers and that the force moved the boy's head only a little. Mr. Lake told the jury he was not sure whether he was an-

Dependable Buildings for the Farm

TWO things you'll want to be sure about in doing any farm building—to have good, practical plans, and to use lumber and material that promise the longest and most satisfactory service. A barn, for instance, ought to last many years as a sound investment. We have many farm building plans; and, too, our lumber and materials pledge you the safest building investment at the lowest possible cost. If you'll come in the first time you're in town we'd like to show you these plans and tell you just how inexpensively you can build well.

LIFE HISTORY OF MRS. KATE A. LEIGHTY

Kate A. Metzger Leighty was born in Piqua County, Ohio, January 18, 1840 and died at the Lutheran Hospital, Fort Wayne, June 25, 1927. Aged 87 years, 5 months and 7 days.

She was united in marriage to Jacob D. Leighty at Cuba, Allen County, Indiana, March 16, 1865 by the Rev. B. F. Hills.

To this union were born two children, one son and one daughter. Jennie May, who only lived two and a half months, dying October 4, 1868, and John R., who was born about two years later and still survives his mother. After the marriage Mr. and Mrs. Leighty moved to Spencerville and run a general store with his father. The business was under the name of "John Leighty and Son."

This store was traded later for a farm west of Spencerville, then owned by old Peter Bishop, M. T. Bishop's father.

Later in 1876 John and Jacob Leighty bought a farm on which now the town of St. Joe stands. The farm house in which they lived was a short distance west of the M. P. Church.

This farm was laid out in lots and streets for the B. and O. railroad had just been built. The elevator was built at the instigation of Jacob Leighty, Mr. Curie and Dills and others financing it. A store was built west of Wash Woodcox, also a dwelling house in which Jacob Leighty lived for some time.

The present Leighty home was not built until 1881 and about this time a new store was built on the corner near the Lutheran Church and was operated by Jacob Leighty and M. T. Bishop as partners. Jacob Leighty died in 1912.

The first church of St. Joe was built as a Lutheran Church. Both John and Jacob Leighty with others were leading spirits in its erection. About this time Kate Leighty identified herself with the church and she has ever been a supporter and faithful member until her death.

Aunt Kate, as she was called, was a pioneer of St. Joe and has been an active agent in St. Joe's progress from its earliest days until now.

She was one of the early active members of the W. C. T. U. also helped to push the Chautauqua Literary Reading Circle, in its day.

She was an active backer of the bank, a director for years and President when she died. She has carried on her part well and was an aggressive spirit in all she undertook to do. Her work is done and she leaves it to others to carry on. She has played her part well.

She longed in her recent sickness to be hastening on to the other side. She was ready and expressed her self that it was all well with her soul and she was anxious for the Lord to take her home.

She leaves to mourn her departure one son, John R., of Washington D. C., two sisters, Mrs. E. S. Philley of Detroit and Mrs. Mary Majors, of Churubusco, Ind., one grand child, and a host of friends who will miss her.

The funeral service was conducted from the home Tuesday afternoon, Rev. A. K. Mumma, officiating, assisted by Rev. J. N. Scholes. E. R. Kinsey had charge. Burial was made in Riverside cemetery

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our appreciation to our many friends in St. Joe, for their kindness shown our mother in her recent illness and for the beautiful flowers which express the esteem in which she was held.

BAND GOES TO WATERLOO NO CONCERT SATURDAY

The St. Joe band, under the leadership of C. A. Woodcox, has been engaged to furnish the music for the Home Coming celebration in Waterloo June 29 to July 4th. The band is made up of some excellent musicians and the people of Waterloo and the visitors here during that time, will enjoy some real music.—Press.

Due to this engagement there will be no Saturday evening concert.

AUTO ACCIDENTS OF PAST WEEK PLENTIFUL

Auto accidents seem to be occurring every day and so far no fatilities are reported from the near-by accidents. A car went over the grade at the creek east of town last week, no one injured. On the Lee Hollopeter grade south of Spencerville, the grade fence was torn down for a couple of rods, car went over embankment but no fatilities. Wednesday evening at the Chas. Hahn home near Spencerville Ye Editor and Rev. Roy S. Brown, had a collision, but no injuries other than cars badly jammed up.

SOME WELL KNOWN MISTAKES

When a doctor makes a mistake, he buries it.

When the garage man makes a mistake, he adds it on your bill.

When a carpenter makes a mistake, it's just what he expected.

When a lawyer makes a mistake, it was just what he wanted, because he has a chance to try the case all over again.

Whe a judge makes a mistake, it becomes a law of the land.

When a preacher makes a mistake, nobody knows the difference.

But when an editor makes a mistake,—Goodnight!—Contributed.

MUST BE INVITED

A merchant out in the "sticks" in another state told an editor "I ain't got no use for advertising. The last time I put an advertisement in the paper I got woke up every time I started to take my nap in the store." Business must be invited. It is a guest, and no guest goes where he doubts his welcome.

M. T. BISHOP, ILL

Saturday morning Mr. Bishop became very critical and the children were called home. Today he remains serious being in a semi-conscious condition. Leakage of the heart is the cause of his condition. Mrs. Chas. Bishop remains for a few days while Mr. Bishop and the children returned to Cleveland Wednesday.

NOTICE, ST. JOE RESIDENTS

Numerous complaints have come to the Town Board, of persons shooting carelessly about town, so in order to safe-guard the public, we ask that this be refrained from. In order to carry fire arms, a person must have a license, and we feel that many of them do not have such permission.

The riding of bicycles on side walks is also prohibited, and we wish persons doing this, to refrain from such acts.

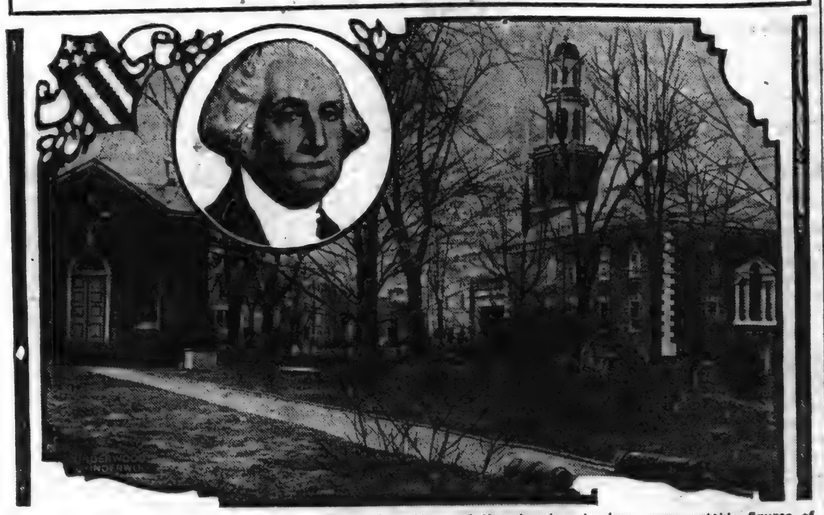
Scene of Washington's Funeral Ceremonies



General view of historic Christ church in Alexandria, Va., and the churchyard where many notable figures of Revolutionary times lie buried. On the left is the rectory which through the years has been occupied by many famous Episcopal clergymen. The church was completed in 1773. Washington and Robert E. Lee were among its worshipers, and Washington's funeral services were held here in 1799. In the churchyard are buried contemporaries and friends of Washington, including several who acted as pallbearers at his funeral. The church has a number of relics of Washington's time.

CITIZENS OF NORTH CAROLINA FIRST TO DEFY KING GEORGE

Proclamation of Freedom Made at Mecklenburg More Than 152 Years Ago.

In spite of doubting Thomas Jefferson and the reluctance of certain less interested Virginians to admit that anything good ever came out of North Carolina, no sufficient reason now exists for questioning the proud boast that the citizens of Mecklenburg county, in the latter state, did fling defiance in the face of Great Britain in the form of a declaration of independence just thirteen months and fifteen days before the Continental congress in Philadelphia saw fit to make the same decisive move. The date was May 20, 1775, the place was Charlotte, N. C., and the immediate provocation of precipitate action was the arrival of the express with the news of the shooting down of Capt. John Parker's Minute men by British regulars under Major Pitcairn on Lexington common.

It was in 1819 that a newspaper reprint of what was said to be the declaration itself—a document containing several of the phrases of his own famous paper—was called to the attention of Thomas Jefferson by John Adams. Writing to Adams from Monticello, Jefferson said he believed it spurious, because up to that moment he had never heard of it, though he lived in the adjoining state of Virginia. He called attention also to the circumstance that the witnesses appealed to were, most of them, dead.

Jefferson's Mind Open.

However, Jefferson was careful to add that he based his opinion on negative evidence which positive evidence was perfectly competent to overthrow. One of the most valiant collectors of this evidence has been Archibald Henderson, who is otherwise known as the American familiar of Bernard Shaw. Another—furiously assailed when he first collected the data—was Dr. George Washington Graham, who has written a whole book on the subject. The controversy was heated and acrimonious.

On the affirmative side it extended to the insinuation that one of the Virginia champions of Jefferson's priority had used his position as minister from this country to the Court of St. James to abstract from the British colonial archives a copy of the Cape Fear Mercury, which was material evidence because it contained the text of the Mecklenburg declaration printed within the month after it was issued. It was known that such a copy had, in fact, been sent to Lord Dartmouth by Josiah Martin, the royal governor of North Carolina at the time. Martin described it as "the late most treasonable publication of a committee in the county of Mecklenburg explicitly renouncing obedience to his majesty's government" and added that it "surpassed all horrid and treasonable publications that the inflammatory spirit of the country has produced." On the negative side there were charges of forgery and mendacity—the manufacture of history out of whole cloth.

Events Leading to Action.

Assuming the evidence as sufficient, the story of what happened becomes a part of a well-connected series of events in the province whose position between two ostentatiously aristocratic neighbors has sometimes, it is said, deprived her of due consideration. In March, 1774, Governor Martin had dissolved an unruly assembly. In August of that year a convention had met under the governor's nose in New Berne and sent delegates to the Continental congress. For the rest of that year the separate counties had been busy with meetings and preparations, and in April, 1775, the assembly which met by the authority of the crown—the last one—was soon converted into a provincial congress, which was the actual government of the people. They "transformed themselves from time to time" into one and then the other, so Governor Martin, who was a soldier, said, and thus, as Doctor Morrison sees it, strained the British constitution to the utmost—or, in other words, the breaking point. At the same time, a certain Col. Richard Henderson and his associates, all North Carolinians, had formed a company, with Daniel Boone for field leader, and set up a government in a tract of land which they had bought from the Cherokees without royal warrant. That land, which they named Transylvania and which included a great part of Tennessee and Kentucky, they had practically proclaimed to be independent not only of Great Britain but of North Carolina, and Virginia as well. They asked, indeed, to have it acknowledged by congress as the fourteenth province of the Confederation.

Denounced King George.

Obviously, the North Carolinians were not in submissive mood when the news of the first blood shed in the North arrived. What happened at Anson county courthouse when the messenger rode into that place is recorded in a certain family Bible to which Doctor Henderson has had access. The writer is a young man named Morgan Brown, an eyewitness. He says that the messenger found the county court in session and the magistrates, some of whom were tories, on the bench. The people forced the court to adjourn without the form of doing it in the king's name. Then they rushed out—bearing the sheriff with them, leaving the tory magistrates still sitting on the bench. Afterward:

"The people consented for them to meet and close some unfinished business upon condition that it should not be called in the king's name or that the words 'God save the king' should be added by the crier, 'for,' said they, 'we will have nothing done in the name of a king who has his troops slaughter our citizens.' And thus ended the royal authority. For the court, after closing their record, never sat again."

Gathering of the Citizens.

At Charlotte, some fifty miles away, the messenger appears to have found an assembly of the leading citizens of Mecklenburg summoned from the various "companies" throughout the county by the colonel commandant, Thomas Polk. According to the received chronology, the messenger arrived May 19 and threw the gathering into a fever. The secretary, John McKnitt Alexander, says they "sat in the courthouse all night, neither sleepy nor hungry nor fatigued," and in the morning passed a set of resolutions prepared by Ephraim Brevard.

In the resolutions occurred the following declarations:

"Resolved * * * That we dissolve us with the mother country and absolve ourselves from allegiance to the British crown; and

"Resolved, That we do hereby declare ourselves a free and independent people; that we are and of right ought to be a sovereign and self-governing people under the power of God and the general congress."

It should be noted that the text is taken from Judge Francois X. Martin's "History of North Carolina," which text is supposed to be the same that was printed in the lost Cape Fear Mercury, for even the more ardent North Carolinians do not deny that the original document was destroyed in 1800 when Alexander's house was burned.

Sought Only Their Rights.

Returning again to the story: These resolutions were read to the people outside the courthouse by Colonel Polk and received with "shouts and hussas." In accordance with a provision in the resolutions themselves, they were transmitted to the Continental congress, where the persons approached said that the "subject of the resolutions was premature to be laid before the congress."

At that time the cooler heads still hoped to compose matters with the mother country without an actual breach. The strongest statements of the Colonists' determination not to submit to coercion or to what they regarded as the abridgment of their liberties as subjects of the British crown were coupled with expressions of loyalty to the crown itself. Indeed, among Americans who were far from being tories there were many who were proud of their own connection with Britain and reluctant to sever it. George Washington himself about that period, as Archibald Henderson reminds us, "abhorred independence"—which meant that he desired to be a good Virginian and still remain a good Englishman.

Independence Not Sought.

As a matter of fact, even Jefferson at this date was not an open advocate of independence, nor did Patrick Henry in his "ringing resolutions" (as Jefferson called them), adopted in Virginia after the Lexington bloodshed, take so rash a stand.

The sum of the matter is that the declaration of independence which Mecklenburg, N. C., issued one year ahead of time and the revolution which Virginia started a century ahead of time had each to wait till the country at large was ready for the real thing. They were dramatic gestures, not things accomplished. Nevertheless, the Virginia affair cost many lives of patriots and some of those who were not so counted, and tons of ink have been spilled over the North Carolina outbreak.—New York Times Magazine.

APPEAL TO HEAVEN IN THE DARK HOUR

Washington's Fervent Prayer at Valley Forge.

This is said to be word for word the prayer that Washington sent up to the Great White Throne of God in that dark hour of the republic when his barefoot army shivered in the snows of Valley Forge:

"Almighty God, we make our earnest prayer that Thou wilt keep the United States in Thy holy protection; that Thou wilt incline the hearts of the citizens to cultivate a spirit of subordination and obedience to government; and entertain a brotherly affection and love for each other and for their fellow citizens of the United States at large; and finally, that Thou wilt most graciously be pleased to dispose us all to do justice, to love mercy, and to demean ourselves with that charity, humility and pacific temper of mind which were the characteristics of the Divine Author of our blessed religion, and without a humble imitation of whose example in these things we can never hope to be a happy nation. Grant our supplication, we beseech Thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

So the prayer ran—so wonderful then and still more wonderful now when there are those in the land who seek not only to sow the seeds of hatred and dissension but who also in their blindness shake their fists in the face of God.—Los Angeles Times.

FAVOR SMART STYLED GINGHAMS; LACE IN THE MILLINERY PICTURE

AND now it is cotton fabric from sheer to sturdy weaves which mark the pathway to chic. If you would be smartly attired don a gingham or a printed sateen or a linen or a pique frock, for the next bridge party or country club day-time event. If it is an evening affair, wear a flowered or pastel organdy.

To be sure, there's nothing new in the idea of organdy for summer wear, however, it is tremendously important this season and designers are enthusiastically endorsing it for bridesmaids' costumes, as well as for dancing and dining. When it comes to the adaptation of gingham and such for wear at sports and afternoon events, there's the thrill of real novelty in that.

A Smart Styled Gingham.

This new enthusiasm of the mode goes so far as to create tailored frocks of gingham for smart street wear. The idea is unique and opens up a vast field of interpretation for wash goods in a "different" way. The model in the picture is of basket-weave gingham, combining threads of beige and brown.

Many gingham sports frocks favor two-piece stylings, which include belted jumpers posed over plaited skirts. Sometimes a jacket of plain wash weave accompanies the blouse-and-skirt ensemble.

Gay-print cottons are very popular, too. Many of them, especially printed sateens, can scarcely be distinguished from silk. Small patterns vie with showy modernistic effects. The tiny colorful florals remind one of the handsome "cravat" silks which are in vogue.

Recently some attention has been given to white sateen printed in handsome large flowers or conventional designs. The very essence of style is expressed in a two-piece dress of sateen showing a large leaf design printed in black on a white background. Such a frock should be a temptation to the woman who makes her own clothes, to add another dress to her summer wardrobe. With a white or scarlet kid belt and black-and-white footwear, it spells chic in capital letters. The hat should be either a large black milan or one of the extremely new big-of-brim white felt shapes, which is banded with black velvet ribbon.

With the arrival of summer comes the conviction that lace is a very smart millinery item. Now that lace or lace-trimmed hats have entered the picture, creative genius is being led into new fields of adventure, with a result that recent collections are including exquisite lace models. Among latest Paris arrivals black lace-covered wide-brimmed shapes compete with cunningly designed lace toques. An Agnes model uses black Spanish lace for a petite skull-cap, posing a pink rose at one side, which is partly veiled by the lace. Contrasting this is a graceful shade-hat whose drooping brim and low round crown are entirely of lace. A maize-colored crepe facing with a black velvet ribbon band and bow complete this model.

A pretty fashion is that of stretching lace so smoothly over straw or fabric, at first glance it appears as if the scrolls and florals were stenciled with dye or ink upon their background.

To complement the white-and-black costumes now so modish, milliners are designing large hats of white straw or leghorn, these plastered with black lace. The effectiveness of this mode is aptly illustrated by each of the large hats pictured in this group.

Frills of lace about the face finish many a dainty summer toque or bonnet shape. One sees many cunning hats which are lace-frilled like the two youthful little models in this picture.

Very effective toques of black lace over white satin are being shown in shops which are the first to display the newer things. In these a becoming drop-side trim is attained with a soft bow of the lace.

There are also many beige lace hats, also those in various browns.

THE DAIRY

SILAGE IS MOST ECONOMICAL FEED

Every dairy farmer worthy of the name should have a silo, because dairying is rarely, if ever, profitable in these days without one. However, whenever a farmer contemplates the purchase of a silo, first of all he considers the advantages that are likely to accrue from its use, also any disadvantages. Certainly the only disadvantage is the first cost of the silo, which is not so great either, considering the length of service a good substantial silo will give.

Farmers on every hand are beginning to realize the many good sound reasons for feeding silage. In all my experience, I have not talked to a single farmer who was displeased with his silo, with one exception, and in that instance it was a home-made affair and not large enough, writes H. W. Swope in the Indiana Farmer's Guide. That farmer today has two silos on his farm, is a successful feeder, farmer, and a good business man as well.

Silage is the most economical feed that can be produced for dairy cattle, and corn is without question the best crop to grow for silage. It is the writer's experience that where a farmer has eight to ten cows and sufficient tillable ground to grow corn, a silo will without question be a source of profit to that farmer, regardless of his location. In order to make dairying successful it is necessary to have a silo to furnish feed all the year round. Silage also makes any farm more productive where it is used. One of the reasons I have found a silo to be profitable, aside from the feeding value of silage, is that more silo material can be grown on a given acreage and put into the silo cheaper than it could it it were harvested and fed dry. No other feed can compare with silage in succulence and palatability. The dairy cow that is fed silage will keep up her flow of milk and be more profitable than from any other method of feeding.

Corn Has Surely Proven Most Economical Grain

The results of experiments of the different experiment stations in feeding cattle on pasture indicate that the pasture should be supplemented with grain in maintaining the appetite and in securing satisfactory gains during the last stages of the feeding period. These experiments have shown that it is profitable to feed grain during the first part of the feeding period when cattle are on pasture.

Corn has proven the most economical grain to feed as a supplement while cattle are on good pasture. Since pasture grass is very high in protein, it has not proven so profitable to feed high protein concentrates such as linseed meal or cottonseed meal, although cattle that received linseed meal had a better finish than those that did not receive it in the ration. This is not always true if cottonseed meal is fed instead of linseed meal.

Producers Responsible for Dairy Cleanliness

Inasmuch as the producers of the milk and cream are responsible for the quality of the finished product in a large measure, they are the ones who must be appealed to and made to see the importance of cleanliness in everything connected with the production and handling of milk. Clean barns, clean cows, clean milk utensils, clean milkers, all are very important. Despite the most careful methods in the matter of cleanliness, some bacteria will get into the milk, hence the milk should be cooled and kept cool as soon as possible to check the growth of the bacteria which have gained entrance into the milk or cream. In this connection it is well to remember that bacteria double in number in every half-hour when the milk is kept at a favorable temperature, which is from 70 to 90 degrees Fahrenheit.

Dairy Notes

Dry pastures make mighty little milk. Supplement them with some green corn or sorghum.

* * *

Fix a box where the young calves can have some grain and hay. It is surprising how quickly they can eat it.

* * *

When feed is not plentiful, as is the case in some localities this year, the boarder cow, masquerading as a milk cow, is an even greater liability than usual.

Give the new-born calf a quart of milk three times daily at the start.

* * *

The use of silage in feeding dairy cows through the summer is increasing and will continue to do so as its value in dry pasture seasons is better appreciated.

* * *

In raising the dairy calf leave the calf with the cow for one or two days and then take it away and feed from eight to ten pounds of warm milk per day for about two weeks.

Mary had made brief visits to St. Mark's with her mother, but now she hurried up the steep stone stairs toward the galleries and the capello di oro. A service was in progress before one of the altars.

Mary paused a moment to fee the genial old custodian, whose greeting was as toothless as it was friendly. As she stood peering down into the dim church, she was conscious of some one near her, watching her. She looked up—into Ned Carter's eyes.

She could scarcely believe it, and yet something she read in his eyes made her stretch out her hand. Ned grasped it, and that steadied her. She thought she heard him murmur "Mary." She was not sure. She turned, confusedly, her hand still unaccountably in his, and they went through the doorway that led to the golden horses. It was so narrow here that quite naturally she recovered her hand. As they stepped out into the sunshine, and the cool sea breeze, Mary felt herself able to face Ned.

To her conscious amazement, she found this no easy thing to do. There was a shining something in his eyes, to which she seemed loathe to give a name, or to fully recognize. There was so much confusion in her mind, thoughts half formed flitting across it like birds of the night, that she finally left it to Ned to break the silence. All he seemed able to say was "Mary!"

"Are you here," Mary began desperately, "with my—"

Ned gave a swift look about to assure himself that they were alone.

"Oh, what does it matter who I am with? I'm here because you are here, and I couldn't stay in Clover Hollow without you. I've followed you, Mary, to tell you—"

"Hush!" said Mary warningly, and put her finger gently against his lips, for out of the little doorway had appeared the wondering heads of a German youth of about twenty, and his bride.

Mary moved away, seated herself on the stone parapet beneath the horses and looked out over the piazza. Ned stood beside her, looking down.

"My father—" she began.

"Yes, I came here with C. M. Dabbs, and I know where he is, but I'm not to meet him for half an hour yet. Surely you can listen to me for that length of time. If you don't," he threatened, "I won't tell you where to find him. If you're kind to me, I'll lead you to him."

"Mr. Carter, aren't you a little sudden in your methods?"

"I'm anything you like except 'Mr. Carter.' And if I seem sudden, look at the provocation. At a certain shop your father is waiting, and once he gets within hailing distance I'll be pushed, shoved, ignored or kicked into the background. So, Mary—No you don't, my dear. There's absolutely no use in our roaming around looking at things in shop windows. Down this alley-way there's a flight of stone steps leading to the canal. If you come that way, we could wait in the shade for a gondola."

"To take me to father?"

"Eventually, yes," admitted Ned, "but primarily to listen to me."

"About father? Oh, I should love to hear about him!"

"Would you? Well, I've lots to tell. A wonderful traveling companion. But first you must hear about me."

They had reached one step and while Ned signaled a passing gondola, Mary thought of him and wondered at herself. Why should she go with him? Mother would never approve of this! Nevertheless, she waited for his gondola and listened to him with a smile. It was like walking into a trap, but was she so unwilling to be caught?

She had one wild impulse toward flight as Ned concentrated his attention upon getting the gondola ready for his lady. It would be so easy to slip away now. As she made the first step his hand was on her arm, very gently but compellingly, and she had stepped into the gondola.

They sat side by side for a few moments in silence as the gondola made its way into the Grand canal. Then Ned turned to her and spoke about Venice, its sudden and unexpected charm for him when he had first seen the city. He loved it. This lazy method of locomotion was perfect. Did she not think so? Mary could rhapsodize with him over Venice to his heart's content, and began to think she had been fearful without cause.

They had turned from the Grand canal into a narrower, half-deserted looking waterway, quite evidently leading to the private entrance of several old palaces. Over the wall of one streamed green branches and creepers, the remains of an old garden, once hidden from the public eye. The canal was beautiful, and dark with shade. Here and there long splashes of sunlight stole between thick walls and made bars across the water.

"I knew you'd love it. I've always planned to bring the girl I—some day I meant to bring—Mary, I've kept it for you. Isn't it lovely?"

Before Mary could reply, her hand was crushed in his, his shoulder was against her own and his lips close to her ear were murmuring, so that she alone could hear all that he longed to tell her. It was extremely jerky and incoherent. In fact, there was very little sense in it. It was rather like what every man does with his preconceived idea of how he is going to conduct his love scene. Ned, being very much in love, made a bad botch of it. In fact, the astonished Mary could not distinguish anything except that she was disturbing the even tenor of his life considerably, that she was adorable, and—though everything was implied that should have been implied there was not a single word about marriage or engagement. Most of it was "Oh, Mary!"

They were approaching the old bridge. The bridge, low and dark, seemed to Mary the proper place to arrest the stream of Ned's eloquence. She determined to release her hand. It did not seem easy. She tried it, however, and turned her face so that she might look at him and make him understand. As she turned, the lips so close to her ear brushed her cheek, met her mouth and clung there.

It was the first time—for Mary. Other men had tried to kiss her mouth, just as other men had asked her to marry them, but none had succeeded.

When the gondola shot from under the bridge into the sunlight, the gondolier, who of course must have suspected, if he had not seen, burst out into one of his cries of warning that precede a turning. Ned involuntarily straightened up, came out of his dream and looked guiltily at Mary.

Mary was furious. Her cheeks flamed. She felt her whole body was one burning blush. She hated him. It was as though he had kissed her in the open street. But she hated herself more, for even while she blushed to remember his lips, she had a horrible suspicion that she would like to be kissed again!

CHAPTER XII

How can a man apologize for kissing a lady? It's not done. One either goes on, or leaves off, and if circumstances or places compel one to leave off abruptly, then surely the lady should understand.

Ned, who had kissed several on the way to Mary, was completely at a loss. None of them had taken it just like this; grown red, then silent, and refused to meet his eyes. He would not have cared if they had, but he did care now. He made one or two attempts at speech, but the shoulder shrank from his, the hand refused to be held, and the face remained averted.

The high gods, who love a lover, saw his plight and gave Ned the only words that could help him.

"I'm not sorry. But I am sorry you take it like this."

A voice from far away said: "It was like—like a servant girl out with a—"

"Grocer's boy," finished Ned. "I suppose that's why you feel insulted."

The colored marble he had been sitting beside for the last few moments, returned to life: "Ned Carter! You know it wasn't that. Naturally I resented you—" but the voice stopped abruptly and the blue eyes had a haze of tears.

Ned gathered up the limp hand again, very gently, and kept his eyes fixed on the water of the sluggish canal. "What am I to do? How are you to know that I am mad about you, unless I tell you? And how can you know whether you like kissing me, unless I try it?"

"You're outrageous; I know nothing about you, and to—oh—in a gondola—in broad daylight!"

Ned's laugh echoed across the canal. "Oh, Mary, I adore you. How long will it take you to learn that by heart? I'll say it all over again, tonight, and in the darkest corner of Venice."

"You will not get a chance. You will please land now, and take me to my father."

"If I do, will you think about me?"

"Oh, yes, I'll think about you," and with that Ned had to be content.

"Mary, your father's very fond of me."

"That's the one thing I know in your favor."

"If you ask Claude Dabbs, he will tell you all about me."

"I shall not ask my father."

This being exceedingly satisfactory to Ned, he went on a few steps in silence, glancing down at the adorable hat this loveliest of ladies wore. It was faced with blue that matched her eyes. He wished she would look up.

"How are you to know—if you do not ask?"

She looked up, and down again quickly. "Oh, I shall know."

"If you leave it to your heart," he murmured close to her ear, "I shall be satisfied."

"If my father were not standing there watching us," said Mary in the same conversational tone, "I would slap you, good and hard."

She left him and went forward eagerly to greet Claude. He came as eagerly to meet his girl, and Ned found himself very much out of the picture. The girl, who had been hard to him, was very sweet and daughterly to Claude. It was Claude who kindly held Ned within the charmed circle, and Mary who made him feel out of touch.

All the rest of that lovely afternoon Mary wandered about with the two men who loved her. It was agreed between Mary and Claude Dabbs that if Polly kept to her room that night, Mary should contrive to dine with him. She could, without actually telling a fib, she assured Claude, allow her mother to suppose that she was dining with the Farleys, and Mrs. Farley was a dear and would understand if Mary told her at the last minute that she was dining with friends. She would telephone from her hotel and Claude could come and take her to his, and bring her back.

With this they had to be content. They parted from Mary before they reached the entrance to her hotel.

Polly's headache was better, but she decided not to get up. When Mary came into her room, ready to go to dinner, Polly was sitting up in bed, a tray before her.

"My word, Mary, you look sweet. Turn around and let me see if I'll like you as well when you leave the room as I do when you come in.

"The Farleys ought to appreciate you, Mary. Is young Farley to be there tonight? If his mother knew we were poor it might make a difference, you know."

"I hope it does," Mary answered lightly, apparently engrossed with her image in the glass. "I could do with less of young Farley."

Then what is it, her mother thought, that makes her look just that way? It must be a man!

"Anyone interesting among the new arrivals?"

"I don't know," Mary answered honestly. "I'll look them over when I go down, and report."

She kissed her mother and hurried away.

Polly rested back against her pillows and sighed. How long could she keep Mary? Not very long, if the men of this generation were at all like those of the last. Well, at any rate Claude should not have her. Mary must have her chance and not be dragged back to a village grocery store—the same one from which her mother had fled so many years ago.

Mary explained to Mrs. Farley, having first telephoned Claude, that she was dining with an old friend.

Mrs. Farley, who had no daughters and adored Mary, watched with interest Mary's meeting with a big, dark, middle-aged man who looked rather distinguished.

Mary thought her father looked stunning. It was frightfully romantic, she told him, eloping with one's father in a gondola.

"You wouldn't even look at me if Mother were here in all her glory. Mother is—oh, Father, Mother is a perfect peach!"

"There was a poet, long ago, who put what I feel about Polly in a nutshell," Claude answered. "It was something about: 'If she isn't my peach, I don't care how peachy she is.'"

"Father! Stop! Don't murder, 'If she be not fair for me, What care I how fair she be.'"

Provided Method of Escape From Indians

Built in 1663, the oldest brick house in Virginia stands on the south bank of James river, about midway between Surrey Court House and Scotland Wharf. It is called Smith's Fort, but as a matter of historical accuracy the building erected by Capt. John Smith in 1606 and named by him New Fort stood about a quarter of a mile to the west of this house and now few traces of the old Indian defense are to be seen. The Colonial records show that the house was built by Thomas Warren in 1663 on land bought by him from Thomas Rolfe, son of John Rolfe and Pocahontas, daughter of the famous Indian king Powhatan. There is a tradition connected with one of the closets in this aged house. From one in an upper room a trap door and a stationary ladder led down to a brick walled closet in the basement from which it is said an underground passage led to the original Smith's fort on the banks of a creek nearly a quarter of a mile away. It is supposed that the underground passage, long since fallen in, enabled many an occupant of the house to escape when the Indians had launched an attack.—Baltimore Sun.

Master of Music Had Novel Piano in Mind

Berlioz, the illustrious master whose name dominates French music of the last century, ordered from a piano manufacturer a specially constructed instrument, so fashioned that the strings could be used as a harp.

Berlioz loved to play stringed instruments and in his early days gave lessons on the guitar. In spite of the poverty which he mentions in his memoirs, he had succeeded in buying a piano, but it was not the sort of instrument that he wanted.

"If I were rich," he wrote, "I would have continually about me a big grand piano, two or three Erard harps, some Saxe trumpets and a collection of basses and Stradivarius violins."

The piano which he later invented was in part an answer to this dream. It is at present in the possession of a widely known collector who loaned it to the organizers of the Berlioz exposition of the great musician's centenary.—From L'Ere Nouvelle, Paris, (Translated for the Kansas City Star).

Voice Distinction

The distinction between a soprano and mezzo-soprano is range. In the case of lyric and dramatic voices the difference is in timbre. Grove's dictionary calls attention to the fact that many mezzo-soprani can sing higher notes than many soprani; but there is a middle to every voice, which, as a rule, it is not difficult to find, and about this the tessitura of the music (literally, the texture) and the practice should be woven.

Likes Workee

A Chinese newspaper published this letter from an applicant for work: Sir: I am Wing—I can drive typewriter with good noise and my English is great—My last job left itself from me, for good reason that large man has dead. Lesson for July 3

SAUL CHOSEN KING

LESSON TEXT—I Samuel 10:17-25; 11:12-15.

GOLDEN TEXT—What doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God?

PRIMARY TOPIC—Saul Becomes a King.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Saul, the First King of Israel.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Calls to Life Service.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Opportunities for Leadership.

The period of Judges ended with Samuel's administration. This lesson shows us the transition from the rule by the judges to the monarchy. For a comprehensive view of the transition it will be well to make a survey of chapters eight to eleven.

I. The People Demand a King (8:1-9).

1. Their reasons for this demand.

(1) Samuel was incapacitated by old age; (2) the unfaithfulness of his sons whom he had appointed as his successors. In this Samuel committed a great blunder, for the office of judge was not hereditary. (3) The desire to be like other nations. The surrounding nations had a king as their leader. They wanted a king who would go out and fight their battles (v. 20).

2. Samuel's behavior under this trial (vv. 6-9). He took the matter to the Lord in prayer. Even though Samuel's blunders in part brought on this trouble he did the wise thing in taking it to the Lord in prayer. The Lord comforted him by assuring him that this rejection was not merely his rejection, but the rejection of the kingship of God.

II. Samuel Tells of the Manner of the Kings (vv. 10-18).

He shows them that the king will be very exacting and arbitrary in his dealing with them.

1. He will take their sons and make them to serve in the army and do all kinds of hard work on his farm and in his house. He will make slaves of their daughters also.

2. He will take their lands, even those inherited from their fathers, and give them to his favorite officers and servants. Not content with that he will take the tenth part of the produce that remains and give to them.

III. Samuel's Protest Disregarded by the People (vv. 19-22).

Having made up their minds they deliberately shut their eyes to the truth and rushed madly into the experiment.

IV. The King Providentially Pointed Out (9:1-10:16).

Saul was sent by his father to search for the asses that had wandered away. This was quite natural. While Saul and his father were acting freely in this matter, at the same time God's sovereign purpose was being carried out. Although difficult to understand, God carries forth His sovereign purpose without interfering with man's freedom.

V. The King Chosen at Mizpeh (10:17-27).

The Lord had already pointed out to Samuel who should be king and Saul had been anointed. Let us observe:

1. Why Saul was chosen. If they would have a king the Lord would give them the one best suited to fill the place. He was from Benjamin, a small tribe, which would prevent undue rivalry between Ephraim and Judah, the leading tribes of Israel. He was also chosen because of his personal fitness (v. 23).

2. How Saul was chosen. The method was by lot. Samuel called them together before the Lord, and before the lot was cast he again remonstrated with them against such action. He showed them the base ingratitude of their rejection of such a God and King who had done so much for them, and gave them a chance to forego their rash demand.

3. How the king was received by the people. Saul knew that the Lord had chosen him, but through modesty and fear he shrank from the responsibility. When he was brought forth Samuel presented him to the people, assuring them that Saul was the Lord's choice.

VI. The King Confirmed at Gilgal (ch. 11).

Soon after the election at Mizpeh the Ammonites made a desperate demand upon the men of Jabesh-Gilead. Saul hearing of it hastily summoned the tribes together for war and won a remarkable victory. As he thus proved his ability the people wished to punish the sons of Belial, but Saul forbade them. Samuel took advantage of this auspicious situation and called all the people together at Gilgal where they formally crowned him their king.

The Life

To apprehend the life that is to be we must learn to think more largely and sacredly of the life that is now. We must enlarge the scope and measure of today, must identify today with what we call eternity.—Charles Cuthbert Hall.

Moving Forward

To move forward in life, you do not need to be forward in conduct, but you must keep your face to the front, and see your objective.—The Gideon.

Leap-Year Reckoning Quite Simple Matter

The year 1928 is a leap year, as it is divisible by four without remainder. There has been no change in the calendar for the last two centuries. As the exact length of a year, determined by the earth's revolution around the sun, is a little less than 365¼ days, the old Julian calendar, giving a leap year every four years, was inexact. A new calendar, called the Georgian, was proposed and adopted by most Christian nations in the Sixteenth century or later, to rectify this error. This calendar provides for 97 leap years in each 400 years. The only difference from the Julian calendar is that century years, such as 1600, 1700, 1800, 1900, etc., are not leap years unless they are divisible by 400 without remainder. Thus 1600 and 2000 are leap years, while 1700, 1800 and 1900 are not leap years.

Silent Nightingales

Referring to the effort that has been made in a feeble way as an experiment to import the nightingale to Florida, Frank Chapman, the ornithologist, says that the song of the nightingale will never be heard in this country. The bird may give out a little spray of notes, but its song in its real splendor will never be heard here. Several birds were imported but the person interested in the suggestion has said that he never heard one of them sing. Mr. Chapman urges that we take care of the birds we have rather than spend money on a doubtful project.

Time to Part

Phillips and his wife had always been reputed to be the happiest of married couples, so when Mrs. Jones heard that her friend was suing for divorce she was astonished.

"You say his chief fault is his absent-mindedness?" she asked Mrs. Phillips. "You should try and endure that, dear."

"I did as long as possible," replied the latter. "But when he shook down the player-piano and threw a music roll into the furnace, that was going too far."—Hardware Age.

NEVER Wear GLASSES

This advice has been quite faithfully kept by a number of people who are now unable to get glasses that give proper relief. It is just as logical to wait until life is almost extinct before calling a physician.

What chance has the doctor when your vitality is about all gone? None—neither can you get comfortable glasses if your eyes are so exhausted that the muscles can't respond to artificial aid. We are prepared to make the required examination and fit you with glasses (if needed) that will fit your pocket book and your eyes.

WINONA FOR THE WAY-WEARY VACATIONIST

Natural Advantages and Conveniences Expected to Draw Large Crowd to Resort Where Interesting Summer Program Has Been Planned

The impulse to go somewhere in the summer time is irresistible. Humanity turns away from its routine tasks as warm weather approaches and the question "Where shall we go?" is in the minds of all classes. In these days of automobiles, interurban lines and railroads on every hand the matter of transportation is quickly solved and uncounted thousands will realize their delicious dreams of shaded knolls, sparkling brooks, bubbling springs, abundant flowers and inviting spots where nature brings that consciousness of resting and relaxing.

Winona Lake offers to the vacationist all the requisites for making a satisfactory place to spend the summer, or a few days, as the case may be, possessing as it does, the unsurpassed natural advantages and conveniences for living, recreation of all sorts, concerts, lectures and an unexcelled array of talent for entertainment. These features bring to Winona grounds large crowds during July and August.

Winona stands for clean sports, high ideals, mental quickening and spiritual power. It is a combination of Chatauqua, N. Y., and Northfield, Mass., providing religious surroundings and worshipful attitudes, as well as educational facilities for stimulating thought and broadening the vision. It offers a chance for those desiring to improve their minds along several lines.

This year Winona is spending thousands of dollars in improvements, a new sewage system, disposal plant and other things that will make it more and more the health-giving place that it has been.

Special features on the program this year are of vital interest to musicians and those who appreciate the spoken word. Billy Sunday will speak on July 6, giving one of his characteristic lectures. Alberto Salvi, the world's greatest harpist will appear August 4, and Mme. Schumann-Heink, the beloved singer, will give a recital on August 16. This is her Golden Jubilee tour and her farewell appearance rounding out fifty years before the public.

"Elijah," costumed and staged as a grand opera production, directed by W. Dodd Chenery, will be presented twice, July 14 and July 22. Numerous other events, conferences, conventions, schools and gatherings will go to make up a busy and interesting time at Winona.

NOW RUNNING PAPER FOR SELF

A copy of the West Salem (Ohio) News reached our editorial sanctum last week and it contained the photo of the new editor, Foraker Ferrell, an old school mate of Ye Editor. The paper is the same size of The St. Joe News. As we read the new exchange and look at the editor, we think of those days when we were in school in St. Joe. Frequently it became the duty of these two editors to put out a school paper for rhetoricals, and many a night was spent in getting out these papers containing all the information about the school and the teachers, and in many instances Mr. Ferrell would illustrate the articles, as he was a fine artist. Little then did we think that two boys would continue to manage or operate papers. Mr. Ferrell has a business manager or partner, namely, Thomas C. Walker.

PAUL REVERE HOME MADE INTO SHRINE

Practically as It Was in the Revolutionary Days.

The home of Paul Revere in North square, Boston, Mass., was built sometime between 1650 and 1680. It was purchased by Paul Revere in 1770 and he lived in it until 1800. The house, which is now owned by the Paul Revere Memorial association, has been restored to its original condition and is open to the public.

Once inside the small paneled entry one sees the flight of stairs that rise sharply to the second floor. From the entry one passes through a left-hand doorway and finds himself in a pine-sheathed room. The walls on all but the fireplace are covered with quaint wall paper.

The other downstairs room is the old kitchen. This room is both paneled and plastered. Above the fireplace on a narrow shelf are found sundry candlesticks and other paraphernalia. One of the most interesting things in the entire kitchen is the toddy warmer, shown in the accompanying sketch, which was made by Paul Revere himself. When in use, the straight iron rod of this utensil was removed from its resting place in the thimble-like cap, and after being heated in the coals of the fireplace, was thrust red hot into the cold wine or ale, producing a burned taste which was much esteemed in those days. Near the fireplace is a battered baby's cradle fashioned from a barrel (see illustration). Its worn rockers and scarred sides testify to its ancient origin and faithful service.

Though Revere's memorable ride was undertaken over 150 years ago, thanks to Longfellow's immortal poem, "Paul Revere's Ride," practically every school child knows the story well. When criticized for mentioning neither William Dawes, Samuel Prescott, Sexton Robert Newman, nor Captains Pulling and Barnard in the poem for the parts they played on that memorable night, Longfellow replied, it is said, that the name Revere was a poetic one, and that it would do no one any harm because the poem would soon be forgotten. But histories show that he was wrong, for they have been founded on that poem. In fact, it is claimed that if it had not been for the poem, Revere would not have been honored in so many ways. —Pathfinder Magazine.

THE MINUTE MAN

By ISAAC BASSETT CHOATE

Bilthe speede the plow this warm
sweet day of spring,
When April's sun has broken winter's reign,
Unclasped the hold frost had on lake
and plain;
Swift hurry swallows north on eager wing;
To plowboy's whistle thrush and bluebird sing.
The brook runs glad, escaped from icy chain
Which tyrant winter forged, but forged in vain;
All fields and woods with songs of freedom ring.
Now halts the plow in furrow, ready hand
Grasps ready musket in defense of right;
The plowboy is a soldier at command,
His country serving well; before the night
Shall sound of musketry assurance bring
That now hath Minute man succeeded king.

A GLORIOUS FOURTH

This ought to be the Greatest Fourth of July this present generation has ever celebrated.

We make that statement in view of the fact that within recent weeks new honor and glory has been brought to the stars and stripes by a youthful American, a son of the Midle West, a modern hero and an explorer without equal since the days of Christopher Columbus. Almost nine years have passed since our nation laid down its arms in what we hope will be the last great human struggle in which our citizens will be called on to participate. It passed safely through the period of readjustment, and has lent aid in both a moral and financial way to sister nations across the sea. And just as the skies were clearing for them comes the triumphal spanning of the sea by Chas. Lindbergh, a glorious triumph for science, but a still more glorious vistory for the peace of the world.

This ocuntry is ready to cedebrate the Fourth of July in a sane and patriotic maner, to add her cheers and applause to that which is now being heard throughout the entire land in honor of her newest messenger of peace—Chas. Lindbergh. Boyhood has brought new lustre to the flag for which manhood fought. He has given the stars and stripes a new meaning in the eyes of nations across the sea. He has linked the world closer than it has ever been by bringing it into closer touch. Never before have we had greater reason for putting our whole heart and soul into a celebration of Independence Day, for never before has it meant more to us.

Hang Old Glory to the breeze. Celebrate the day in the way that best suits you, and that you deem most appropriate. But, wherever you are and in whatever way you celebrate, remember to hold in your heart a prayer for a continuation of the peace that is now ours, and the better understanding that has been brought to the world by the youthful Lindbergh, our newest agency of good will toward all mankind.

LIVING UP TO A NAME

"Thou hast a name to live." Parents have large expectations for their children. The children have a secret purpose that their parents shall not be disappointed in them. God has a large investment in each of us and He is correspondingly counting on us. Will we disappoint Him?

The unsaved man and woman is expecting something from the followers of Jesus. Shall we disappoint them by not demonstrating the spirit of our Lord? They are counting that we have the words of eternal life and often wonder why we are so prone to keep those same words of life to ourselves. A christian is supposed to be Christ like. Let each one who has named His name now take stock of his own life purposes and conduct. Do we attend church, pay the ministry, support missions, simply because we like the preacher; or are we sold on Jesus Christ enough that we do these things and more "as unto the Lord?"

Christian, thou hast a name to live. Are you spending thought, time, and energy to live up to it or must your Lord be disappointed in you?

LARIMORE TALKS TO GOOD CROWD SUNDAY

The three churches of St. Joe united in a special temperance service Sunday monring at the M. P. Church. Rev. McKnight and a male quartette assisted with the program.

F. B. Leighty, President of the DeKalb County Council of Religious Education, introduced the speaker, J. H. Larimore, of Westerville, Ohio, Director of Publicity for the World League Against Alcoholism.

In his subject "Two Rivers to Cross," Mr. Larimore emphasized the present conditions and future aspect of the struggle to enforce the Prohibition Amendment.

The first river to cross in this fight, Mr. Larimore contended, is to effect the enforcement of Prohibition Laws.

The second river, to effect World Wide Prohibition.

In discussing the difficulties encountered in enforcing Dry Laws, the speaker asserted that complete enforcement would not be obtained until the World Wide Prohibition movement is successful. And that the success of this movement rests upon the coming generation, international education and unity of ideals.

The world is growing better and the young people are alright, but complete sobriety will not be obtained until the whole world is dry.

Mr. Larimore further impressed the idea that people should uphold the Dry Laws, but that he despised the man or woman who "prys" or "snoops" in the personal affairs of any individual.

The United States has 17,000 miles of border, said Mr. Larimore, In every direction, outside this border, are nations that to some extent or other promote, protect and encourage the liquor traffic. When we had township prohibition it was not satisfactory until we got county prohibition. County drouth was not complete until the state as a unit went dry. State prohibition was better, but it was found not to be entirely successful and we found national prohibition necessary.

The foe we face is not a local union of saloonkeepers, nor a state liquor dealers' association, nor even national association of brewers. It is the organized liquor interests of the world.

The United States can keep on using large appropriations, and calling to its enforcement aid the army and navy, or the moral reform forces of this country can cooperate with the moral forces of the rest of the world, and by doing so turn off the spigot.

In general the address of Mr. Larimore's was pleasing and as he so simply stated the essential spirit of the Prohibition movement is to help the other fellow, and that we must engage in this co-operation because, first, of our tremendous investments in Christian missions; secondly, so that we may keep the liquor traffic so busy defending itself abroad that it cannot concentrate on breaking down American prohibition, and, thirdly, because of the inherent character of the prohibition movement, which is to help the other fellow, whether that other fellow be an individual victim of the liquor traffic or his family, or a county, state, nation, or hemisphere.

H. M. Widney appeared on the program during the Sunday School hour, with a short temperance talk.

Pernicious Insect Pest

The Argentine ant, which takes its name from the country where it was first discovered, has a fondness for flesh and is said to have been known to attack babies in their cradles. In some instances the wounds proved fatal. This ant is one of the worst known insect pests, and when they once invade a locality it is almost impossible to get rid of them.

MONEY THAT WORKS

A MAN visited our bank a few weeks ago who had just sold some property.

HE WAS not ready to invest the money again for a few months but he did not want the money to 'loaf' and earn nothing for him during that time.

SO HE wanted to know what he could do with the money to make it earn some profit and be available in case he needed it.

OF COURSE we suggested a Certificate of Deposit. You can have a "C. of D." for any amount and continue it as long as you wish. It pays a nice profit, too.

THERE IS no better plan for your money that is not otherwise employed. Let us tell you more about this plan.

STUFFED VEGETABLES ARE SUBSTANTIAL

Stuffed Eggplant Is One of Nicest of Stuffed Vegetables.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One way of introducing variety in preparing vegetables is to stuff those that lend themselves in form to this treatment. Stuffing makes the entire dish more substantial and thus sometimes reduces the number of other foods required for a given meal. Eggplant, green peppers, large Spanish onions and cabbage are among those often served in this way. Usually the stuffing is made of other vegetables and some cooked starchy material such as bread crumbs, rice or spaghetti, to give body. A great many combinations are possible in stuffings. One would naturally choose two or three flavors that blend well together however they are cooked and served, just as one combines flavors carefully for a vegetable soup, a stew or a vegetable hash. Some good flavors to use in stuffings, two or three at once, are: Tomato, corn, celery, cabbage, spinach, string beans and carrots. Onion flavor is desirable in almost every combination. Minced meat or chicken is often included, and then the resulting mixture may be sufficiently hearty for an entire lunch or supper.

Combine Various Leftovers.

If you have not quite enough of a given vegetable when it is cooked in the usual way, and if it is suitable for stuffing, you may be able to extend it very nicely by this means. Again, when you have small amounts of two or three cooked vegetables on hand, but not enough of any one to serve for a dinner vegetable, you can combine the various leftovers with bread or rice, add onion flavor and use the mixture as stuffing. Bread crumbs should always be combined with melted butter to make them rich before they are added to other ingredients.

Stuffed Eggplant Recipe.

The following recipe for stuffed eggplant is furnished by the bureau of home economics:

1 large eggplant
1 teaspoonful salt
6 tablespoonfuls chopped peanuts
1 cupful fine bread crumbs
2 cupfuls finely cut raw cabbage, or cooked string beans
2 tablespoonfuls butter

Cut the eggplant in half. Remove as much of the white portion as possible without breaking the shell. Cut in small pieces. Cook the cabbage and the eggplant in a small amount of water about ten minutes. Drain and mix the other ingredients with it. Fill the eggplant with the stuffing, place buttered crumbs on top. Pour around each half eggplant a little of the water in which the cabbage and eggplant were cooked. Bake in the oven half an hour, or until golden brown.

BAKING POWDER BISCUITS GOOD

Should Be Light, Fine-Grained, Tender, Brown.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

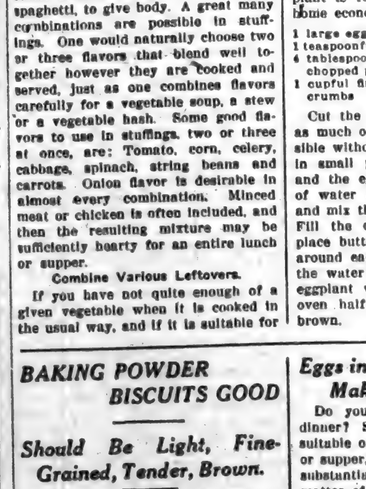
Tastes in biscuits differ, and it would be remarkable, among a dozen people, to secure an unanimous opinion on the comparative merits of soft or crisp biscuits, drop biscuits or rolled ones, water or milk or sour-milk biscuits. Almost everyone would agree, however, that an acceptable biscuit should be light, fine-grained, tender, and delicately browned. The dough should be worked as little as possible, therefore, so that the gluten will not be developed too much and the product made tough. Using soft-wheat or pastry flour and having the oven very hot are two other points that contribute to good texture.

Here's a recipe furnished by the United States Department of Agriculture:

Biscuits.

1 cupful milk
2 cupfuls sifted soft-wheat flour
2 to 3 tablespoonfuls fat
4 teaspoonfuls of baking powder
1 teaspoonful of salt

All dry ingredients are mixed and sifted together, the fat is worked in and the liquid is added to this fat-and-flour mixture. Cutting the fat into the flour with knives a pastry fork or a biscuit cutter is often recommended to avoid warming or handling it too much, but the tips of the fingers may be used if the work is done quickly.



Making Baking Powder Biscuits.

Either milk or water may be used as the liquid in baking powder biscuits, and the quantity varied to obtain the biscuit desired. Sometimes a very stiff dough is wanted, and as little liquid as possible is used. A lighter biscuit is made by using more liquid and combining very lightly. Drop biscuits, which are not rolled out, may be made by adding still more liquid than for a soft dough.

Bake the biscuits in a shallow pan or on a baking sheet. The pan should be lightly greased for drop biscuits, but this is not necessary for the other type. Biscuits require a very hot oven (450 to 500 degrees F.). If you have an electric table stove, try baking biscuits right in the dining room.

Eggs in Tomato Sauce Make Good Dinner Dish

Do you enjoy an occasional egg dinner? Some people think of eggs as suitable only for breakfast, luncheon, or supper, and do not regard them as substantial enough for dinner. As a matter of fact, however, eggs contain the same kind of efficient protein for body building that is found in meat. Eggs, particularly the yolks, are rich, too, in mineral substances and they are one of the best sources of vitamine A which everybody needs for health and physical well being. What makes eggs seem to be less substantial than some other foods is that their food materials are in such form that they can be rather quickly assimilated by the body. Eggs are pure food material mixed with water. Because of their rather large percentage of water, when serving eggs for dinner it is well to allow two or more apiece for the grown-up members of the family. An exact recipe cannot be given without knowing the number of persons in your family. With these proportions for sauce enough to go with six eggs in mind, you can count noses and estimate the exact quantities needed.

Make a sauce by blending three tablespoonfuls of flour and two tablespoonfuls of melted butter and combining with two cupfuls of tomato juice and pulp and seasonings—one and one-half teaspoonfuls salt, one-quarter teaspoonful of pepper, one-half teaspoonful celery salt. If you are planning to bake your eggs put about half the sauce in a shallow buttered baking dish or pie plate and then break the eggs separately in a saucer and slide them carefully, one at a time, into the sauce. If you have more than six eggs, use two dishes. Cover the eggs with the rest of the sauce and sprinkle three tablespoonfuls of grated cheese over the top. Bake in a moderate oven until the eggs are set.

If you like, you can heat all the sauce in a skillet and poach the eggs in it, handling them carefully as before. In this case, spread rice or noodles on a hot platter while the eggs are cooking, skim out the eggs as they are done and slip them on top of the rice or noodles, and pour the tomato sauce over the whole dish.

Valuable Minerals Are Found in Raisin Bread

It may not always be convenient to make a yeast-raised dough when you want raisin bread. Everybody likes raisin bread once in a while, however, and the raisins contribute valuable mineral elements to the diet. A very good bread can be made by using baking powder. It will dry out more quickly than a yeast-raised bread, so it is well to make only as much as you are sure will be eaten promptly. The United States Department of Agriculture furnishes the following directions for making it:

Quick Raisin Bread.

2½ cupfuls flour
1 teaspoonful salt
4 teaspoonfuls baking powder
½ teaspoonful cinnamon
1 cupful milk
4 tablespoonfuls melted butter
4 tablespoonfuls sugar
1½ cupfuls raisins, chopped
2 eggs

Sift the salt, cinnamon, flour and baking powder together. Beat the egg and add the milk and sugar. Combine the liquid and the dry ingredients. Stir in the raisins until well mixed. Place the bread in a greased pan and let it stand for 10 minutes. Bake at a moderate temperature (about 350 degrees Fahrenheit) for about 45 minutes.

Nothing to Flag Her Down

Ardath, age five, was being taught some of the rudiments of reading by her mother, who explained that coming to a period at the end of a sentence meant for her to stop. A few nights later, at the dinner table, she was chattering away with no noticeable likelihood of there being any pauses, when her mother asked her why in the world she didn't stop talking. She replied: "I guess, mother, I don't see any periods."

Tree Preserved in Ice

A Canadian government exploration party recently came across a spruce tree which had been preserved in the ice of the great North American glacier in Alaska. The glacier had receded and left the tree exposed after an imprisonment estimated at hundreds of thousands of years. The spruce was apparently one hundred twenty-four years old when the glacier enveloped it.

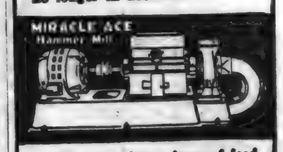
Grind Feed for Money

Own the feed business with this new kind of feed mill. Every community is now, or soon will be demanding feed ground quickly in large quantities and very fine. Medium grinding, done by many kinds of mills, is no longer in demand.



This is the latest form of feed grinder. It combines the cutting action of the attrition mill with the hammering action of the hammer mill.

This mill will grind 100 lbs. of ear corn, oats, rye, barley, alfalfa, or anything grindable to any fineness, with 25% to 50% less power than any other type of grinder.

This saving in power alone makes these mills money makers all over the country. They will give you a better profit grinding feed than any other business in which you can engage on the same amount of capital. There should be one in your community.

Send for free booklet "THE STORY OF A WONDERFUL FEED MILL" which tells you about this mill and the opportunity of making money in the all-year feed business. Complete equipments in capacities from 2,500 to 25,000 per hour, costing from $750 and up. Many mills pay for themselves in a few months.

ANSWERED:

three vital questions you have asked about used car allowances

1 "What is my present car worth?"

Answer: Your used car has only one fundamental basis of value: that is what the dealer who accepts it in trade can get for it in the used car market.

2 "Why should dealers in different makes of cars offer me allowances that differ materially?"

Answer: Your used car has seemingly different values because competitive dealers are bidding to sell you a new car.

3 "Is it true that the largest allowance offered means the best deal for me?"

Answer: The largest allowance is not necessarily the best deal for you. Sometimes it is; sometimes it is not. An excessive allowance may mean that you are paying an excessive price for the new car in comparison with its real value.

First judge the merits of the new car in comparison with its price, including all delivery and finance charges. Then weigh any difference in allowance offered on your used car. Remember that after all you are making a purchase, not a sale.

THE LIVING FLAME

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

NOW that Ellen Rhodes was so near her journey's end courage began to fail her. A feeling of doubt and timidity grew within her. Wasn't she foolish to go back at all? Perhaps she would only suffer disappointment, not unmixed with chagrin. Suppose nobody remembered her or cared about seeing her?

Yet, as the old familiar hills drifted past her car window, she gazed at them hungrily, finding some compensation for the trouble and sacrifice her journey had entailed. She realized that she should find some sort of welcome in the dear old scenes even if the people who inhabited these scenes had changed.

She had been longing for years to go back to the place where she had spent the happiest period of her life, but somehow she could never arrange it. Even now she had had to practice the strictest economy with all her preparations. She could not ask the children to help her. Joe had just married and Louise, who had been married for nine years and had a child, had recently undergone a serious operation. It was, in fact, her three months of service in Louise's home which had made the doctor suggest a change for her. So she had decided to go back home, as she had always called Westville.

Eighteen years is a long time and much had happened. She no longer received letters from the old place. She felt herself lost to such of her old friends and neighbors as yet remained. She wondered about them wistfully.

Of course she herself had changed greatly. Those eighteen years of hardship and struggle and sorrow had blanched her brown hair and stolen the roses from her cheeks. She wore black now, for Arthur, instead of the bright colors she had formerly loved. And black never had been becoming to her. Still, as a visible badge of her bereavement she intended now to wear black as long as she lived.

A crowd of fireflies twinkled among the hills. The town at last! How the new lighting system made it glow upon the darkness. She remembered the old kerosene lamps which had lit their living room evenings. With a sigh she began to collect her luggage, to rummage in her purse for the right cab fare. Before she went to the hotel she would have a long look at her old home, where she and Arthur had been so happy.

As she stepped from the train she came face to face with a large, rosy woman wrapped closely against the chill in a fur-trimmed coat. Instantly she recognized Mrs. Page. In the old days Mrs. Page had ranged as the leading woman of the town. Arrogant—with wealth and popularity, she had made a great distance between herself and the plain little wife of an unsuccessful physician. Remembering this, Ellen was slipping past, intent on delivering her suitcase to an approaching cabman, when Mrs. Page stopped her.

"Isn't this Mrs. Rhodes?" she said. "I was looking for my husband when the light fell on your face. I am so glad to meet you. My husband hasn't come after all—he went to the city on business and probably has been detained. So you must let me take you in my car. By the way, whom are you visiting?"

Ellen colored. "Nobody. You see, I—I didn't let anybody know I was coming. So I shall go to the hotel. It is very kind of you, Mrs. Page. I am grateful. It is storming, isn't it?"

It was indeed beginning to storm very hard. They hurried to the great car and its shelter. And a chauffeur in livery took charge of Ellen's shabby suitcase.

"If you will just leave me at the hotel—" Ellen began.

"At the hotel?" Mrs. Page looked at her guest under the dome light. "If that is the only place you have in mind I am going to take you home with me."

It was useless for Ellen to protest. Mrs. Page simply would have her own way. So instead of occupying a room at either the shabby old hotel or the noisy new one, Ellen slept in a resplendent chamber on cushions of down. She was so worn in body and soul that she slept. And she awakened to a shining world and a strange wonder at being where she was.

Breakfast was a thing of beauty and delight, with Chinese lilies and Lowestoft china. She was alone with Mrs. Page at the table.

"Of course, now that I have got you I shall keep you right here with me," Mrs. Page said.

"I couldn't think of making you so much trouble."

"Trouble! My dear, my maids will see to making your bed and providing you with a cover at table. And I shall have your company, which I need. Can't you see that I'm a lonely woman?"

"You look very comfortable," Ellen smiled.

"Oh—yes. But there is a drawback. You remember my son, Archie?"

"I was just going to ask about him."

"He died just as he came of age." Then, hurrying over Ellen's sympathetic murmur: "I have often thought that if your husband had been here Archie would have lived. You recall how successfully your husband treated the Beals boy? Well, Archie's case was the same." She paused. Then, changing to a livelier tone, she said: "I shall telephone a few of your old acquaintances and let them know you are here. Then you will see!"

Ellen did see. Those few magic words from Mrs. Page brought immediate results. People came flocking to see her, eager with welcome. She had more invitations than she could accept. At night when she crept into the mahogany four-poster she was limp as a rag with fatigue, her head whirling with many pleasant impressions.

She knew it was all owing to Mrs. Page's influence. Now, as in the old days, everybody followed whither Mrs. Page led. But, never mind; she was having a good time. Sometimes she was almost happy. She found herself laughing, talking quite girlishly.

Then came the last evening with a party, a small intimate affair, at which the souls she knew best gathered. As they sat in the glow of Mrs. Page's gold-shaded lights Ellen found that the time had come for her to speak what was in her heart.

"You folks have been so good to me that I just must tell you how grateful I am," she said. "Why, you've made me feel almost young again—and almost happy. I wanted to come, but I dreaded to come, on account of the old associations, but you have made it all so easy and so pleasant for me, I am taking away so much that I can't tell you about—things that shall be a comfort to me all the rest of my life, like that motor trip out to Canada falls. That was the place where Arthur and I used to steal away for our bits of outing. He loved things like that. And the last words he said to me were: 'Ei, when I get mended we'll go back to Canada falls and renew our honeymoon.' Somehow I feel he knows I've been there. And maybe he wasn't far away."

There was silence. And then Mrs. Page began to speak very gently, laying her hand upon that of Ellen, who sat beside her.

"I wish we had understood the doctor and you better when you were here among us. But we were too young and thoughtless. Life goes so fast when you are just entering the thirties. But past fifty you get true perspectives. You've had your sorrows—yes, the older you get the faster you cling to the tried, true things. When you came down the steps of that train in the dusk a month ago it came to me like a flash that I had been wanting to see you a long time. You gave me back the things I had lost, my youth—Archie—I have been very happy while you have been here, Ellen. And I never shall lose sight of you again."

They all said the same thing and Ellen could not but believe they meant it.

Next morning Ellen went away. Her niche in the pullman was crowded with farewell gifts—roses, books, bonbons. Her heart was warm and glad. She was going away, but she was coming back. The flame lived—that feeble little flame of sacrifice and service which she and Arthur had lighted long, long ago.

Family Comes First With All Spaniards

Undoubtedly the strongest Spanish institution today is the family, and in it lies the strength of Spain. Divorce does not exist, and even separations are both uncommon and regarded with aversion.

It is difficult for the foreigner to understand how strong these family ties are, for in the rest of Europe they perished in the war. One feels that one is back in the world of Trollope, and in reality one is. The mother is the moving spirit in the household, as in France, and the members of it think and act as a family in all things.

This attitude may seem a strange one to find characteristic of the most individualistic nation in Europe, but it is not really such a paradox as may at first sight appear. To the Spaniard his family comes first, and then his town; after that his province, and only last of all his country. In his nature he possesses that anarchic strain that prevented the Arab from founding a durable polity, and like the Arab his first duty is to his family.

This conception underlies the whole social life of Madrid. There are innumerable cafes where men will drink—very moderately, for the Spaniard is no tippler—and smoke for hours at a time, but there are very few restaurants where one can obtain a meal, and such as there are do not attract many Spanish clients.

The importance of the family has quite naturally led to the apotheosis of the child, and the children are the real rulers of Madrid. Every open space is their empire, and, although they may at first sight appear to be spoiled, the family life is so complete that the evening contact with their parents generally renders them precocious.—Charles Petrie in the Cornhill, London (Living Age).

New York Structure City Under One Roof

A city within a building may be the boast of New York if plans now before the building department are approved. These call for what is known as the Larkin building for West Forty-second street, which is to be 110 stories high and have accommodations for more than 30,000 individuals in the various sites and offices. Thus the structure would take care of more persons than reside in some of the cities of this country and Europe.

Opposition to the height has caused many delays in bringing the matter to a definite head, and a number of problems still are to be solved. One of the chief obstacles encountered has been the question of elevator transportation for not only the multitudes that would use these conveyances morning and night, and at luncheon time, but also to take care of those with business to transact in the various offices during other hours of the day.—Wall Street Journal.

Sea Elephants Going Fast

Sea elephants, which at one time abounded in large numbers off the coast of California and Lower California, were in 1912 estimated as numbering only 150 on the island of Gaudalupe. A recent expedition from San Diego to the same island found the herd to consist of 450. The government of Mexico is doing its utmost to preserve this species.

THIS WOMAN FOUND RELIEF

After Long Suffering by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

In a little town of the middle West, was a discouraged woman. For four months she had been in such poor health that she could not stoop to put on her own shoes. Unable to do her work, unable to go out of doors or enjoy a friendly chat with her neighbors, life seemed dark indeed to Mrs. Daugherty.

Then one day, a booklet was left at her front door. Idly she turned the pages. Soon she was reading with quickened interest. The little booklet was filled with letters from women in conditions similar to hers who had found better health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"I began taking the Vegetable Compound," Mrs. Daugherty writes, "and after I took the third bottle, I found relief. I am on my eleventh bottle and I don't have that trouble any more, and feel like a different woman. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to everyone I see who has trouble like mine, and you can use these facts as a testimonial. I am willing to answer any letters from women asking about the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Ed. Daugherty, 1308 Orchard Ave., Muscatine, Iowa.

Old Folks Need a Mild Laxative —Not a "Physic"

Most men and women past fifty must give to the bowels some occasional help, else they suffer from constipation. One might as well refuse to aid weak eyes with glasses as to neglect a gentle aid to weak bowels.

Is your present laxative, in whatever form, promoting natural bowel "regularity"—or must you purge and "physic" every day or two to avoid sick headache, dizziness, biliousness, colds, or sour, gassy stomach?

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural, regular bowel movement even for those chronically constipated. It never gripes, sickens or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take.

DIES AFTER ONLY A SHORT ILLNESS

W. F. Melton, Age 83, Passed Away Monday Afternoon —Visited in Auburn Sunday

The death of W. F. Melton, aged eighty-three years, occurred Monday afternoon at 1 o'clock at his home two miles north and a mile west of St. Joe. The deceased was the father of Frank Melton, of Auburn.

Heart trouble caused the death of Mr. Melton. He was in Auburn on Sunday visiting his son and ate heartily at the noon hour.

Mr. Melton was seized with a heart attack two years ago while in the DeKalb county court house and for a time he was in a serious condition. The death of the aged man was not unexpected.

The body was taken to Auburn to Dilgard's funeral home where the funeral was held Wednesday.

CLINTON MERCHANT IS TAKEN BY DEATH

M. E. Olds, 70, a dry goods merchant in Clinton for fifteen years, died Thursday morning. The funeral was held Saturday afternoon at 2 P. M. in the home. He leaves one son, Archer, of Indianopolis; two brothers, Will and Arthur of LaGrange, Ind., and two sisters, Mrs. J. R. Bishop, of Bluffton, Ind., and Mrs. M. McClaren, of Lima, Ohio. Burial services were made in Riverside cemetery. —Saturday's Toledo Blade.

Not knowing of him being ill, the death announcement was a shock to the people of St. Joe.

Forty-one years ago The St. Joe News was admitted to the mails with M. E. Olds as its editor and founder. Older folks will remember when the paper was small and given free as a store advertising medium. The demand for the paper grew until Mr. Olds decided to enlarge it, enter in the mails and charge a subscription price, which he did. He displayed a real talent as a writer under the name of "Barcus Q. Hippenhammer."

As a merchant, he was equally successful and for years operated the "Big 4." He was a very prominent figure in the community, both as a business man and a church worker.

FARM PROPERTIES ARE ASSESSED TOO HIGH

Seeking a reduction in farm assessments seemed to be necessary, according to instances cited by Chas. Miser, County Assessor. For exemple: Concord township, Aiken sold to Thompson, 108 acres; appraised value $8,780; sale price $5,000; difference $3,780. Herrick sold to Foltz, 50 acres; appraised value $3,350; sale price $2,500; difference $850. It is thought very probable that a reduction will be ordered for DeKalb county. Any order made will be effective on taxes paid in 1928.

CITIZENS OF NORTH CAROLINA FIRST TO DEFY KING GEORGE

Proclamation of Freedom Made at Mecklenburg More Than 152 Years Ago.

In spite of doubting Thomas Jefferson and the reluctance of certain less interested Virginians to admit that anything good ever came out of North Carolina, no sufficient reason now exists for questioning the proud boast that the citizens of Mecklenburg county, in the latter state, did fling defiance in the face of Great Britain in the form of a declaration of independence just thirteen months and fifteen days before the Continental congress in Philadelphia saw fit to make the same decisive move. The date was May 20, 1775, the place was Charlotte, N. C., and the immediate provocation of precipitate action was the arrival of the express with the news of the shooting down of Capt. John Parker's Minute men by British regulars under Major Pitcairn on Lexington common.

It was in 1819 that a newspaper reprint of what was said to be the declaration itself—a document containing several of the phrases of his own famous paper—was called to the attention of Thomas Jefferson by John Adams. Writing to Adams from Monticello, Jefferson said he believed it spurious, because up to that moment he had never heard of it, though he lived in the adjoining state of Virginia. He called attention also to the circumstance that the witnesses appealed to were, most of them, dead.

Jefferson's Mind Open.

However, Jefferson was careful to add that he based his opinion on negative evidence which positive evidence was perfectly competent to overthrow. One of the most valiant collectors of this evidence has been Archibald Henderson, who is otherwise known as the American familiar of Bernard Shaw. Another—furiously assailed when he first collected the data—was Dr. George Washington Graham, who has written a whole book on the subject. The controversy was heated and acrimonious.

On the affirmative side it extended to the insinuation that one of the Virginia champions of Jefferson's priority had used his position as minister from this country to the Court of St. James to abstract from the British colonial archives a copy of the Cape Fear Mercury, which was material evidence because it contained the text of the Mecklenburg declaration printed within the month after it was issued. It was known that such a copy had, in fact, been sent to Lord Dartmouth by Josiah Martin, the royal governor of North Carolina at the time. Martin described it as "the late most treasonable publication of a committee in the county of Mecklenburg explicitly renouncing obedience to his majesty's government" and added that it "surpassed all horrid and treasonable publications that the inflammatory spirit of the country has produced." On the negative side there were charges of forgery and mendacity—the manufacture of history out of whole cloth.

Events Leading to Action.

Assuming the evidence as sufficient, the story of what happened becomes a part of a well-connected series of events in the province whose position between two ostentatiously aristocratic neighbors has sometimes, it is said, deprived her of due consideration. In March, 1774, Governor Martin had dissolved an unruly assembly. In August of that year a convention had met under the governor's nose in New Berne and sent delegates to the Continental congress. For the rest of that year the separate counties had been busy with meetings and preparations, and in April, 1775, the assembly which met by the authority of the crown—the last one—was also a convention of the people. They "transformed themselves from time to time" into one and then the other, so Governor Martin, who was a soldier, said, and thus, as Doctor Morrison sees it, strained the British constitution to the utmost—or, in other words, the breaking point. At the same time, a certain Col. Richard Henderson and his associates, all North Carolinians, had formed a company, with Daniel Boone for field leader, and set up a government in a tract of land which they had bought from the Cherokees without royal warrant. That land, which they named Transylvania and which included a great part of Tennessee and Kentucky, they had practically proclaimed to be independent not only of Great Britain but of North Carolina, and Virginia as well. They asked, indeed, to have it acknowledged by congress as the fourteenth province of the Confederation.

Denounced King George.

Obviously, the North Carolinians were not in submissive mood when the news of the first blood shed in the North arrived. What happened at Anson county courthouse when the messenger rode into that place is recorded in a certain family Bible to which Doctor Henderson has had access. The writer is a young man named Morgan Brown, an eyewitness. He says that the messenger found the county court in session and the magistrates, some of whom were tories, on the bench. The people forced the court to adjourn without the form of doing it in the king's name. Then they rushed out bearing the sheriff with them, leaving the tory magistrates still sitting on the bench. Afterward:

"The people consented for them to meet and close some unfinished business upon condition that it should not be called in the king's name or that the words 'God save the king' should be added by the crier, 'for,' said they, 'we will have nothing done in the name of a king who has his troops slaughter our citizens.' And thus ended the royal authority. For the court, after closing their record, never sat again."

Gathering of the Citizens.

At Charlotte, some fifty miles away, the messenger appears to have found an assembly of the leading citizens of Mecklenburg summoned from the various "companies" throughout the county by the colonel commandant, Thomas Polk. According to the received chronology, the messenger arrived May 19 and threw the gathering into a fever. The secretary, John McKnitt Alexander, says they "sat in the courthouse all night, neither sleepy nor hungry nor fatigued," and in the morning passed a set of resolutions prepared by Ephraim Brevard.

In the resolutions occurred the following declarations:

"Resolved * * * That we dissolve us with the mother country and absolve ourselves from allegiance to the British crown; and

"Resolved, That we do hereby declare ourselves a free and independent people; that we are and of right ought to be a sovereign and self-governing people under the power of God and the general congress."

It should be noted that the text is taken from Judge Francois X. Martin's "History of North Carolina," which text is supposed to be the same that was printed in the lost Cape Fear Mercury, for even the more ardent North Carolinians do not deny that the original document was destroyed in 1800 when Alexander's house was burned.

Sought Only Their Rights.

Returning again to the story: These resolutions were read to the people outside the courthouse by Colonel Polk and received with "shouts and huzzas." In accordance with a provision in the resolutions themselves, they were transmitted to the Continental congress, where the persons approached said that the "subject of the resolutions was premature to be laid before the congress."

At that time the cooler heads still hoped to compose matters with the mother country without an actual breach. The strongest statements of the Colonists' determination not to submit to coercion or to what they regarded as the abridgment of their liberties as subjects of the British crown were coupled with expressions of loyalty to the crown itself. Indeed among Americans who were far from being tories there were many who were proud of their own connection with Britain and reluctant to sever it. George Washington himself about that period, as Archibald Henderson reminds us, "abhorred independence"—which meant that he desired to be a good Virginian and still remain a good Englishman.

Independence Not Sought.

As a matter of fact, even Jefferson at this date was not an open advocate of independence, nor did Patrick Henry in his "ringing resolutions" (as Jefferson called them), adopted in Virginia after the Lexington bloodshed, take so rash a stand.

The sum of the matter is that the declaration of independence which Mecklenburg, N. C., issued one year ahead of time and the revolution which Virginia started a century ahead of time had each to wait till the country at large was ready for the real thing. They were dramatic gestures, not things accomplished. Nevertheless, the Virginia affair cost many lives of patriots and some of those who were not so counted, and tons of ink have been spilled over the North Carolina outbreak.—New York Times Magazine.

APPEAL TO HEAVEN IN THE DARK HOUR

Washington's Fervent Prayer at Valley Forge.

This is said to be word for word the prayer that Washington sent up to the Great White Throne of God in that dark hour of the republic when his barefoot army shivered in the snows of Valley Forge:

"Almighty God, we make our earnest prayer that Thou wilt keep the United States in Thy holy protection; that Thou wilt incline the hearts of the citizens to cultivate a spirit of subordination and obedience to government; and entertain a brotherly affection and love for each other and for their fellow citizens of the United States at large; and finally, that Thou wilt most graciously be pleased to dispose us all to do justice, to love mercy, and to demean ourselves with that charity, humility and pacific temper of mind which were the characteristics of the Divine Author of our blessed religion, and without a humble imitation of whose example in these things we can never hope to be a happy nation. Grant our supplication, we beseech Thee, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

So the prayer ran—so wonderful then and still more wonderful now when there are those in the land who seek not only to sow the seeds of hatred and dissension but who also in their blindness shake their fists in the face of God.—Los Angeles Times.

TEACHER ON TRIAL IN CIRCUIT COURT

gry or not.

While the teacher and his pupil were standing before the school Mr. Lake declared Richard drew back his hand as if to strike him and took a step, but evidently changed his mind and did not try to hit him. Mr. Lake denied Richard had put his hand up to protect his face from being slapped. The boy finally said he was sorry the affair had happened and that he had caused any disturbance. Mr. Lake insisted he did not shake his fist at the boy or demanded to know if the boy didn't "have it in for him."

The state, represented by Prosecuting Attorney H. C. Springer and Capt. W. D. Stump, attempted to show by the tesimony of he defendant that he failed to punish the Andrews, McCrory and Vallieu boys for he same offense of which he said the Shook boy was guilty, but Mr. Lake said the McCrory boy reurned o his seat wihout being ordered and that the McCrory, Andrews and Vallieu boys had not done anything to make them subject to reprimand. He said that if Richard had returned to his own seat there would have been no trouble.

Other Pupils On Stand

Kathryn Kimes and the Vallieu and McCrory boys were called to the stand by the state to describe the fracas as they had seen it. Wm. G. Erick, township trustee, testified to seeing Richard's face swollen. The boy's parents, told the jury his face was swollen and that there were black and blue marks on his shoulders that remained for two weeks after the teacher seized him and shook him.

Alvin J. Smith, principal of the Spencerville schools, called to the witness stand by the defense, and he had corrected Richard at various times. He described the boy as being bright and a good student, but that he was mischievous and led other boys. He said he thought Mr. Lake was "too easy" with the pupils and that he should use more discipline.

Dr. Shook was asked by Mr. Atkinson if he went to see Wm. O. Lake, the teacher's father and then township trustee, regarding the teacher's punishment of Richard in 1925, but over objection of counsel the witness was not permitted to answer. He declared there was no feeling between him and the Lake family.

Clarence Green, county superintendent of schools, testified to having heard of disturbances in Mr. Lake's school and that he sent word to the teacher to have better discipline.

Ray Farver, a patron of the school who witnessed the trouble on April 1 between the teacher and his pupil, was called again by the state and testified that he did not see Richard attempt to strike Mr. Lake.

The evidence being completed, arguments of counsel to the jury were started at 12:30 non.

The jury began its deliberation at 2:25 in th afternoon. At 4:30 jury was still locked up.

Triumph Over Evil

In Greek and in northern mythology and also in medieval legend, the dragon represents the power of evil much as does the snake in the biblical story, and for this reason, just as Christianity was triumphing, a Christian knight St. George, is pictured as victorious over the powers of evil as represented by the dragon.

VOL.. XLI. ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, JULY 7, 1927 NUMBER 27

MILLIMAN-HERCULES

A very pretty wedding occurred last Thursday morning at eleven o'clock at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Milliman, of St. Joe, when their daughter, Marguerite, became the bride of Adelbert Hercules, of Fort Wayne.

The single ring ceremony was used and the rites were read by the Rev. McKnight.

The bride was attended by Miss Charlotte Hartley, of Muncie, while Frederick Harper, of Fort Wayne served the groom as best man. The bride's costume was a sleeveless fashioned gown of blonde georgette with matching footwear. The bridesmaid was dressed in blue taffeta with tan footwear. Both carried arm bouquets of Ophelia roses and snapdragons.

Following the ceremony an elaborate wedding dinner was served to the bridal party and guests. Immediately following, the bride and groom left on a motor trip to points of interest in southern Indiana and Kentucky, after which they will be at home at 441 W. Branning Ave., at Fort Wayne.

For traveling the bride wore a blue twill suit, with fox scarf, rose-beige felt hat and matching footwear.

Mr. Hercules is the son of William Hercules of Louisville and has been employed with the S. F. Bowser Co., for the past seven years. The bride attended the State Normal School at Muncie three years and during the past three years has taught English in the St. Joe High School.

Those who witnessed the ceremony besides the honor guests and parents of the bride were Mrs. Fred Hartley and son, Glen, of Muncie, Mrs. M. E. Gruber and son, Junior, of Fort Wayne, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Grimm, Mrs. Fanny Saylor and Mrs. Mary Shuff.

M. T. BISHOP PASSES TO GREAT BEYOND

Melvin T. Bishop was born two miles west of Spencerville at the old Bishop homestead, August 24, 1850, and departed this life July 1, 1927, age 76 years, 10 months and 7 days.

On January 7, 1875 he was united in marriage to Sarah Emma Ayers at Auburn, Indiana, by Rev. Ward, the Baptist minister.

To this union were born five children. Frank, Retta, Kathryn, Charles and Clayton. Retta, Mrs. H. C. Hathaway,) of Auburn, and Charles, of Cleveland, Ohio, survive also four grandchildren, Clayton Hathaway, of Indianapolis; Russell Hathaway, Kathryn and Frank Bishop, of Cleveland, Ohio; two sisters, Mrs. Alice Zimmerman and Mrs. Z. T. Kagey and one brother, E. M. Bishop, all of Auburn.

The early years of his life were spent on the farm and with his father in the mercantile business in Spencerville.

In the fall of '78 he moved with his family to St. Joe, and with J. D. Leighty established the first general store, he was later owner of the lumber yards. Ill health caused him to retire.

For forty-eight years he has been a familiar figure on the streets of our town.

He was early identified with the Lutheran Church. He represented a very positive type of Christian life and nothing could swerve him from his faith and determination to serve his Master.

From the earliest organization of Prohibition he was an ardent supporter of the cause, and always had the best interests of the community at heart.

Just five months ago his wife preceded him in death, and this Sabbath day they are singing the Heavenly songs together.

"Weeping may endure for a night but joy cometh in the morning."

The funeral was held from the Lutheran Church Sunday afternoon, with Rev. A. K. Mumma, of Harlan, officiating. Burial was made in Riverside cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

Our sincere appreciation is hereby expressed to our many St. Joe friends, for the kind words of sympathy given us during the illness and death of our father.

Floors of Oak Are Inexpensive

THE floors in your home are really as much a part of the furnishings as your furniture. They must not only stand up under constant use, but they should be attractive. Oak floors answer both requirements—and they are inexpensive. The average small home can have oak floors throughout at very little more than ordinary floors cost, and they add much to the investment value of the home. The quickest way you can determine this important question is by asking us to tell you exactly how much it will cost per room to floor with oak. We'll figure on dependable Long-Bell oak flooring, known to home-builders everywhere because of its beauty and durability—and give you the exact figures of cost, without obligation.

WIDNEY FAMILY REUNION HELD

The ninth annual reunion of the John Widney family was held Sunday, July 3rd, at the country home of Mr. and Mrs. Vernie Monroe, about three miles north of St. Joe.

There were about thirty in attendance to enjoy the pleasures of the day which consisted mostly of a good social time which was mingled with some readings, songs and games by the children and young folks.

The usual good feed was served at the noon hour which was greatly enjoyed by all.

A short business meeting was held which resulted in the retaining of the old officers for another year, and the place for holding the next reunion will be at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Reichelderfer at Harlan, Ind.

The rest of the country is safe from Chicago unless its thugs should become inoculated with the wanderlust.

There is no mystery about it—the girl with the school girl complexion is a school girl.

Sophiscated drinkers are now using slightly diluted carbolic acid as a chaser for boot-leg moonshine.

Production sometimes continues long after demand is satisfied—as for example in law making.

The ordinary American warmly debates the question of whether to buy a new golf club or donate to the flood fund and then cuts out his church subscription and does both.

The only people that are happy all the time are in asylums.

A philosopher is a man who is pessimistic when others are optimistic and optimistic when others are pessimistic.

Spending our money and then wondering what became of it is our most popular national pastimes.

A hick town is a place where everybody except Mother dresses up and sits on the front porch all Sunday afternoon.

Money no longer grows on trees most of it is distilled from corn.

"Et tu, brutus," said the husband as he shot his fourteenth iceman.

The Tribune says that one man is killed every day in Chicago—by this time he must have learned to die gracefully.

A young widow with a fortune is very unfortunate if she is not a candidate for matrimony.

Really Mace Should Produce an Affidavit

Mace Liverwurst was telling a crowd in front of the blacksmith shop about a cyclone he was in one time at the close of the Civil war. He said it was the worst wind and electrical storm he ever saw, and that a bolt of lightning killed a big fat hog for him, and the wind twisted it in such a manner that the fat was rendered into lard, a frying pan came bouncing through the air and fell right side up beside the hog so that the rendered lard ran into it.

Mace said about that time the wind blew the feathers off a big spring chicken and tore the chicken into pieces, which fell into the pan of grease, the lightning set the grass afire and the grease got hot and the pieces of chicken in the skillet fried nice and brown. When Mace hesitated, to take a chew of tobacco, all his listeners left in disgust, and as we sauntered off we heard him say he could prove it by a dozen persons. Mace can prove anything by his cronies.—Altoona (Kan.) Tribune.

No Uniform Length

The length of a league varies in different countries. The Roman league was 1.376 modern English miles, while the league brought to England by the Normans was equal to 2.9 modern English miles. The metric league is four kilometers. At present the league is a nautical measure equal to the twentieth part of a degree—that is, three geographical miles, or 3.457 statute miles.

Is Handshake Unhygienic?

In the storehouse of a coal mine near Dortmund there is a curious placard on the wall. It reads as follows:

"Gentlemen, commercial travelers and others coming here for business are requested to omit handshaking from their visits.

"Shaking hands is a waste of time, is unhygienic, is often badly received, and will not have the slightest influence on the placing of orders from our firm."

PARASOL TO MATCH COSTUME; FANCY NECKWEAR AND CUFFS

"STOP, look, listen!" Have you ordered a parasol to match that new sports frock or coat or blouse? Also, to be truly chic, that lovely afternoon costume must needs be accompanied with a matching parasol. Smart women at European fashion resorts are carrying parasols at afternoon, sports and beach events and the vogue is finding ready acceptance in our "ain countree." Indeed the parasol vogue is waging so "fast and furious" that the aid of parasol manufacturers is being enlisted by the dressmaker at home and abroad in order to successfully cater to this latest whim of fashion for the ensemble.

The novelty of this enthusiasm for parasols is in the fact that, contrary to being confined to dressy elaborate models, the vogue has especially to do with the parasol as a sportswear accessory. So closely are parasols related to costumes, the same print that appears in the dress or coat will be repeated in the parasol. To see how charmingly the mode's plan of parasol to match the sports coat works out, study this fetching ensemble in the picture.

A FETCHING ENSEMBLE

It is the joy of the younger girls to top their bright print-silk frocks with a parasol of the identical material—and there's no lack of color in the picture, either. A print silk in which scarlet predominates with black, has its parasol of the same fabric. The hat with this costume is a broad-of-brim bright red transparent straw, banded with matching velvet.

Considering this sudden trend toward matching parasols, it might be well to instruct one's dressmaker to buy an extra yard or so of material, with a view to having a parasol covered to match. Not but what these ensembles can be bought ready-to-wear, for the better shops are making a fine display of parasols related to the costume.

For formal occasion very dressy parasols are made of shirred chiffon, also there are sunshades of all-over lace designed in black, in white, and in pastel shades. Ribbon, too, does its share in animating the parasol with its bright color. Very unique are the parasols which are covered with yards of narrow ombre ribbon.

Not only does the fabric of the parasol present unlimited novelty, but there is amusing variety in handles, some of which show grotesque carved figures.

All fashiondom is yielding to the magic sway of lace. This lace-ward movement is confirmed by the mode in its every phase from evening costume to daytime frock. One of the direct evidences of an existing lace era is the increasing favor shown for dainty lace neckwear or other exquisitely feminine touches of lace which appear on the afternoon frock of crepe, satin or cloth.

Lace novelties which distinguish recent daytime styles include a varied list of vestees, also long and short plastrons, "modestys" of tucked net and lace, guimpes, jabots, cape-collars, also cuff-and-collar sets of every description—and it is said that the vogue is only just at its beginning.

Vestees or plastrons to be worn on top of the dress are the "last word" in lace accessories. Some are short and square, others describe long triangle shapes, others are semi-circular. They all have either rounded or triangle backs. The fact of their being detachable makes them very acceptable together with their flaring or gauntlet cuffs which usually accompany them and which are a distinguishing style feature of these modern lace sets. Venise, alencon and even metal-thread laces, combined with georgette or satin are selected mediums for these models.

The illustration to the left gives an excellent idea of the daytime frock enhanced with deep lace and georgette cuffs matched to an elaborate plastron. This model of black kitten's ear crepe is ideal for smart afternoon wear and it is of very latest fashioning because of the presence of lace at its wrists and neckline.

LACE NECKWEAR AND CUFFS

A popular member in the season's neckwear collection is the lace cape-collar. The model in the picture happens to be of silver-thread lace, which classes it as an evening-wear item. However, neckwear sections are showing cape-collars of all sorts of lace from modest price to "costly as thy purse can buy." It is said also of lace fichus that they will be worn quite a little this summer. The surplice front opening now so fashionable calls for a vestee of lace patterned after the one shown in the panel in the picture.

"That's it. Just at this minute Polly leaves me cold and I wouldn't look at her tonight, not so long as I had you to myself."

"Father, that can't be true. It must not be. Because I've set my heart on making Mother—look at you."

Claude Dabbs laughed, and put his big hand over Mary's little one. "Just you listen to me, my Mary, and let Polly alone. The devil himself couldn't make Polly look at me."

"Wait and see. Maybe what the devil can't do, Mary can."

But Claude was saying: "I'm to have you for tonight, daughter, and tomorrow, if there's anything to be done, toward making Polly look at me.'" He changed the subject, keeping Mary busy teaching him Italian words to say to the waiters and the gondoliers.

Ned, not for a moment suggesting a grocery background, was waiting at the landing. His eyes made Mary happy, furious and shy. It was ridiculous, but she could not seem to help it.

The dinner, whether owing to Ned or Claude—Mary could not really tell which, they both seemed so eminently competent—was delicious. Their table was decorated with flowers, which always seem doubly rare and precious in Venice. Her two men, Mary felt, were the most distinguished in the room. The two men were equally sure that she was the most attractive girl in the world.

After dinner, and coffee in the lounge, they went up to Claude's sitting room to talk and smoke. It was a happy evening. In the presence of his daughter, Claude was at his best. Ned, reveling in the fact that Mary was noting every shade of her father's feeling for him, drew Claude out for his daughter's sake.

When "the loveliest evening," as Mary told her father, was over and Cinderella-Mary must fly home, Ned remembered that Claude had never once called him Rangeley that evening! What a night and a moon to explain under!

He hinted, eagerly, that he was ready to take upon his shoulders the duty of seeing Mary home, suggesting that it would be safer for both Mary and Claude. Mary simply slipped her hand into her father's and looked at him. Ned's arguments were as nothing.

"I guess we'll risk that, my boy, if Mary wants me," said Claude.

Ned stood on the landing steps and watched them move away. Mary had agreed to meet Claude at the Accademia at three the next afternoon. As Claude turned to direct the gondolier, Ned had whispered:

"Come twenty minutes earlier—for me."

But as the gondola floated away, he wasn't sure that Mary had heard him.

When she had said good night, at the doorway of the Royal Danieli, Mary found it was later than she thought and with a little apprehensive feeling went directly to her own room.

There was a light still burning in Polly's room, and reluctantly Mary opened the door between their rooms and looked in.

"Come in, Mary," called her mother.

Polly was sitting up in bed, reading, or pretending to read, and before Mary could scold her for reading after a headache, Polly began:

"To save trouble, Mary, and to avoid unnecessary conversation, you were not with the Farleys tonight. They all went to bed an hour ago, and in the hall I heard young Farley asking his mother where you were and why you did not dine with them tonight."

Mary looked at her mother, for half a second without speaking. She had not expected to be caught quite so soon.

"I went to Father's hotel, and dined with him and Mr. Carter." The whole truth seemed what the situation called for.

Polly Johnston gasped and leaned forward. She had gotten more than she bargained for. "Your father! Claude Dabbs?"

"Yes," said Mary demurely. "I like him tremendously, Mother."

"How long have you known him—to like tremendously?"

"Since the day before we left New York. I met him in the druggist's and went to his hotel there, the Langdon, and—"

"Mary! Was it Claude who told you to keep me in ignorance?"

"Mother, I thought you might not like my knowing him. But I simply had to. Father doesn't like secrecy a bit. He wants to take care of us both."

"How like Claude," Polly sneered. "Take care of us both behind the grocery shop, I suppose."

"Oh Mother! How can you? He seems perfectly capable of taking care of any number of people. I trust him."

"I do not," her mother snapped. "We'll leave tomorrow."

Mary came to the bed and looked at her mother. To Polly Johnston, Mary seemed suddenly older, and different. Who shall say how little, or how much, a kiss may alter a maiden's character and outlook on life?

"Mother, I won't run away again. If you can't stay and face facts—and Father, you will have to leave me behind to do it."

There was a long look between those who had been mother and daughter only a moment ago, and were now two women of different ages measuring each other like opponents.

It was Polly who spoke first, and though her voice was not raised, Mary shivered, for never had her mother spoken like that before. "Very well then, we stay. You can see all you want of your father, openly."

"Mary, Was It Claude Who Told You to Keep Me in Ignorance?"

"And you?"

Polly Johnston laughed. "You are not the only one who can keep a secret." She pushed the canopy aside and reached for a telegraph blank and her fountain pen on the table beside her bed. "I shall wire Loren Rangeley in Paris, tonight."

"Loren Rangeley in Paris!" Mary went white, started to speak again and turned away.

Polly Johnston, beginning to write her message, looked up eagerly to see if the girl would weaken. It was the first time they had ever pitted their wills against each other, and it was distinctly unpleasant. She wished to Heaven they had not started this, or that the child would give in, instead of standing there white and desperate.

"Mother," Mary was facing her, and though there were tears behind her eyes, her voice was steady. "You know I hate Loren Rangeley. He's the coldest, hardest man I know, and if you—if you divorce my father—to marry him, for his money—I'll try to feel the same toward you, Mother, but I never will!"

She was gone. The door closed behind her before Polly could get to her feet. She started to follow her, and then stood still, breathing fast. What could she do? If she refused Loren Rangeley and his money, what had she to fall back on but C. M. Dabbs!

That night Mary cried herself to sleep.

CHAPTER XIII

In the morning, having breakfasted in their respective rooms, as was their custom, Mary, dressed for the street, came to her mother's door.

At the sight of Mary's pale face Polly's heart misgave her. She knew that her own face was pale, but she was able to say, in the chilliest of tones: "If you have made any plan to meet your father this morning, I will not interfere."

"No," Mary answered in a tone equally lifeless. "We do not meet until three o'clock, at the Accademia."

"In that case, suppose we go to the church of San Zaccaria this morning I want to see the Gellini Madonna there, and we can walk."

It had all the appearance of a pleasantly idle morning. Though Polly held her head high, she was suffering. The Polly Johnston, who smiled faintly at any remark and stared unflinchingly into the fierce Italian sunlight, was a woman fighting desperately against a terrified realization of what loneliness might mean to a middle-aged woman who had not looked ahead or contemplated it. A hundred times that morning Polly was ready to cry quarter; ready for any compromise that would leave her her Mary.

Claude Dabbs might have guessed something of Polly's plight and been sorry. He had fought his own fight, and come through it whole, like the sturdy soul he was. Had Polly but known it, here, in Venice, was a Claude who was actuated by no small, revengeful feelings, but moved only by a real and very friendly desire to help, and also to share Mary. But Polly, shuddering at the thought of lonely years without Mary's companionship, turned away with equal distaste from the thought of sharing Mary, and the grocery shop, with Claude.

How could Mary conceive that her mother, so long distrustful and scornful of any emotion save the maternal, could turn with relief to the thought of cold, circumspect Loren Rangeley, as contrasted with the Claude she remembered. Claude represented to Polly all the primitive emotions, with the disagreeable background of a shop. Not having seen Claude for twenty-odd years, she created an image of a fat, middle-aged grocer with the uncontrolled emotions of a young man. Always there was that shop in the background, and the image caused her to shudder.

"If you wish to dine with your father tonight, I shall not mind," she said to Mary as they turned toward the hotel and luncheon.

"Be reasonable, Mother," Mary pleaded. "Don't make me feel I've lost my mother because I've found my father."

Having made up her mind, Polly was one to carry things through gaily. "I'm afraid it will work out that way, but, of course, I've nothing to do with it."

"You have everything!" protested Mary vehemently. "It's all in your hands. Don't you see that Father—well, he just can't—unless you give some sign."

Polly's laugh did not ring pleasantly in her daughter's ears. "Claude Dabbs has been stating his case rather cleverly, I see."

Mary stood still on the bridge leading to their hotel, regardless of the crowd of chattering, staring Italians who were passing by. "Oh Mother, you don't get Father at all. He doesn't think he has any case. He thinks he must leave it to you. He feels he can't bring himself to your attention. Mother, it's awfully—delicate of him. You must see that."

"I only see that he is taking you from me, and I can see neither delicacy, nor any other evidence of good feeling in the process. Since it has to be endured, I'll endure, but I'm not kissing the hand that deals the blow. You will please discontinue the discussion, as long as you are in public, unless you can control yourself."

For the hundredth time that day poor Mary wondered why it was that those who loved one most, could, and did, so surely wound one. "I wasn't really going to cry, but if you will pretend to look at the boats for a moment, I'll pull myself together."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Poetic Imagery That Fixes Idea of Places

A memorial to Milton has been unveiled in the place which he made famous by his words "Thick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks in Vallombrosa."

Today the trees of Vallombrosa are mainly pines, and the "autumnal leaves" that fall from the few beeches and chestnuts scarcely seem sufficiently numerous to carry out the Miltonic idea of multitude. But the quotation is not likely to become any less popular on that account, and, in the minds of all lovers of poetry, the woods of Vallombrosa will remain thick-carpeted with leaves. It would also be of interest to trace the influence of the poets on our ideas of places. Thanks to Byron, Chillon is forever associated with a dungeon; and a famous sonnet of Keats has linked Darien with a sea view from a mountain. "Marathon braes" will always be bonnie, and the name of Afton will conjure up the vision of a peaceful stream gliding softly among green hills. These ideas may be truthful or the reverse—it doesn't matter. We shall never be able to rid ourselves of them.

Saves Postal Time

Mail boxes on wheels are proving a success in Amsterdam, where collection boxes are attached to the backs of trams going toward the general post office. At the halt in front of the post office the boxes are emptied and letters are rushed to the sorting rooms, saving several hours' time in collection.

IT WAS A NANTUCKET COMEDY

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

WHEN the breeze is just strong enough to fill a sail without flattening and the sun discreet enough to brim the summer girl's enjoyment to the verge of color and tan, there is no place superior to the shore waters of Nantucket. If Blanche Wilmot and Tom Howard did not think so in stereotyped form, it was all in the vivacity of their eyes and voices and motions.

"Now you trim the sail while I do the rudder," cried Blanche. "And which is the port and which is the starboard, so I can call out, and what is 'down bridge?' Susie Mills is forever telling me about their 'down bridges' when they go sailing, and say it's such fun. And bailing out—can't we bail out, Mr. Howard? We stay only a month at Nantucket. I want to learn it all so I can talk, too."

"Mr. Howard!" scornfully. "I'm Tom and you are Blanche. Weren't we properly introduced at the breakfast table, not an hour ago, and didn't that Susie Mills of yours mention that Nantucket has no frills? No one can like 'down bridge' and preserve dignity."

"No?" doubtfully. "Susie didn't speak of that—Tom. But what is it, and the rest?"

"Oh, just ducking your head to keep from being knocked overboard by the boom when it swings round. It's anything but fun, I can tell you, Blanche. Some boatmen are forever tacking when they're in narrow channels, and that keeps the boom swinging like a pendulum. And bailing—that's when a boat leaks. You can thank your stars not to have any of that."

"Pshaw! You're no true sailor," disdainfully. "I'd just love to have the boat leak. Couldn't we snag something—or—or foul a rock or strain a seam so she would spring a leak? It would be so salty, you know. But you didn't explain port?"

"Oh, that—that's the side one turns out when driving, I think—or maybe it's the other side. I'm not quite sure, just now. But, anyway, we don't need it. They say that and starboard in battles, you know, when they're going on board with cutlasses. But look out!" sharply. "You will spring a leak, sure, if you run into rocks that way."

"Well, how could I help it," Blanche retorted, "with your chattering? I couldn't listen to you and trim the rud—I mean do the rudder, at the same time. Sailors always look at the sky and things and meditate. Now, how shall we get off? The boat spins round like a hobby horse turning on a pole. I'll bet folks are looking at us from the hotel and laughing."

Tom gazed into the water speculatively.

"I suppose I could get out and push off," he said. "It isn't over three or four feet deep. But I'd get awful wet."

"Then you sit right there and hold on for your life!" cried Blanche, witheringly, as she sprang to her feet. "I'll jump overboard and push off myself. I'd just love to get wet. I—well," as Tom splashed into the water, "if you will, do it, you're slow for emergencies."

As the boat was pushed off the rock, almost causing her to lose her balance, and Tom clambered on board, she said: "Suppose you trim the sail. I want to learn it all."

"Crazy!" growled Tom as he edged by her to the cockpit and grasped the rudder. "I could have pushed off with an oar and saved this wetting—if I'd thought. Luff a little, Blanche."

"Let's see," sweetly, "that has to be done with the rudder, doesn't it, Tom?"

"Oh, well, maybe it does," irritably, "but you'd be owlish if you had streams of water coursing down your back and flooding your shoes. And we're right in front of the hotel. Likely 200 of the 300 guests are looking at us and making remarks." He was silent for some moments, then added: "And I bragged a whole lot to some of the fellows about my—my saltiness."

"Poor Tom," laughed Blanche. "But I'm in the same boat. My talk was horribly salty this morning. I'm afraid we're in for general congratulations when we get back."

Tom groaned, kicked the water from his shoes, then laughed.

"Only a month, did you say, Blanche?"

"That's all. And papa made a whole lot of trouble about that. He doesn't like the seashore, and only gave in when I promised to be a good girl and consider his wishes in the fall. You see, I'm escaping and wanted to get as far off as possible, in hope of making it permanent."

"Queer," quoth Tom, "I'm escaping, too. Only mine's to be all summer. And I'm studying how to make the thing permanent."

Blanche looked interested.

"What's your trouble?" she asked. "A girl?"

"Yes, money in two families. Got to be united. All cut and dried without asking me."

"Why don't you jump overboard, as you did just now?"

"That's what I'm thinking. But it means disinheritance and I've never earned a cent in my life. It's something that calls for a mental struggle through silent watches of the night."

"Is the girl nice looking?"

"Never saw her. But how is it with you?"

"Just the same. Money, money, money, and I never saw the man, either."

Tom leaned forward, his eyes shining.

"Look here, Blanche," he cried, "let's elope. That'll settle the whole thing for both of us."

"Why Tom Howard!" in dismay. "We haven't known each other two hours yet."

"What of it?" boldly. "We both like the water, don't we, and we've got to do something."

"But get married, after two hours, and not know a thing about each other!"

"Well, tomorrow'll make twenty-four hours more and a month will be thirty whole days. And we'll be out every day boating and talking. Isn't that enough?"

Blanche drew a long breath.

"I don't know," she answered, doubtfully. "We'll see. But I wish the other Howard—mine, you know—had a little more of your brains. I wouldn't mind him so much then. But T. Folkstone Howard! Pah! It makes me think of a dancing master!"

Tom turned red and then purple; but the last was with laughter, held back.

"So the other fellow's a Howard, too?" he choked. "And a Folkstone! What a cad! But don't you suppose, Blanche, that might be the adolescence of college days, to be outgrown? Why, I once heard of a girl who budded at Wellesley as B. Gladys Clorinda Wilmot. Don't you think that a name to run away from?"

"You—wretch! Are you Thomas de Folkstone Howard?"

"Guilty, with no extenuating circumstances."

Blanche stared, bit her lip, then sank weakly upon a thwart.

"Tom," she said, faintly, "let's go in now, before anything more happens. I've had all I can stand today. Tomorrow we'll start all over again."

Rammed Earth Houses Old Contsruction Type

Homes and barns with walls of rammed earth have attracted the attention of the people of many states, as well as people in foreign countries, says R. C. Miller, agricultural engineer at the North Dakota State college, who has devoted considerable time to the study of rammed earth as a possible means of cheap and reliable building material in his state, according to the Pathfinder Magazine.

Rammed earth is an ancient type of construction. The writings of Pliny state that watch towers of this material constructed by Hannibal were used 250 years after completion. This method of construction was introduced into France by the Romans, so the story goes, and later was adopted in England. In the United States there are a few examples of buildings that have been constructed of rammed earth. One of the buildings, a house, is now standing in Washington, D. C., and was built in 1773.

The type of earth has a great deal to do with the adaptability to rammed earth construction, according to the Department of Agriculture. The cost of construction with rammed earth, as suggested, varies with the labor costs, thickness of wall, and the distance which the earth must be hauled. Several other factors also enter into the cost. The cost, however, is usually much less than building with other material.

Early Jewish Colonies

Shortly after the founding of the city of Newport, R. I., about 1641, there was an emigration of Jews, who founded a colony at Newport and who in return for the religious liberty established by Roger Williams contributed materially to the prosperity of the colony. A synagogue was erected. Outstanding members of the colony were Aaron Lopes and Jacob Rodriques Rivera, who were merchant princes of Spain. A poem by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow is dedicated to the Jewish cemetery at Newport. There were also colonies of Jews exceedingly early in Boston and Connecticut, but these were few and unimportant compared to the colony in Rhode Island.

Honor Great American

On the one hundred fiftieth anniversary of Henry Clay's birth, last April, work began on the erection of a statue of the great American statesman in Caracas, Venezuela. South America still remembers the services he rendered it when he spoke in the United States house of representatives, demanding that we recognize the revolting colonies of Spain. He is as much a hero to the Venezuelans as Lord Chatham or Colonel Barre were heroes to our own forefathers.—Youth's Companion.

Engagement Ring

An old Roman custom decreed that on the completion of an engagement to marry the man should give the woman a plain iron ring as a memento of the contract. This came to be made of gold, and was exchanged at the ceremony, but another ring was still given to bind the contract. To differentiate this from the plain gold band it was set with a small stone. These rings were placed on the third finger of the left hand, because it was believed that this finger communicated directly with the heart.

SAMUEL'S FAREWELL

LESSON TEXT—I Samuel, Chap. 12.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thy loving kindness is before mine eyes and I have walked in Thy truth.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Samuel the Faithful Servant.

JUNIOR TOPIC—An Old Man's Advice.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Make a Clean Record.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Righteousness in Public Life.

Samuel means "asked of God." God gave him in answer to his mother's prayer. She promised to give him back to God. In his early childhood his mother cared for and taught him. At an early age she handed him over to the care of Eli to minister unto the Lord in the Tabernacle. While he was thus engaged God called him. He responded to this call and spent a long life in useful service to God and his nation as judge and prophet. Our lesson today is his farewell address.

I. Samuel's Challenge to the People (vv. 1-5).

1. Reminder of the way the king had been given (v. 1).

He showed that they were directly responsible for the change in government. Though keenly feeling the reflection upon himself, and their ingratitude to God in their demand for a king, he had not resisted their wish.

2. Review of his own administration (vv. 2, 3).

(1) Walk from childhood (v. 2). Samuel's was a remarkable life; from childhood to old age he had lived an upright and pure life. (2) Career as judge and ruler (v. 3). He boldly challenged them to show where and how he had even in the smallest matters defrauded or oppressed anyone.

3. The vote of confidence by the people (vv. 4, 5).

It was Samuel's right as he laid down the reins of government to have his record vindicated and to have his integrity established beyond a doubt, so that no evil-minded man could ever be able to cast reproach upon him.

II. Samuel Reviews God's Dealing From the Time of Moses (vv. 6-15).

He reasoned with them concerning the good hand of the Lord upon them from the time of Moses. Though they with ingratitude turned from the Lord and demanded a king like the other nations, He had acceded to their request and set a king over them.

1. National prosperity conditioned by obedience (v. 14).

Though they had displeased God in choosing a king, if they would fear the Lord and render obedience, national prosperity would still be given. Would that the nations today could see that obedience to God is the only way to prosperity! Nations should find out God's will and then bring themselves into harmony therewith. God's law must be obeyed by the rulers as well as the subjects.

2. Disobedience to God meant the nation's ruin (v. 15).

It is folly to ask God's blessing upon a nation while it is living in rebellion against Him. True statesmanship is to find out God's will concerning the nation and so direct that in all its laws and customs there may be harmony with that will.

III. Samuel's Own Vindication (vv. 16-19).

This was such a critical hour in the history of the nation that Samuel sought to indelibly impress its meaning on their hearts. This he did by means of the thunder and rain out of season. Harvest time was not the season for thunder and rain, so when it came at the call of Samuel the people were affrighted. They saw it as an example of God's mighty power which, if directed against them, would destroy them in an instant.

IV. Samuel's Gracious Response (vv. 20-25).

1. "Fear not—serve the Lord with all your heart" (vv. 20-22).

Samuel did not minimize their sin, but assured them that if they would serve the Lord wholeheartedly He would not forsake them. The ground of their hope was in the faithfulness of God in keeping His covenant. "For His name's sake" shows that God's honor is at stake.

"God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you" (v. 23). Though the people had rejected Samuel, yet he had such magnanimity of soul that he has not allowed their ingratitude to stop his intercession for them. Such failure he regarded as sin for himself. He assured them that in spite of their sin their one concern should be to fear the Lord and serve Him wholeheartedly.

WHO IS A FRIEND?

Who is a friend? I will tell you. He is a person with whom you dare to be yourself. Your soul can be naked with him. He seems to ask of you to put on nothing, only to be what you are. He does not want you to be better or worse. When you are with him you feel as a prisoner feels who has been declared innocent. You do not have to be on your guard. You can say what you think, so long as it is genuinely you. He understands those contradictions in your nature that lead others to misjudge you. With him you breathe free. You can avow your little vanities and envies and hates and vicious sparks, your meanness and absurdities, and in opening them up to him they are lost, dissolved on the white ocean of his loyalty. He understands. You do not have to be careful. You can abuse him, neglect him, tolerate him. Best of all you can keep still with him. It makes no matter. He likes you. He is like fire that purges all you do. He is like water that cleanses all that you say. You can weep with him, laugh with him, pray with him. A friend, I repeat, is one with whom you dare to be yourself and whom you can trust.—Anonymous.

Real friends, like good books, are rare,
And should be chosen with much care.

NEW MONUMENTS AND MARKERS

Just recently, in Riverside cemetery, a number of monuments and markers have been set, and particular attention is called to that of the C. C. Curie monument. We also noticed the new marker for S. L. Widney and upon inquiry we learned that Chas. E. Madden of Butler is responsible for this fine addition to the monuments of the cemetery. For style, they cannot be excelled and for quality of the stone as well. Mr. Madden, of Butler, has many monuments placed in this cemetery, due to his many years in this business and we compliment him on this fine addition.

TURNING POINT OF WAR FOR FREEDOM?

Victory at King's Mountain of High Importance.

The battle of King's Mountain stands unique in warfare. It was a fight between an army representing the British government and a volunteer band of American patriots without army equipment who collected for the purpose of protecting their homes and wreaking vengeance on an enemy which had been hanging and plundering those who resisted the authority of the British king.

To say that they saved America is not covering them with undeserved glory. When the battle of King's

Col. John Sevier, Who Borrowed State Funds to Equip His Men for the Battle of King's Mountain.

Mountain was fought the patriot cause in America was at low ebb. Benedict Arnold had turned traitor, the South was overrun with the enemy, tories were active and jubilant, Continental money was worthless and the government was bankrupt. The psychology of the situation was all against Washington and his soldiers. Then came the feat of these southern patriots like a gleam of light through the darkness. The news spread quickly that the South was beginning to shake off the yoke of the oppressor once more. Men who were wavering took on fresh courage. The army passed through its terrible winter at Morristown without disbanding and then with the coming of spring America's fortunes began steadily to rise.

The events leading up to King's Mountain may be briefly told, writes Frank P. Litschert in the National Republic Magazine. With the surrender of Charleston to the British the situation of the patriots in the Carolinas seemed steadily to grow worse. Many men gave up their arms and took the protection offered by the British crown. It seemed that the rebellion in the South Atlantic region had been crushed. There were some patriots, of course, like Sumter and Marion, who refused to submit, and left their homes to the torch of the enemy, retreating into the wilderness.

So was the army of mountain men disbanded after a brief but glorious career. Its work was important. As Irving tells us, King's Mountain turned the tide of southern warfare, disarranged Cornwallis' plans and made possible the final result. The patriots in the Carolinas were encouraged, the tories disheartened. The entire aspect of affairs was changed.

All honor is therefore due to these hardy men of the mountains and wilderness, real soldiers worthy of the name America. To quote from Governor Taylor of Tennessee in an address to the memory of one of their leaders, John Sevier: "They were not Don Quixotes, seeking ridiculous adventure; nor Hotspurs risking fate for fame, but they were men built from the ground up, with homes and families to defend. Every man was a soldier, every woman a heroine and every cabin a fortress."

HERE is our text for this, the one hundred and forty-ninth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence: That the destiny of this republic is guaranteed neither by history nor tradition, however glorious, but lies in the hands of millions of Americans now alive.

LINDBERGH DID NOT WISH

Young men the world over have, with mingled feelings, read of the achievement of the youthful Charles Lindbergh. Admiration and pride in the glory of his feat has been most generously given by all—still what young man is there who has not "wished" that the opportunity had been his—and that he could have "zoomed" through to such everlasting glory?

The now "Colonel Lindbergh" MADE his opportunity. An unknown air-mail pilot, he SAVED part of his earnings. When the hour arrived he had $2,000 saved to offer on the altar of sincerity—and obtain the support of young business men of St. Louis. He was the largest individual contributor to the fund which made the flight possible.

NO FORM of government is preordained to permanence. The whole history of government denies it. The American hope is simply that ours may live without interruption by clinging as long as possible to the formula of our fathers and, when that program can no longer be reconciled to changing times, to adapt it to new conditions and new experience. This was the intention of the founders who intimated clearly in their construction that they considered it neither sacrosanct nor incapable of new development.

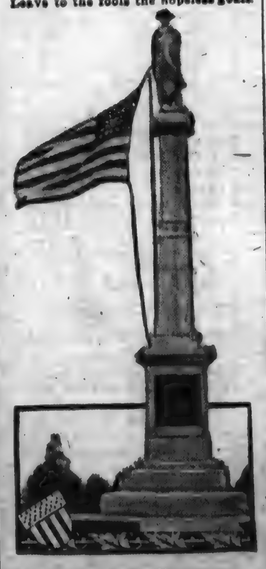
CHRISTMAS DAY AT TRENTON, YEAR 1776

When the Light of Freedom Was Rekindled.

Footprints in the snow. . .
The road is slow.
They plunge and stumble; sharp flakes blind.
Crust bites knees. Bare feet freeze.
Tear on ice. . . . And still they go
Over the road on Christmas day,
The road to Trenton Christmas day,
The dark road to Trenton,
The deep road to Trenton,
White before—and red behind.

Footprints in the snow. . . .
Hopes are low
For those who dare dream to be free.
In New York town, the oath to the crown
Is the popular thing. Hear the word go:
"There's no more war this Christmas day."
"The king has mercy Christmas day."
"We're loyal subjects. . . ."
"We were misled. . . ."
"We will prosper. Let us be."

Footprints in the snow. . . .
Weeks ago,
All have left but stubborn souls.
When defeats, brought retreats,
The sane went home. Sane men know
It's good to be home on Christmas day,
With the wife and children Christmas day,
To sit near the fire,
Wallow in warmth,
Leave to the fools the hopeless goals.



Trenton Battle Monument.

Footprints in the snow. . . .
Hear them blow
The roof off the barracks with a song
Mug on mug. Jug on jug.
Vanish in laughter. "We'll all go Back to Hesse after Christmas day."
In the warm town of Trenton Christmas day,
The sleek town of Trenton,
The roaring town of Trenton,
They say the word: "It won't be long."

Footprints in the snow. . . .
Wind gusts blow
The rags aside, and stab and freeze.
Farmhands with gaunt, flaming eyes
Drag to the battle, just to show
That stubborn men on Christmas day
Are as stubborn as on other days.
Mules have a right
To die like gentlemen.
Men lie frozen near the trees.

Footprints in the snow. . .
Bugles blow.
They crouch and charge, raggedly lined.
Muskets bark. Cannon spark
To flame and thunder . . . Years ago
A party was spoiled on Christmas day,
A cause rekindled Christmas day
On the road to Trenton,
Gay, sleek Trenton,
White before—and red behind.

JURORS FAIL TO REACH DICISION

Evenly Divided on Whether Wm. N. Lake, Teacher, was Guilty of Assault and Battery

The jurors that heard the case of the state against Wm. N. Lake of Spencer township, for assault and batery were evenly divided on the question of finding him guilty.

After they had deliberated over the case for six and a half hours, the jurors reported to Judge Endicott at 9 o'clock Tuesday night that they could not agree and they were discharged.

Mr. Lake was a teacher in the Spencerville schools and Dr. B. O. Shook complained that he committed an offense against the law when he punished Richard Shook, 13, on last April 1. Richard and other witnesses testified that the teacher kicked him with the toe of his shoe several times and that he slapped him so severely that his face was swollen. It was also alleged that the boy's shoulders were made black and blue when the teacher seized him. Mr. Lake told the jury that Richard was disobedient and defiant and while he admitted punishing the boy he denied being as severe as alleged.

GOD'S REVELATION OF HIMSELF

In the Hebrew version of the Bible we find three words, all translated "God" but in themselves showing an enlarging conception or revelation of the Divine One.

First in the word Elohim, meaning the Great Almighty.

It has not been hard for the human family at any time of its history to think that over and above all is a great power. Only the fool and liar hath said, "There is no God." The fool, becausee he is a fool has said it. You might as well leave him to his folly. The liar because he loves a lie rather than the truth has said it, thereby trying to deceive himself and others.

Second in order is Jehovah, meaning God in covenant relation to man. The redemption name of Diety.

Practically all of the church and most of others believe that God has, not only created man, but also covenanted to work for his highest good.

Third is the word Adonai, meanig Lord and Master. The Great Almighty has not only created and provided for man but has also laid claim to his affections and will. As Lord and Master, He has a right to implicit obedience. And man as servant has a right to direction in his service. Man secures unto himself the privileges of the redeemed, only as he chooses God to be his Lord and Master and surrenders to Him. Thereby consecrating himself by his own will to the will of God.

CORN BREAD

Lucy Chandler Fuller

"I want a piece of corn bread," declared Jimmie, reaching across the table in an attempt to help himself.

"Not until you have finished your supper, Jimmie," said his mother kindly but firmly. "But not at all if you are rude," she added.

"I don't want my wheatena," shouted the litle boy and he began to dish out his cereal on to his butter plate. "I won't eat it."

"See here, young man," said the father, glowering at Jimmie, "you calm down and behave yourself."

"I want corn bread and syrup," yelled the boy, every muscle tense, his little face flushed and his eyes glowing. "I don't like this stuff."

"I'm about ready to thrash the kid," muttered the father under his breath.

"You know the rule, Jim," said the mother. "No dessert until you have finished your first course and no dessert at all if you are impolite."

Somehow with much spluttering and slopping Jimmie managed to swallow his cereal. "Now can I have my corn bread?" he angrily asked.

"No, dear," replied his mother, for you have been very rude indeed."

Then the storm broke. All the passion in the little fellow's being was let loose. He stamped and kicked and screamed and threatened to take the corn bread. When his mother could get a word in amid the din she reminded Jimmie of the justice of her action but Jimmie's anger only waxed the hotter.

"A real Indian would never act like that," finally suggested the mother.

Jimmie stopped yelling and began to look interested.

"He would take his punishment like a real warrior," continued the mother.

"And eat his own corn bread the next day for breakfast," put in the father.

At those words the clouds burst again and through the storm the father demanded of the mother, "Why do you distract his attention. Let him yell. You will undo all the good you have done."

The mother did not reply although she could hardly keep from saying, "He's had his punishment. Why rub it in? Let's help him recover his self-control." Instead she quickly left the table, picked up the kicking, screaming Jimmie and carried him off up stairs. He was a load but somehow she reached the nursery, dropped the child, found his story book and began reading the bedtime story.

From force of habit Jimmie started to undress himself and suddenly he was all intent upon the story. By the time his teeth were brushed the corn bread was entirely forgotten and Jimmie snuggled down in bed with his Indian feathers on his chair beside him and his thoughts focused on the little Chinese boy who helped his mother by gathering grass for fuel.

The next morning as the mother was making a bed she heard a patte of feet and felt arms grab her around the knees. She turned around to look down into the brown eyes which smiled at her as Jimmie whispered, "I'll try to do what you tell me to."

The mother could hardly keep the tears back as she put her arms around the little form. "I know you will, Jimmie, and Mother's going to help you do it," she whispered back.

DAIRY FACTS

BACTERIAL COUNT IN MILK PLANTS

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In an effort to help the average milk-plant operator locate the causes of sudden "hops" in the bacterial content of bottled milk, Ernest Kelly, in charge of market milk investigations, bureau of dairy industry, United States Department of Agriculture, is conducting a study of at least 100 representative plants. "It is important that the count be kept as low as possible, and although increases during handling may be relatively small it is of considerable help to the plant operator to know where and why any sudden increases are likely to take place.

Data secured from 20 plants studied to date show that certain operations in the plant, such as sterilization of equipment and storage, are more apt to be slighted than others, and that noticeable increases in bacteria take place as a result.

The discovery that decided jumps in bacterial count often take place after the milk has been bottled and while in storage awaiting delivery has led to the further study of temperature conditions in the average storage room. Two men are now engaged in this work and are making observations in a number of storage rooms, noting the differences in temperature in all parts of the room. Daily variations as great as 34 degrees Fahrenheit have been noted.

It is expected that the complete study will reveal the specific operations that need to be watched with particular care to keep the bacterial count of the bottled milk at a minimum. Such a guide as to possible sources of trouble should be of considerable value to the milk plant operator who is not in a position to employ a specialist.

Buckwheat and Products Make Good Dairy Feeds

Ground buckwheat and other buckwheat products are valuable feed for cattle, for they may be used as a partial substitute for, or as a supplement to wheat bran and gluten feeds, according to the department of animal husbandry at the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y.

The total digestible nutrients in ground buckwheat are worth about the same as those in oats or wheat bran, providing the buckwheat is properly mixed with other feeds. A suitable, medium-protein mixture, containing ground buckwheat, may be made of 300 pounds of ground oats or barley, 200 pounds of ground buckwheat, 200 pounds of cotton-seed meal, and 100 pounds of oil meal.

Buckwheat middlings contain 1,532 pounds of total digestible nutrients in a ton and more than 24 per cent of digestible protein. This refers only to the middlings from which the hulls have been removed, and, in this form, some dairymen consider them equal to or better than gluten feed for milk production. A mixture containing buckwheat middlings may be made of 200 pounds of bran or oats, 300 pounds buckwheat middlings, and 100 pounds cottonseed meal.

When comparing the prices of buckwheat feeds with other standard feeds, ground buckwheat may be compared to wheat bran and buckwheat middlings to gluten feed.

Milking Cows Require Some Grain on Pasture

Under average New Jersey conditions, pasture alone is not adequate for cows in milk. Experience has shown that they need a grain mixture containing 12 to 16 per cent protein, says Carl B. Bender, assistant dairy husbandman at the experiment station, New Brunswick.

Many of the more successful dairymen follow the practice of feeding sufficient grain to keep the animals from losing flesh because of production stimulated by the pasture grasses. Care is taken not to turn the cows out until the grass is five inches high, and for the first few days they are left out only an hour or two. This is to avoid grassy and garlicky flavors in the milk and to avoid intestinal disorders.

As a means of prolonging the life of pastures the experiment station suggests dividing the area into four or five lots and moving the cows from one to another every five or ten days. In this way the animals are assured of a good supply of fresh grass throughout the season.

Even where pasture grass is ample and fresh, a good supply of clean, fresh water has been found highly desirable.

China Buys Dairy Cows

Apparently the revolutions in China are not expected to upset the demand for dairy products. A Vancouver firm, acting for a large dairy concern at Shanghai, reports that within the next two years the Shanghai dairy will add 200 head to its herd of 300 and British Columbia as well as Western Canada breeders will be called on to supply the new stock.

Orders have been received for 80 pure-bred Jerseys and 10 Holstein cows, to be shipped at an early date.

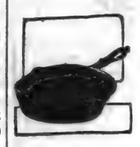
CAMP COOKING

The camping season is upon us and the good camper is one who is able to get along and be happy with few of the comforts of the home. For the housewife who is dependent upon her modern equipment to aid in making housekeeping a pleasure, the simple outfit of the real camper would find her helpless. We need to get away from the conveniences which make life so enjoyable, to really appreciate our blessings, while the novelty of going without and using our own ingenuity, is a source of pleasure.



The camp cook who can produce a good meal, with the background of a hunk of bacon, a frying pan and a sack of flour or meal, is worth further acquaintance. He builds a fire, making a stove of stones, on which he places his frying pan; then when the sizzling pork or bacon is cooked, in it he lays a freshly caught trout or other fish rolled in seasoned meal and fried to a crisp deliciousness that satisfies the hungry appetite of the most fastidious.

Fish fresh from the running brook, broiled before a fire held by two sticks, will give the uninitiated the taste of a savory dish which civilization can never produce.

The variety of foods that are good and wholesome which may be found in the woods, besides fish, flesh and fowl, are many. The common leek when boiled and served with a drawn butter sauce is delightfully appetizing. Eaten raw they are used as green onions and in salads. To prepare the drawn butter cook a little flour and butter together until thick; add boiling water and cook until smooth. Of course bacon fat can be used if butter is not obtainable.

Those who are annoyed by all the outdoor insects, the rough roads and long waits for bites when fishing, who cannot dress for the part or go unhampered with weight and ready to enjoy even the discomforts of simple foods prepared in the open, would better remain at home, for such companions spoil the feast for the camp lover.

The delicious field of woods mushrooms growing in such abundance, will make a full meal when well prepared. Knowledge of the common kinds of edible mushrooms must be had before it is safe to pick them.

Household Hints.

Ripe fruits are so perishable that they should never be bought beyond a day's supply unless in camping season.

An orange that shows signs of softening should never be given to children. Overripe fruit is dangerous and may cause illness if eaten.

When it is possible to choose, have plain woodwork, free from carving and creases where dust will lodge. Well varnished woodwork is easy to clean.

Have the work table covered with zinc or one of the enamel ones, to save scrubbing.

Keep plenty of soft paper to wipe out greasy dishes and kettles and save the hands and dishwashing.

Wear rubber heels; they are a great saving on nerves as well as floors.

Insist upon doors, drawers and screens being closed quietly. The nervous system pays toll alike for jarring sounds and sights.

Dishes will double their service by careful handling, as well as silver and cutlery.

A dust mop in place of a broom will remove dust without stirring it up. The mop may be shaken outdoors.

Small rugs that can be taken out of doors to be aired and cleaned are best for sleeping rooms.

Rocking chairs take up much room, mar woodwork and shins, besides being found in too great number in most homes.

Tufted furniture is hard to keep clean and is not to be recommended.

When one has a few bits of leftover fruit of different kinds, add to gelatin and serve as a salad or dessert.

When making lemonade save the lemon cups to use in different ways. They make pretty receptacles for fish sauces or cocktails and are nice for dessert or salad cups.

Prophecy Fulfilled

There are several lakes or streams in different parts of the world with which are connected strange stories. One is Lake Chrissie, four miles from Ermelo, in the eastern Transvaal. When the Dutch emigrants from the Cape first settled in the Transvaal an old Kaffir medicine man predicted that some day the lake would become dry, and then the Boers would lose their independence. This prophecy was fulfilled when the Boers were subjugated by the British.

HOW MRS. WEAVER WAS HELPED

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

As Mrs. Weaver herself says, "I was never very strong." This is a mild statement describing her condition, for, according to her letters, she was subjected to no small amount of ill health. Fortunately, her sister was familiar with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and begged Mrs. Weaver to try it. "After three or four weeks," writes Mrs. Weaver, "I felt a great difference in myself. I would go to bed and sleep sound, and although I could not do very much work, I seemed stronger. I kept on taking it and now I am well and strong, do my work and take care of three children. I sure do tell my friends about your wonderful medicine, and I will answer any letters from women asking about the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Lawrence Weaver, East Smithfield St., Mt. Pleasant, Pa.

If you knew that thousands of women suffering from troubles similar to those you are enduring had improved their health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, wouldn't you think it was worth a trial?

In some families, the fourth generation is learning the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

A BATH TUB
that tests automobiles

S-P-L-A-S-H through the bath tub goes the General Motors car. Out onto the slippery road it dashes. On go the brakes!

What is the reason for such torture of an innocent automobile?

The answer is that the engineers at the General Motors Proving Ground take nothing for granted. They want to know what happens when a car ploughs through water. They insist too on measuring, with special machines which they have built, just how quickly the car can be stopped and just how much pressure of the foot is required to stop it.

Altogether General Motors has 136 different tests by which cars are proved as they never have been proved before; nothing is left in doubt. All of which means that you are buying doubly assured safety, reliability and comfort when you choose a General Motors car.

STEAM PRESSURE BEST FOR BEANS

Must Be Processed at Temperature Over 212 F.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

String beans may be canned successfully at home if you use a steam-pressure canner. Like nonacid vegetables, string beans must be processed at a temperature higher than 212 degrees F., and this is only obtainable under steam pressure. Either glass or tin containers may be used. String beans should always be packed boiling hot. The advantages of what is now known as the "hot pack" are that the material at the center of the can is quickly raised to the temperature required for processing, the "exhaust" step is done away with, and a better product, in flavor and texture, is obtainable.

The United States Department of Agriculture gives these directions for canning string beans:

Pick the beans over carefully, string, wash thoroughly, and cut into pieces of the size desired for serving. Add enough boiling water to cover and boil for five minutes in an uncovered vessel. Pack in containers boiling hot, cover with the water in which they were boiled, and add 1 teaspoonful of salt to each quart. Process immediately at 10 pounds pressure, or 240 degrees F.—quart glass jars for 40 minutes, pint glass jars for 35 minutes, and No. 2 and No. 3 tin cans for 30 minutes. Remove the jars from the canner, and invert glass jars, placing them out of drafts. Plunge tin cans in cold water to cool quickly.

String Beans Must Be Processed Under Steam Pressure Whether Canned in Glass or Tin.

Mark all jars and cans for later identification. Keep them at room temperature for at least a week.

Tasty Cheese Straw Adds Needed Flavor to Salad

Sometimes a tasty cheese cracker or cheese straw adds just the touch to a salad that is needed to make it seem a course out of the ordinary. Accessories of this kind are especially good at lunches or suppers when guests are invited, or for serving with a salad that is the main dish among party refreshments. Cheese straws may be included by way of variety on any occasion where sandwiches or crackers would be served. The United States Department of Agriculture gives the following recipe for making them:

Cheese Straws.

1 cupful flour
½ teaspoonful salt
4 tablespoonfuls fat
1 cupful grated cheese
1-16 teaspoonful cayenne
2 tablespoonfuls water

Cut the flour, salt, fat and one-half of the cheese together with a biscuit cutter until the mass is blended. Add the water and mix well. Toss on a slightly floured board and roll two or three times until the dough is smooth. Sprinkle one-half of the remainder of the cheese and roll again. Repeat this until all the cheese is used. Roll the mass out about one-quarter inch thick. Cut in strips one-half inch wide and six inches long. Place the strips on a baking sheet and bake until a delicate brown in a moderate oven about 400 degrees Fahrenheit.

Flavor of Curry Helps Vegetables With Rice

The flavor of curry in sauce need not be limited to lamb or chicken, although many of the East Indian dishes in which this flavor was introduced to the Western world were made of these meats. A combination of vegetables with rice can be made tasty and unusual if a little curry powder is added to the sauce. The bureau of home economics gives the following directions for making a vegetable curry:

Vegetable Curry.

½ cupful rice
1 cupful diced onion
1 cupful diced carrots
1 cupful fresh or canned peas
1 cupful diced celery
4 tablespoonfuls butter
½ teaspoonful salt, or to season
¼ teaspoonful curry
3 teaspoonfuls worcestershire sauce

Wash and cook the rice in three pints of boiling salted water. Drain and let it stand over steam until the grains swell and become separate. Cook the vegetables in a small amount of water and just before removing from the stove add one cupful of canned peas, or if fresh peas are available, cook them with the other vegetables. Use the liquid from the vegetables, and add the salt, curry and worcestershire sauce. Make a ring of the cooked rice, placing the vegetables in the center, and pour over them the liquid mixture. Serve very hot.

When Mother is Alarmed!

CONSTIPATION, biliousness, coated tongue, feverish headache, sick stomach—then is the time when mother relies upon Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. "My son had been constipated and bilious since birth. At the age of five he had such an attack of sour stomach and bad breath I had to take him out of kindergarten. It was then I gave him Syrup Pepsin. He improved from the first dose and soon was back to school completely restored and healthier than he had ever been before. It is a great comfort to have a medicine for children in which we can have such implicit confidence." (Name and address sent on request.)

Wins Confidence of Old Folks

Old people are charmed by the gentle, kindly action of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. No pain, gripe or depressing "flushing" of the bowels. Just an easy movement and the fine feeling of restful comfort. There's seldom any real sickness in the home that learns to use Syrup Pepsin at the first sign of coated tongue, fever, biliousness, headache and such troubles due to constipation. Noiseless Screen Doors

The constant banging of a screen door in summer is unpleasant, and it is very hard on the door. It can be prevented by fastening one-inch pieces of felt or very thin pieces of cork on the part of the door-frame where the door strikes. They may be nailed on, but are best glued, and when glued will remain in place a long time. There should be one piece near the top of the door and another near the bottom.

This applies also to any other door and to cupboard or bookcase doors.

Professor Forgot All About Dinner Party

The absent-minded professor who, starting to dress for a formal dinner, thought he was getting ready for bed and was found there by his wife, has a rival for wool-gathering honors in a certain English dean. This dean had invited some friends to dine at his house, and on their arrival a little ahead of time he suggested that in the interval of waiting they might like to walk through the grounds.

After spending a quarter of an hour admiring the flowers, shrubs and greenhouses, they came suddenly upon a door in the wall. "Ah," said the dean to his astonished guests, "this will be a much nearer way home than going back to the front," and all unconscious of his invitation he opened the door and bowed them out.—Boston Transcript.

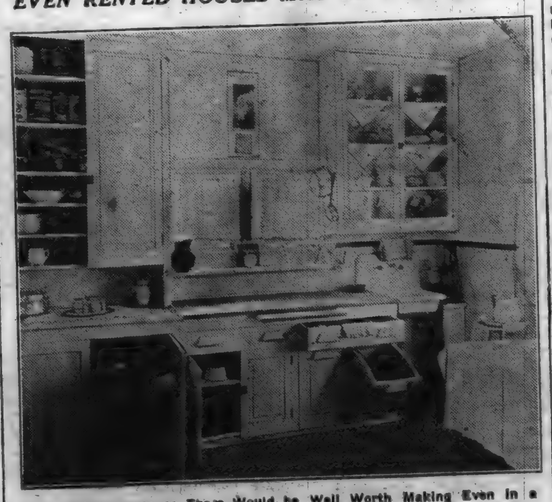
EVEN RENTED HOUSES MAY BE CONVENIENT



Such Improvements as These Would Be Well Worth Making Even in a Rented Home—A Few Cupboards, a Counter, or Drain Board Next to the Sink and Storage Places for Supplies, Dishes and Saucepans are Handy.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

It is true that when you rent a home you must accept most of the stationary features as they are. In looking about for a place to live you make the best choice you can. But unfortunately sometimes interest and attention stop right there. You say, "It does not pay to spend time or money on somebody else's property," forgetting that what you would really spend both for would be your own comfort and pleasanter working conditions.

You will pass a great deal of time in the kitchen. Why not begin by looking at it critically, to see what improvements could be made without too great effort or expense? Are the walls and woodwork a cheerful color? A little paint will make them so. If you cannot persuade the owner to do it for you, paint them yourself. Choose a warm tan or soft yellow for the walls in a room that needs sunshine; a cool gray in one that already receives plenty of light and sun.

Work Centers Arranged.

How are the work centers arranged for preparing food, cooking, serving, clearing away and dishwashing? Can you move any part of the equipment so as to save steps? Farmers' Bulletin 1513-F, "Convenient Kitchens," will give you some good suggestions as to how this can be done. The United States Department of Agriculture will send the bulletin free on request as long as the supply lasts.

What about the height of the various working surfaces? You can put blocks under the legs of a kitchen table so that you do not stoop over it. If the sink is too low for your height, set a box or pan in it and rest the dishpan on that. Put rollers on anything that must be moved frequently, such as the table or wood box.

Curtains Brighten Workroom.

Get some fresh curtains made of sturdy washable material to brighten up your workroom. Gingham or unbleached muslin would be inexpensive and answer the purpose. In fact, in every room where it is not possible to make other changes, curtains will help to give an attractive, individual note.

Glance about the rest of the house and see what can be done to make it livable. Before moving in the furniture look at the woodwork, walls, windows, and floor and see if they need any treatment which you could give without much outlay. Paint and varnish help wonderfully. Think over your furniture, and make up your mind to do without any ugly or unnecessary pieces, and to put away any bric-a-brac or pictures that only require extra work and care. Put a pole in each bedroom closet for clothes hangers, and make shoe bags or racks.

CHANGES IN THE NEW GAME LAWS

Although many radical changes were made in Indiana fish and game laws this year, game wardens of the Department of Conservation report but few violations of the new laws. Undoubtedly, the wide publicity given the new laws tended to prevent violations thereof.

One of the most important things a person must know before starting out to fish in Indiana is that he must have a license if he fishes outside of his county. Children, however, under 18 years of age need no license to fish, but the new law in cludes women as well as men. The wife of a man who has a license cannot fish on her husband's license as formerly. Another thing of importance is to be able to identify the different kinds of fish, inasmuch as no less than 14 different kinds of fish are protected by either size limit, bag limit non-sale or close season.

Non-residents coming into Indiana to fish must have a license. The same costs $2.25. The price was formerly $1.00. Indiana hunting, fishing and trapping licenses now issued are good only for the calendar year. Those issued prior to May 16th, the date the 1927 acts went into effect, are valid for the full term of a year from date of their issue, having been issued under the previous law. The holders, however, are required to fish, hunt and trap as per the new laws.

One of the new laws that has been violated to some extent already is the one protecting squirrels. Unfortunately, many persons do not know the difference between the red or pine squirrel and the fox squirrel. The former game laws made it unlawful to kill or possess any kind of squirrel during close season, December 1st, to August 1st. Under the new law, red or pine squirrels (but no other) may be killed at any time. There are but few red squirrels in Southern Indiana. In that part of the State hunters seem to labor under the impression that the fox squirrel is the red squirrel. Through ignorance, they have have been openly killing time. The squirrel season opens as formerly on August 1st, but closes on November 1st. The season was shortened one month. The bag limit is 5 per day with sale unlawful, except for breeding purposes.

Some persons have come to grief for taking yellow or ring perch less than 7 inches in length. There are only two kinds of perch native to Indiana waters, namely, the yellow or ring perch, and the pike-perch, wall-eye or jack salmon. A good many different names are given to the yellow perch, and in some Indiana lakes these fish do not attain a maximum size due to inbreeding and lack of sufficient food. The difference in color and size has led persons to believe these fish are of different species, when in fact they are yellow perch of a dwarfed kind. Experiments have been carried on at the state hatcheries that are proving valuable in increasing the size of yellow perch in our lakes. For a number of years the Department has been planting fry and fingerling yellow perch reared from brood stock brought down from the Great Lakes where yellow perch grow to a maximum size of a pound or more. The introduction of these young fish in lakes containing dwarfed fish has already increased the size of yellow perch in a number of lakes. It is unlawful to catch or possess a yellow or ring perch less than 7 inches in length, or to sell them for bait. There is no bag limit on them. There is no pike-perch, on which the size limit is 15 inches and the bag limit 6 per day.

Some controversy is going on relative to the limit of fish per day one may take of protected species. The question has been asked whether a person who has caught a combined string of bluegills, crappies, rock bass and red-eared sunfish, may in addition catch 6 black bass, etc. The answer to this is that as long as he does not exceed the daily bag limit as set down by law or the various kinds of fish, he can take or possess the daily limit of all kinds. In other words, he can possess 6 black bass, 6 pike perch or wall eye; any number of perch, and the legal limit of all other kinds. It is now unlawful, however, to have in possession at any time more than two days' catch of any particular kind or kinds of fish protected by bag limit. A live box should at no time contain more than 12 bass, or more than 50 bluegills, crappies, rock bass or red-eared sunfish combined, or more than 12 pike-perch or wall-eyes. Yellow or ring perch may be held in any number, as can also pickerel.

Another section of the new fish laws not well understood refers to the number of fish two or more persons may take when fishing from a boat. Under the new law each may take the limit as now provided for by law. The old law reducing the number of bass when two or more were fishing from a boat was repealed. However, it must be understood that each person must keep the fish he catches separate for the inspection of wardens. When a person is hired to row a boat, the fish he catches must be charged to the others in the boat.

The thirty-two clubs to whom pheasant eggs were shipped have not all reported as to their success in hatching the eggs. Those that have done so seem to have had fine success with them. In all 1,674 eggs were distributed. It is expected that the birds reared will be released when old enough.

Deliveries of fish are going on from all of the State fish hatcheries. Present prospects are that the output of fish will equal or exceed that of 1926.

The spawning of bass and several other species of fish is still going on in some of the lakes and streams. The season has been late and very poor for the reproduction of fish, especially in the streams of Indiana.

SPENCERVILLE OLD SCHOOL REUNION

The fourteenth annual meeting of the Spencerville School Reunion was held Thursday, June 30, 1927 in the Comunity Hall. About one hundred members from near and far gathered for this reunion.

The ladies of the M. E. Church served the dinner which was one enjoyable feature of the day and greatly appreciated by all.

After the dinner hour the president, Mrs. Winifred Shook, called the meeting to order and the following program was given: Song, America. The president very ably gave the welcome address. It was impressive and full of good thoughts. The response was given by Mrs. Katherine Lindstrom in a poem entitled, Back Home to Spencerville. A poem written by Thomas Devilbis was read by Rev. Walford Lindstrom entitled, We Are Traveling Fast. Song, Mr. H. N. Rumel; Reading Miss Ruth Houk; History, Dr. W. W. Carey; Dr. Wyatt delighted the meeting by a poem of his own composition entitled, The Spencerville School of 1874. Short talks were given by those who were present for the first time, Mrs. Mary Beidler, Mrs. Minnie McNabb, Mrs. Ida Herrick, Mrs. Wallace Chaney, of Auburn, Mrs. Rena Kentzelman, of Waterloo, Iowa and Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Rumell of Oklahoma City, Okla.

Contrary to the wishes of the present officers the Reunion voted to retain them for the following year, Mrs. Winifred Shook, president; Mrs. Jennie Walter, vice president and Mrs. Zona L. Abel, secretary.

The program and business meeting closed by singing "Bless Be The Tie." After which a social hour was spent. As the day was very warm ice cream and cake were served which aided to relieve some of the heat's pressure.

Others that came from surrounding cities were: Dr. and Mrs. W. W. Carey, Dr. and Mrs. Andrew Wyatt, Mr. and Mrs. C. A Patterson, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Beams, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Beams, Mrs. Fannie Beams, Mrs. Sylvia Furnish, Mrs. John Fairfield, Mrs. John Benninghoff, Will Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Develbiss, Allen Bowser, Mrs. Rosamond McCrory, Mrs. Flora Poole, Mr. and Mrs. Will Hart, of Fort Wayne; Dr. G. E. Emanuel, Cicero Emanuel, Edgerton, Ohio; Rev. and Mrs. W. Lindstrom, Mrs. Ella Fisher and daughter, Miriam from Pleasant Lake; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Wise, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Kresley, M. E. Leighty, Mrs. B. Kail from Auburn; Mrs. Nellie Bishop from Bluffton; Mr. and Mrs. Will Olds from Lagrange, Ivan Fryberger, Goshen, Ind.; Mrs. M. J. Hull, Mrs. Laura Baltz, Mrs. Mary Paff and Mrs. Gladys Houk of Hicksville; Mrs. Rena Kentzelman, Waterloo, Iowa; Mrs. Frank Steward, Garrett; Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Hull, St. Joe and Mrs. Maggie Porter, Leo.

The day came to a close with thoughts of a day well spent and hoping to meet again on the last Thursday of June, 1928.

THE OLD SPENCERVILLE SCHOOL

Composed by A. R. Wyatt, M. D.
Fort Wayne, Indiana

I am dreaming today of the Spencerville School
As it was in seventy-four,
When we were young and happy
With our life work all before.

David Allen was our teacher
And certainly was fine,
But it took all his ingenuity
To keep his class in line.

We loved, we quarreled, we loved again
And sometimes even swore,
But when it came to the essential things of life
We were loyal to the core.

There were so many of us
That when we met for morning prayers
A goodly number had to sit,
Upon the school house stairs.

There were Bishops and Murrays and Ericks,
There were Herricks and Emanuels all,
There were Tyndalls and Zimmermans and Rummels
And also Dora Hall.

There were Scotts and Olds' and Hendersons,
Millie Sigler and Irena Partee,
There were Blakes and Carnses and Kinseys,
And also Lizzie Gee.

The Slillings came over from Concord,
And Frank Scholes from Coburn Town,
Frank Walter came over from Springfield
And Will Shatto from Hudson came down.

The Walkers came over the river
And the Beamses from the County Line,
The Shutts and Murphys and all the rest
Were usually there on time.

There was a Cook to cook our breakfast
There were Bears to hug us tight,
There were Horns to call to dinner
And a Silberg that would fight.

One morning after a nasty quarrel
Steve hit me on the nose,
He scratched my face and blacked my eye
And badly mussed my clothes.

The teacher kept us after school
And urged a compromize,
So we shook hands and were friends again,
But told no more big lies.

Poor Steve is dead and can not tell
His side of this affair,
But I know it can all be verified
By my old friend, L. E. Bair.

Lem Bair was my seatmate,
And a loyal friend was he.
And we were always busy
As busy as could be.

We always had our lessons,
And one time we used a key.
Our classmates looked in wonder,
But the trick they did not see.

We courted the girls together,
As you may surmize,
But always tried to get back home,
Before the sun would rise.

We had no automibiles
We had no areoplanes,
So we trusted to old Dobbin
To guide us through the lanes.

Old Dobbin was so gentle
When we needed one more hand,
We wrapped the lines around the whip,
We knew he'd understand.

We did not have a typewriter
And we had no telephone,
But the sentiments we expressed with pen and ink
Were very sweet in tone.

And as I look around me
I am constrained to say,
That the results were just as satisfying
As they are today.

Oh we had a wonderful school
In eighteen seventy-four,
When we were young and happy
And with our life work all before.

We think of those days with pleasure
We remember them also with pain.
When we know they have passed forever
And can never return again.

Many have passed over the river
And others are far away,
But we are thankful for the very few
Who are meeting here today.

Oh I long to return to the school on the hill
And meet my old schoolmates once more,
And say hello and how are you,
As we did in seventy-four.

And drink my fill from the old school well
And sing and play for awhile,
But alas I know this can never be
So I sit and dream and smile.

WE'RE TRAVELING FAST

Composed by Thos. D. DeVilbiss

In my boyhood days we traveled slow
Through the mud, the rain or the drifted snow;
Seems quite awhile, yet not long ago
We were all satisfied—at least it seemed so.
It was never too dark, the moon never too low
That we didn't see our girls off ten miles or so.

Oh the girls in those days were pious and sweet;
They seemed just like angels, lovely and neat;
We loved 'em, adored them, they seemed so complete
Their dresses hung lovely and down to their feet,
But oh what a change now everyone sees
They paint those lovely faces and even their knees.

We first traveled horse-back—Then came the "Shay"
Later "four-wheelers" were thought to be gay,
Soon "Rubber- tired buggies" became quite the fad
To go Buggy Riding was joy to maiden and lad.
Well bred horses would pull these rigs fast
But soon they too became a thing of the past.

Bright "Safety Bicycles" next were our pride
It was sport to take your girl for a "Tandem" ride.

Then came the Auto with power and pep,
One place to another was but a hop-skip and step
With plenty of gas always ready to go
Even now they are getting a little "too slow."

Now comes flying in Airplanes, over building and tree,
Leave here this morning—In Paris at three;
What will come next we sure do not know
When like poor "Dobbin" planes are considered too slow.

Perhaps we may stay wherever we are,
And be able to hear and see things both near and far
With Electricity and Radio we're living so fast,
Even distance and time may become a thing of the

FREE MOVING PICTURES NEXT MONDAY EVENING

Uuder the supervision of the St. Joe Fish and Game Protective Association, the entire community is invited to join them in seeing three extra fine moving pictures, at the new Community Gymnasium at 8:00 o'clock on Monday evening, July 18, absolutely free of any charge whatever.

The films are as follows:

Battling With Muskies

This film has been proclaimed the finest action picture of the fighting tiger of the North ever filmed. Every fish is landed by bait casting—no trolling. The scene is Hudson, Ontario, located amidst the primitive outdoor country of northwestern Ontario. Few game fish possess the battling ability of the 'lunge and in this film we find him at his best. Leaps, dashes, thrills and excitement accompany every foot of this movie and the alert handling of the muskies by Ivar Hennings, President of the South Bend Bait Company, adds materially to the exclusive featurs of "Battling with Muskies." This is the newest fishing film taken under the supervision of Raymond S. Peck, Director of the Canadian Government Motion Picture Bureau.

In Quest of the Bronze Back

Those that love the wild leaps and dashes of the fighting smallmouth bass will enjoy this film. Bait and fly casting for these beautiful bronze-backs are seen throughout the reel. Camp life as well as fishing is portrayed in this movie by Cal Johnson, well known writer of the outdoors.

Fishing Gamely for Game Fish

A very interesting, educational reel portraying the finer points of bait and fly casting. The landing and handling of black bass is worth seeing.

The present membership of the local club is now 115 with a possibility of more. At least the organization is worthy of your membership because of the good it is doing. Already this season 300,900 minnows have been placed in the St. Joe river, which means that eventually fishing will be restored to near primitive state.

Tell your friends and come.

Be Sure of

Your Vision

So great is the percentage of those having defective vision and so frequently are the ill-effects of poor eyesight attributed to some other cause, that you can not afford to merely guess that your eyes are normal. Even if you are now wearing glasses, changes may have occurred in your eyes that make new glasses necessary. Some common indications are: HEAD ACHE, PAINS IN THE EYEBALL, PAINS AT BASE OF THE BRAIN, A PRESSURE AT TOP OF THE HEAD, EYES SMART and BURN, SUBJECT TO DIZZY SPELLS. If you are wearing glasses they may need changing and if you are not, it may be you should be wearing them. Come in and without obligation on your part, we will give you an HONEST EXAMINATION and a SQUARE DEAL.

Known Products—Dependable Homes

MOST home-builders cannot become experts in selecting the material for their homes. In your building be certain that dependable materials are used throughout. The best way to assure yourself of this is to insist that nothing but known products are used. We have supplied the material for a number of satisfied home owners here—owners who will be permanently satisfied with their investment. Our building material was selected to make good construction possible for you at reasonable cost.

EVERYBODY CAN HELP MAKE NEWS BETTER

A good newspaper is the result of cooperation, not only of the news staff, but of the readers as well. The news gatherers, running here and there and asking questions, find only a small proportion of the news that makes up any edition of a newspaper; the larger part comes from information furnished by the readers themselves.

A newspaper is a community enterprise, reflecting the life of the community. Big news does not develope every day, nor is sensation a part of small-town journalism. It is the every-day happenings, the joys and sorrows of our friends and neighbors, the humdrum events, that make a newspaper, and a good newspaper reports them all. But it cannot report them without the aid of its readers.

Some St. Joe people have the erroneous impression that they become publicity seekers when they call the newspaper to report happenings in their own family; others are too modest to report when they entertain, go visiting or other personal news items. People with such thoughts in mind should remember that a newspaper lives on news, and welcomes it from any reliable source. Without telephone calls, "tips" on coming events and other volunteer information the editor's life would be a hard one, indeed, and the newspaper scarcely worth reading.

The News appreciates the valuable service rendered by a large circle of volunteer reporters, and our readers also appreciate them because they help to make a better newspaper. They are the best friends any newspaper can have, and we want all we can get of them. When you have any sort of news, call News office and rest assured that you are doing this newspaper and every one of its readers a favor in telling us about a tip.

CORN BORERS DEFEATED

At least the County Corn Borers base ball team was given a good beating by the St. Joe base ball club, score 15-11.

This is the first defeat suffered by the Corn Borer Nine, they having won six straight games before. The Corn Borer Club consists chiefly of Purdue and H. S. graduates.

The home boys are doing their part, now come on you fans and do your stuff. Real base ball this summer will be the result.

Watch for bills for next game.

Silberg for $2,000, payable in six months; that the note was assigned to the bank and that it has not been paid. A judgment of $2,300 is asked.

OLD SETTLERS' DAY THURSDAY, AUGUST. 11

Old Setlers' Day will be observed on Thursday, August 11. The American Legion Jubilee will start on Monday and continue throughout the week.

It was agreed that the American Legion take care of the publicity and the part of the entertainment consisting of the free acts and that the Old Settlers' committee assume a share of the expense for the entertainment on Thursday.

Last year Old Settlers' Day was celebrated during the week of the American Legion Jubilee and the plan worked out so satisfactorily that the American Legion made a proposition to the Old Settlers' Day committee to again co-operate this year.

A number of committees were appointed for the Old Settlers' Day celebration, with W. H. Willennar as chairman of the speaker's committee and Mrs. Carrie P. Weaver, chairman of the registration committee.

F. E. Draggoo is the president, M. F. Long of Butler, vice president, Ashton Staman, secretary and W. C. McBride, the treasurer of the Old Settlers' Day committee and H. L. Brown and Frank Provines are the other members. Mrs. Clara Zimmerman is the biographer.—Star.

OBITUARY

George Washington Wade, son of George and Nancy Wade, was born August 24, 1843, Ashland county, Ohio, and departed this life July 12, 1927 at the age of 83 years, 10 months and 18 days.

His death was caused by a complication of diseases.

He came to Concord township with his parents in the year of 1854 and has ever since been a resident of this community.

He was one of seven children.

He was united in marriage to Sarah Mahala Points 58 years ago and to this union two children were born, Ida Mary, who died at the age of seven and Georgie Arrilla, who departed this life thirty-three years ago the 5th day of last May. His companion preceded him in death November 24, 1925.

He is survived by one grandson, Roscoe D. Rickett of Garrett, Ind., and one great grandchild, Vivian Maxine Rickett. He is also survived by a number of nephews and neices and cousins.

Brother Wade was a kind and genial neighbor. He was a Civil War veteran. He served his country with devotion and was a good citizen. He served in Company I of the 59th regiment of Indiana.

Brother Wade united with the Concord Methodist Church, February 5, 1883 and transferred his membership to the St. Joe Methodist Protestant Church April 14, 1915. He was loyal and faithful to his church and deeply interested in its activities. He gave liberally to its needs. He testified on his death bed that he was prepared to go. He was a man of great vitality and endured his affliction patiently and with fortitude. He will be greatly missed by his many friends.

The funeral service will be held at the St. Joe Methodist Church Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The services in charge of Rev. J. F. McKnight. Interment will be made in the St. Joe cemetery.

LIGHTNING BURNS MID-WAY GARDEN HALL

In a spectacular blaze Wednesday night at 11 o'clock, Midway Gardens, a dance pavilion owned by Howard D. Chapel, located near Auburn Junction, was destroyed. The fire started during a storm and undoubtedly was caused by lightning. Mr. Chapel was in Garrett at the time. The pavilion was closed and had not been occupied during the evening. Mr. Chapel states that he had invested $15,000 and that he carried $5,000 insurance on the pavilion, $500 on the contents, $500 on the engine house and $250 on the garage. He did not know Thursday whether he would rebuild. The first dance was held in the pavilion Decoration Day, 1924. The building was 50x130 feet in dimensions.

CURTAIN RINGS DOWN ON LIFE OF ROBERT COCHRAN

Robert Cochran, a very familiar figure on the streets of St. Joe this summer, passed away at the home of his son, Charles, Monday afternoon, after a few weeks illness. He was born two miles south of Butler, on July 7, 1846, and died July 11, 1927, at the age of 81 years and 4 days.

He moved to Illinois in his early teens and there married Mary Robinson, February 21, 1873. Five children were born to this union, George, Lettie, Charles, Bertha and Colman, of which Charles is the only one surviving.

His wife died on January 8, 1890, after which Mr. Cochran came to Indiana and here married Lucinda Baird on February 4, 1891, and who later died.

He was a Civil War veteran, enlisting in Company 118 Regiment of Volunteer Infantry on August 4, 1863 and served for three months. On the 27th day of March, 1864, he reenlisted for three years or during the period of the war.

He leaves one son, Charles, one granddaughter, Mrs. Areitta Wilcox and one great granddaughter, Carma Jean Wilcox, all of St. Joe.

Funeral services were held from the home, Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock, and the body was shipped to Elgin, Ill., where he has a family lot.

GIVES TIME TO DAILY SERMONS IN PAPERS

Rev. John R. Gunn, popular pastor of the First Bapsist church in Fort Wayne, resigned at the Sunday morning service after serving at Fort Wayne ten years. The resignation will take effect October 1. Rev. Gunn came to the Ft. Wayne church in October, 1917, and each year of his pastorate has seen a decided increase in the membership of the congregation. He leaves the ministry to devote most of his time to newspaper work, believing that the newspaper field offers him an opportunity of reaching a far larger number of persons with his message of encouragement and right living than the pulpit. For the last two years Rev. Gunn's daily sermonette, "Sermon for Today," has been appearing in a number of newspapers. He plans to supply the "Sermon for Today" to about 100 papers after October 1.

SWAGGER WAISTCOATS POPULAR; STYLING NEW COTTON WEAVES

A WAISTCOAT with every swagger two-piece tailleur is jotted down in fashion's notebook. If you have failed to acquire one or several waistcoats for your vacation outfit it is indeed a sin of omission. One, however, easily rectified, for both blouse and neckwear departments everywhere are displaying a marvelous array of vestees and waistcoats.

Many there are who prefer a waistcoat to a blouse, especially since the mode so enthusiastically indorses the leads up to a point of vital importance to the home dressmaker—the necessity of giving a most flattering attention to smart detail in the making of the wash-fabric dress.

Quality-kind cottons are now considered quite the proper thing for street and office wear as well as for informal "at home" affairs, also afternoon events at country clubs, which means, of course, that they must be fashioned accordingly. So smartly in the mode are the better cotton textiles former. Society is ordering flesh-colored, beige or white satin waistcoats mannishly tailored to a nicety. Waistcoats of pique, madras shirting and printed linens are also good looking. Other favored fabrics for the waistcoat are striped or plain broadcloth, pongee and jacquard rayon.

Most waistcoat styling subscribes to strictly mannish effects. The vertical or the double-breasted closing is adopted and in the more feminine modes the surplice effect is noted. Sometimes the front opening is scalloped, with pearl buttons adding to the effect. Notched revers and collars distinguish the smartly tailored waistcoat.

Sometimes crisscross tucking or sunburst tucks relieve the severity. In the softer gilet and vestee models, jabots are outstanding.

The vestee of Scotch plaid taffeta with cuffs to match is also a happy acquisition in the summer accessory collection. White crepe satin embroidered in metal or in black or in pure white, handsomely contributes to the waistcoat mode.

Not only is the mannishly tailored waistcoat in good style. Lacy lingerie effects are also competing for honors. Sleeveless lace waists are designed especially for wear with the jacket suit. These come in white and natural colors, also dyed tones and tints.

Many of the handsomest waistcoats of cloth or silk are bound with narrow grosgrain ribbon.

One cannot but be impressed with the enthusiasm shown for fine cotton weaves this season, from a distinctly fashion angle. Where once we were about to see silks and satins on dress parade, behold! today ravishing ginghams, satins, piques and the like have joined the procession. Which that for the most fashionable weddings stylists are preferably frocking the bridesmaids in organdie, either pure white or in pastel tints.

Not only are prints and ginghams stylish for daytime wear, but many charming dresses are now being made of solid-color weaves, such as cotton rep, broadcloth and handsome crepes; also rayon fabrics. Beige-colored cotton rep is the chosen medium for the attractive semi-tailored one-piece dress in the picture. There are inverted tucks at the shoulders with a "kick plait" at the front skirt hem. The scalloped collar, cuffs and pockets are bound with white washable braid. Note the effective placement of pearl buttons. Buttons for trimming are decidedly in evidence this season. This would be a lovely style to copy in pique, pongee or cotton broadcloth.

For street and for campus wear young girls are finding to their liking two-piece suits which include plaited skirts of plaid gingham topped with jackets either of velveteen or of solid-color wash fabric.

Coatees of printed linen or of a gay cretonne are very fashionable. With parasol to match these are charming.

Sport That Requires Nerve and Quickness

Though you may have never heard of this sport under its proper name, the quintain, you may have seen the apparatus described, especially in connection with stories of medieval and later sports in England.

The quintain is an apparatus used in military sport or as exercise by men on horseback. It is simply an upright post with a crossbar at the top that turns on a pivot. One end of this crossbar is flat; to the other end is attached a bag of sand.

The horseman rides at the post, endeavoring to strike the flat end of the crossbar with a lance and pass on before the bag of sand can swing around and strike him on the back.

To engage in this sport requires more than an ordinary amount of horsemanship, as well as a quick eye and a steady hand.

Railroad Grades

Any railroad grade of 2 per cent or over is uneconomical. Grade revision has progressed in this country until there are few grades of 2 per cent or over. The Denver & Rio Grande has 12 miles of 2.4 per cent grade westbound from Helper, Utah, to Kyune, Utah, and a 2 per cent grade from Soldier Summit, Utah, to Tucker, Utah, a distance of about fifteen miles.

Use Fish as Illuminant

The candle fish is still being used by the Indians in some parts of British Columbia for illuminating purposes. After catching the candle fish, the Indians place them in a dry, sheltered place and wait till they have shrunken and all the water has evaporated from them. They then set the head or tail of the fish alight and use the carcass as they would a torch. There is so much oil in the carcass that it produces a bright, steady flame which burns slowly.

With the pulling together process, Mary hardened her heart. If Mother was going to shut her out completely, she could not, of course, confide in Mother. Ordinarily she might have told her mother a little, if not quite all, about Ned Carter, especially as she had remembered thus late in the day Dorothy Selden's warning. Mary would like to know now just what it was Dorothy had hinted. But Polly Johnston barred every avenue of approach, and continued to keep the bars up during luncheon. So Mary went to the Accademia twenty minutes early, with mutiny in her heart.

Ned stood waiting in the doorway. His face was turned from her as she alighted from her gondola, and Mary had time to study it.

It was extraordinary, the effect this man had upon her. She did not like it. She was used to men, and to their attentions. Why should this good-looking grocer's assistant stir her in this manner? For one moment she contemplated flight. The next moment she rejected the thought as cowardly. Ned caught sight of her, and the look on his face revealed to Mary the extent to which this young man was enamored. Along with all the other emotions, she felt a sudden sense of power.

"Anything wrong?" Ned inquired, scanning her face anxiously.

"Everything! Where can we go and talk quietly until Father comes?"

"We could take a gondola."

"No! We could not!"

"Oh I say—" Ned began.

Mary interrupted. "I simply won't! Do be sensible and help me. What shall I say to Father? Mother found out last night. She was waiting for me when I came in."

"I thought her far too clever to be fooled long," commented Ned.

Mary continued: "Mother sent for —er—telegraphed to Mr. Rangeley, Mr. Loren Rangeley, to join her here."

Ned's exclamation made her look up, surprised. "How can you know what that means?" she asked, astonished.

"I—I'm not quite sure," Ned managed to say.

"It means that Mother will try to divorce my father and marry that cold-blooded fish—"

"Mary, don't! Loren Rangeley's my father!"

Only Ned's strong arm saved Mary from stumbling, perilously near the canal. "How can he be your father? Why, you're—"

"I'm Ned Carter Rangeley. I quarreled with my father. I told you all about that, long ago. That is, I told you everything except his name. You see, I wanted you to love—the grocer's clerk."

"It would be much easier than to marry Loren Rangeley's son."

"Mary! You don't mean that."

"I do. How could that be the reason for calling yourself 'Carter'? You did it before you ever saw me."

"I was tired of being just my father's son. I wanted Claude to like me for myself. Mary, you must believe me."

"I see my father," Mary interrupted. "I'm going to him."

"Not until I—Mary, marry me now, and then your mother won't marry my father, and Claude will have his chance."

"Utter and complete nonsense!"

"It isn't nonsense. You know it isn't. Mary, look at me. Is it such utter nonsense?"

"Father!" called Mary, moving quickly forward. "Here we are."

They moved together into the Accademia, and as Ned stopped to pay the fees, Claude and Mary went up stairs together.

"What's wrong, darling?" asked Claude.

Mary put her hand on his arm and drew him into a little room at one side, empty of sightseers for the moment. She noticed, with extreme annoyance, that it contained two or three paintings by Bellini. She feared she would always forget their beauty and only associate them with this most troublesome day of her life. "Mother knows," she said in a low voice.

"Well, that's all right," Claude answered easily. "Polly must know, sooner or later. I meant, what's the trouble between you and Ned?"

Mary decided that her father would be safe. "He wants me to marry him."

Claude looked at her. "The young devil! But I hardly blame him."

"He's Loren Rangeley's son."

"He couldn't help that. Don't you like him, Mary? Ned has sudden ways, but he's a nice boy."

"Father," announced Mary irrelevantly, "if you'll come behind that easel I'll kiss you."

"Sure," said Claude.

They came from behind the easel, presently. Claude studiously avoided a glance at the painting, which he privately thought too ugly for words.

"Don't ask me to look at any more big, fat women who wouldn't take any exercise, lost their figures, and yet would have their portraits painted," he begged Mary. "Let's find Ned."

But Mary protested. "He can wait. You don't know everything yet, Father. Mother's sent for Loren Rangeley. She's going to marry him for his money."

"Loren's got quite a pile," Claude agreed calmly, "but then, there's me. She'll have to get rid of me first. Unless she has?" He cocked an inquiring eye at Mary. Mary shook her head.

Ned joined them. Claude looked at him critically.

"Mary told me about you."

Mary gasped. Father was terribly direct.

"If there has to be a husband, right away," Claude observed to the Bellini in that room, "I'd rather it was Ned."

"If you'll come behind the picture of that big, thick woman, who's been roughly handled," Ned told him, "I'll kiss you."

"Don't be sickening," Claude warned him, as they moved away toward the entrance. "Where can we three go to talk about our lives in general, and have a little privacy. No churches, no palaces, and no picture galleries," he warned. "My feet ache at the very thought of them, and they are all full of gabby guides." He paused near the gondola steps, and considered a moment. "We can take a gondola—"

He was unprepared and a little startled by the mirth of his companions, but continued gravely and without waiting for an explanation, "and go to my sitting room."

He handed Mary in, and turning to Ned, surveyed him coolly. "On second thoughts, which are often best, we'll leave you to find your way there yourself, and slowly. I've something to say to Mary, and," he added with a look that quelled Ned's tendency to rebel, "there are times when a father and daughter actually like to be alone together, though you don't seem to think so."

A fatherly squeeze of Ned's arm helped Ned to interpret these remarks and to withdraw with better grace than Mary expected.

Ned Stood Waiting in the Doorway.

"What a comfort you are, Father."

"You don't have to marry Ned, you know, unless you happen to want to."

"Don't worry! Loren Rangeley will put his foot down. He knows Mother's money's gone. I'm only a poor grocer's daughter."

"Is your mother's money all gone?"

"Pretty nearly. That's why she's considering Loren Rangeley."

Claude considered her gravely. "Do you mind the grocery business, very much?"

Mary patted his arm. "Of course I don't. Only, Father, you're foolish to spend so much money traveling. When I go back we'll need to alter things a little. I can save you money by waiting behind the counter or keeping the books, until we see what I'm best fitted for. I do hope you'll let me ride around in the car with you when you deliver orders."

Claude's arm tightened about her. "You're my girl, all right," he said with husky voice. "But that isn't necessary. As a matter of fact, Loren will jump at the chance of getting my daughter for his son. Ned, of course, doesn't know this," he added quickly. "Ned thinks he's asking you to put up with what he's got. He has some of his mother's money, and he can earn more. He quarreled with Loren, you know."

"Why should Loren Rangeley 'jump' at me?"

Her father looked at her. She was so pretty, so lovable, and so unlike Polly, in that money meant so little to her.

"You see, daughter, I'm 'SCOUREEN' the 'Dirt Destroyer'." Then, in answer to her look of amazement: "You've seen the signs, surely. They're everywhere. It's a good article, too. I invented it out of Mom's old kitchen cleaner recipe. Then I had an idea for a fancy tin can. It caught on. It's years since I've been a poor grocer. At first I kept quiet about it—well, because of Polly. I was fool enough to fancy she'd come back, if I had money. I thought I'd keep it dark and go and find her myself, and surprise her. But I never did. There was a time, when I had no money, when I really wanted to find her; but after considering everything—well, I just couldn't. Remember, I didn't know about you."

"It kept piling up." Claude continued. "The money, I mean. If a man failed, and I as agent, mind you," and he twinkled at Mary over this time-honored joke, "loaned him money, blamed if his business wouldn't boom. He'd be paying it back to me in no time and I'd have all that spare cash on my hands. Money breeds money. I've spent all I wanted to, in a quiet way. I lived behind the grocery mostly to keep Aunt Lyddy happy, but I've had fun building and remodeling houses to suit me. The White house you and Polly lived in was one of them. I own nearly all of Clover Hollow. But, till I met Ned here, I never really enjoyed traveling about and using money on myself. I'm a kind of timid man about some things. With Ned, it's been grand. And you! When I knew about you, I knew what the money was for. Think of the fun I'll get out of just buying things for you! Now that Polly knows you know me, can't we go and do some shopping? I want to buy you all the things I've wanted to hang on somebody—and didn't know you were waiting for me."

"Father, we mustn't be reckless. I can't take it quite all in. How many thousand have you?"

"It runs nearer to millions, Mary."

"Mercy, what will Mother say?"

Claude, watching her face, saw it change.

"What are you afraid of?" he asked bluntly.

But Mary could not, or would not, say. Her father helped her from the gondola.

When they entered the sitting room, he said: "You're not afraid of me?"

Mary shook her head. "I simply love you!"

"H'm. I'm always afraid of those I love getting away from me."

He watched her remove her hat, and then move about the room. It was lovely, she told him, to be in his rooms. Still Claude had a feeling she was not at rest.

"If it's Ned, you needn't be uneasy," he told her, cryptically. But Mary apparently did not hear.

Claude went to the balcony and looked down.

"Here's Ned now. Pretty prompt you are. I said half an hour."

"It seemed half a century," Ned told him, coming straight toward Mary. "Well, have you talked me over thoroughly, and come to the right conclusion?"

"Funny, isn't it," drawled Claude, as he saw Mary color, "but we had other things to talk about. When Mary mentions it, we'll take up your case. The question to consider just now is, are you prepared to face your father?"

"Father! Coming here?"

Claude nodded, surveying Ned coolly, but avoiding Mary's eyes. "You see our advantage. We can decide what we're going to do—and pull the strings."

Ned, still astonished, looked at him in silence. He wondered, confusedly, whether this could be the explanation. Was Claude Dabbs the agent for Loren Rangeley? There was no time to follow that train of thought at present, but he would return to it. "I see. Take the wind out of Mrs. Johnston's sails, eh!"

Mary rose with decision. "I'm going back to Mother. Father, you can see that I can't—"

"Can't join in with a lot of men as let a woman down, you mean?"

Mary looked at him dubiously. "I—well, something like that, only—"

"Only you wouldn't have put it that way. That's called sex-antagonism, daughter. Don't you trust me any more than that? I'm a man, but do you think I'd hurt you, or let Polly down for any man?"

"Father, it's all perfectly horrid. I'm so mixed up. I love you, and I do trust you, but Mother—well, she's mother."

"Sure," agreed Claude. "It would all be quite plain and simple if Polly hadn't muddled things up. It's the children who suffer from mixed motives and marriages. Well, my girl, we'll make it plain and simple again. All I ask of you is to stay here and give Mr. Rangeley, the elder, some tea, and keep him waiting while I go and talk to your mother."

Mary gasped. "Mother will never see you!"

"I think better of Polly than that," said Claude, and was gone.

Her Banking Account Really an Economy

Angelica did a little mental arithmetic with her fingers.

"Well, I didn't buy anything much—just a dozen pair of stockings, a pint bottle of eau de cologne, two jumpers, a three-piece suit, some chocolates, that little fur tie I've been wanting for so long, one or two—"

"Here, hold up!" I exclaimed. "How much did you spend altogether?" I stretched out my hand. "Let's have a look at your check book. You can tell from the stubs."

But she had neglected to fill them in, so they gave no clew to her expenditure. After an hour's calculation, however, we worked it out at about $125, $25 more than she had deposited in the bank that morning.

"That's what I like about a banking account," my wife said as we went upstairs. "It's economy, really. How else could you make $100 go as far as $125?"

Age of the Oyster

For a young oyster to grow to adolescence requires four years in New England waters, and two years in the warm waters of the Gulf of Mexico.

The temperature of the moon at its noontime is 250 degrees Fahrenheit, as above the boiling point.

THAT WINNING NUMBER

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

YOU could tell by the important air with which the old man shut the gate behind him that he was not merely going out for a walk but with an object.

He had been intrusted with a commission—to buy something for the boy. And it was actually Coronna who was sending him.

During the six weeks that Abner Foster had been living at his son's house, by repeated snubs his daughter-in-law had indicated that she had poor opinion of "Father Foster's" abilities. But the sale of children's stockings at Donaldson's, advertised in her last night's paper, was to be between nine and eleven only; in the midst of her rush to get her breakfast dishes washed and an early start the kitchen sink had sprung a leak. Such a mess! And no telling when the plumber would come.

"I'll show her I ain't in my dotage yet," grinned Father Foster to himself as he entered the store.

And never did small stockings undergo such scrutiny as the four pairs selected by the old man who perched on the first vacated stool—gold specs perched on the tip of his nose.

"Your dollar purchase entitles you to a ticket in our prize pony contest," the clerk announced as she made out her sales check. "The drawing's to be in six weeks. Please fill out this card with your name, address and number of ticket for our record."

Even Coronna's sharp eyes could find no fault with the stockings proudly exhibited on his return.

"I forgot to give you the money," she said, "but you'll find a silver dollar on the dining-room shelf."

"I don't want any money," said Father Foster. "Them stockings are a present from me to the boy."

"Nothing of the kind," declared Coronna. "Some time you can buy Bobbie a toy if you've a mind to, but you've no call to get him things to wear."

"These stockings are my present," reiterated the old man obstinately. For he had reasoned it all out. If Coronna paid for the stockings he would have to give her the pony ticket.

"And nothing doing!" grinned Abner Foster. "Bobby's pony is to come from his grandpop and nobody else."

For the fact that countless tickets were in circulation did not make a dent upon the old man's confidence that he held the winning number.

His first intention was to wait and spring the pony on Bobbie as a surprise. But the drawing would not be for six weeks, and that evening when Bobbie climbed upon his knee and coaxed for a story, he could not resist telling the wonderful thing in store for him.

"A secret just between you and me and nobody else," he said in whispered confidence.

And from that time on the two were never five minutes together that they did not talk pony, while at least three afternoons a week they went downtown, hand in hand, to stand enraptured before Donaldson's window.

For in the window was a life-size effigy of a pony cut out of wood and highly colored in chocolate brown, with splotches of dazzling white. A pony with arching neck and tail. A spirited animal at full gallop.

"Father's perked up considerable," commented Bob Foster to his wife with a relieved sigh. "I was worried about him at first. He seemed to have lost his grip."

"Your father's an old man," said Coronna.

"And being turned off at the mills because of his age was a hard blow," Bob continued. "It wasn't easy, either, for him to pull up stakes and come out here to live with us."

"He ought to be thankful he had a good home to come to."

"I know. But it's kind of lonesome for the old man." His face lighted up. "He and Bobbie seem to have taken a shine to each other, though."

"Yes, since the Simpson children moved away and Bobbie has nobody to play with."

But the next morning a furniture van backed up at the house opposite where the Simpsons had lived, and that afternoon Bobbie informed his grandfather that a new little boy had come to live on the block.

"Just my size. He's sitting out on his steps now. I'm going straight over to make his acquaintance."

The old man's heart fell with a thud. When the Simpson children lived opposite he had seen Bobbie only at meal time. After the constant companionship of the last weeks how he would miss the child!

But in a few minutes Bobbie was back; his face blank with disappointment. The new boy was no good, he cold-bloodedly reported. He was a cripple, boy on crutches. And he couldn't run, or play ball, or climb fences, or anything.

Abner Foster's heart leaped up again. Bobbie was his once more. And only three weeks now until the drawing for the pony!

It was that very evening that Bobbie complained of his throat. By morning he was very sick. When the doctor came their worst fears were confirmed. It was diphtheria in the most virulent form; hopeless from the first.

Bobbie's death drew the father and mother closer together—and left out poor old Abner Foster more than ever. It was not intentional. Simply that it did not seem possible to the heart-broken parents that anyone else could enter into their grief's holy-of-holies.

Lonesome and forlorn, Father Foster sat on the bungalow steps one Saturday afternoon.

His son came at noon Saturdays and he and Coronna had gone to the cemetery with flowers.

"I wouldn't have went with 'em if they'd asked me," mused the old man, "but their not askin' hurt."

The letter carrier came in at the gate and handed him a letter. When he tore open the envelope and began to read the inclosed typewritten sheet the old man gave smothered cry.

He had forgotten all about it. The drawing at Donaldson's had taken place the day before. And this was their announcement that his ticket bore the winning number.

The sheet of paper dropped unheeded at Father Foster's feet, and burying his face in his hands he sobbed aloud.

"Did you fall and hurt yourself?" asked an anxious voice at his elbow. "I'm so sorry."

With a start the old man lifted his head and looked dazed at the little cripple on crutches from across the way standing solicitously before him.

"I fall so often myself I know how bad you feel," said the child with eager sympathy. "Or did something hit you?" The voice that had been so gentle suddenly flamed. "Those mean boys up the street are always throwing things when they know a fellow can't run after 'em—and hit back."

"Yes, something hit me," said the old man lifting a hand to his heart. "But it wasn't intended and I feel better now."

Wanly smiling at the child Abner Foster noticed the little cripple's pale, pinched, face—how thin were the twisted little legs—and the light of a sudden purpose sprang into the old man's eyes.

"Do you suppose, son," he said with tremulous eagerness, "that if somebody walked beside you and kind of steadied you with his hand you could ride a pony?"

"Sure I could," beamed the child. "But what makes you ask?"

First Bridal Shower Gift of Kind Hearts

The origin of the bridal shower, one of the prettiest customs that has survived the centuries, is, according to tradition, closely linked with the dowry. The story goes that once upon a time in old Holland a beautiful girl gave her heart to a miller, a young fellow who hadn't much in worldly goods, but whom every one loved because of his kindness. He was poor because he gave his bread and his flour to the needy. The girl's father forbade the marriage, and told his daughter that she could not have the dowry he had placed aside for her if she married the poor miller. He had selected what he considered a satisfactory husband for her, a man who owned a farm and a hundred pigs. The people to whom the miller had given bread heard the story and were sorry. They got together and talked the matter over. Too bad the beautiful girl would lose her dowry! Couldn't they do something about it? They didn't have much money, but each one thought of a gift he or she could contribute so that the miller and the beautiful girl could marry and have their own home. They came to the girl in gay procession, one with an old Dutch vase, one with plates for the kitchen shelves, one with linens made on the hand loom at home, one with a shiny new pot. They showered her with their gifts and gave her a finer dowry than her father ever could. Many brides-to-be should be grateful to the little Dutch maiden whose shower set such a happy precedent.

Closely related to the shower is the wedding present, the survival of feudal times, when tenants were bound to "render aid" at the knighting of the lord's eldest son and at the marriage of his eldest daughter.

Test Longer Rails

Experiments with rails of greater length than those now in use by the Japanese railways are to be conducted by that country. Because of a large number of accidents, attributed to poor rail joints and the fact that almost one-half of the maintenance cost of the government railways is spent in repairing, inspecting and bonding rail joints, the government is considering a change to a longer length rail.

An order for three and one-half miles of rails 18 meters in length recently has been placed in France by the department of railways and experiments will be conducted on a road built of these rails.

His Business.

In a certain case one of the counsel tried to serve his client by throwing suspicion on a witness.

The first question was: "You admit you were at defendant's house every evening during this period?"

"Yes, sir."

"State whether you and he were interested in any special transaction, business or otherwise."

"Yes, sir, we were."

"Ah!" exclaimed the counsel; "then you will be good enough to tell us the nature of the business in which you were jointly interested."

"I was courting his daughter."

SAMUEL ANOINTS DAVID

LESSON TEXT—I Samuel 16:1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT—Let no man despise thy youth, but be thou an example of the believers in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Shepherd Boy Chosen King.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God's Plan for a Boy's Life.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why God Chose David.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Discovering Future Leaders.

I. Samuel Mourns for Saul (v. 1).

1. Why he mourned. The death of Saul was, no doubt, a personal loss to Samuel, for Saul was a commanding and lovable personality. Then, too, the ruin of so promising a career would deeply affect Samuel. Finally the humiliation to God and God's people grieved his heart.

2. Excessive mourning rebuked. The fact that God had rejected Saul should have lifted Samuel out of his grief. Excessive grief over that which God does is a reflection upon Him and should be rebuked. When sorrow becomes a hindrance to the discharge of duty, it merits rebuke.

II. Samuel Sent to Anoint David (vv. 1-3).

1. Samuel's fear (v. 2). Perhaps by this time Saul was becoming a desperate character. Samuel still knew that if Saul should hear that he was taking steps to anoint a successor to the throne, his own life would be in danger. Samuel was wise in submitting this hard situation to the Lord. God's servants are to be brave. However, even when going on errands for God we should not court danger.

2. The Lord's direction (vv. 2, 3). The Lord smoothed the way for Samuel. He showed him how to perform his duty and escape the danger. Samuel was to take a heifer and announce that he was going to offer a sacrifice unto the Lord and to call Jesse to the sacrifice. The prophet was not told all that would happen. This is usually God's way with us. He gives us our work piece by piece, and guides us step by step. Samuel's purpose was known only to himself. It was to be kept a secret so that the news would not reach Saul. This was a shrewd device but entirely legitimate. We may conceal that which others have no right to know, especially when such a disclosure would be detrimental to the success of our mission. What Samuel said was true.

III. Samuel's Obedience (vv. 4-13).

1. The trembling elders of Bethlehem (vv. 4, 5).

Their unusual movement was an occasion for alarm. To the elders' alarming inquiry Samuel responded with the assurance of peace, inviting them to join him in worshiping the Lord.

2. Examination of Jesse's sons (vv. 6-12).

The Lord had revealed to Samuel that one of Jesse's sons was to be the new king, but not the particular one.

(1) Eliab rejected (vv. 6, 7).

Eliab was the eldest son and therefore he was the first presented as having first right to the place of honor. Furthermore, he was a splendid specimen of manhood, tall and majestic in appearance, so that even Samuel was captivated by him as he had been by Saul (10:24). Outward appearance is favorable, but the realities seen by God were against him. We frequently estimate men by their dress, cultural appearances, wealth and position. These are only surface manifestations and frequently lead us astray, but God looks into the heart.

(2) David chosen (vv. 8-12).

All but one of Jesse's sons had been looked upon, but still the Lord's choice had not appeared. Jesse's reply to Samuel's question as to whether all his children had appeared seems to imply that David was not of much importance. At any rate he was only a boy, while his brothers were already young men. He was considered good enough to watch the sheep, but not to be called to the feast. This is ever the way of man. He overlooks the very ones whom the Lord has chosen for places of honor and influence. Because David was faithful as a shepherd boy, he was in line for promotion when God's given time arrived.

3. David anointed (v. 13).

When the shepherd lad appeared, the Lord directed Samuel to anoint him. When the oil was applied the Spirit of the Lord came upon him. David was a gifted and attractive lad, but his gifts were of no avail without the Spirit of God. Only as we are anointed by the Holy Ghost can we truly do the Lord's will and work.

We Can Choose

We cannot tell what shall be on the morrow; but we can choose what we ourselves will be. We can resolve to live faithfully whatever betides. . . . We can walk with the bright angels, and wrestle with the dark ones, and oblige the flying hours to leave a blessing behind.—N. Y. Frothingham.

That Which We Do for Christ

That which we do for ourselves is forgotten; that which we do for Christ is immortal.

WHO MAKES INSURANCE RATES

Insurance companies writing fire and lightning insurance have for the past six years suffered an underwriting loss each year varying from 1.23 per cent to as high as 6.89 per cent. Income from invested funds which insurance companies maintain as reserves to protect policyholders had to pay the deficit on the business they wrote.

The fact is self-evident that there must be either fewer fires or higher rates.

Now comes the National Bureau of Casulty and Surety Underwriters, and for 1926 shows that automobile public liability insurance was for that year written at a net loss of $1,330,000 on total premiums of $108,800,000. The loss resulted in spite of the fact that the companies reduced the cost of writing business from 27.4 per cent in 1923 to 25.6 per cent in 1926, but loss ratios increased from 45.6 per cent in 1923 to 53.5 per cent in 1926.

The public has a real interest in the situation of the insurance companies. These companies cannot pull money out of thin air to meet losses—it must come from rates charged. As the individual is responsible for the majority of fires and accidents, he virtually establishes his own insurance rates, because rates are based on the law of averages.

It will be remembered that insurance is a self-imposed form of taxation and like all other taxation the rate is in the hands of the people.

TAXATION AND POLITICS

Inasmuch as legislative bodies—local, state and national—are constantly considering the tax question, the classic discussion of taxation which William Bennett Munro, the Harvard political scientist, gives in his book on Municipal Government is of interest. Mr. Munro says:

"Economists define taxation as the levying of certain compulsory contributions upon individuals and corporations in order to provide public revenue. The assumed purpose of taxation is to provide public revenue; its justification is the common benefit which comes from expenditure of this revenue. That is taxation as the economist sees it. But tax laws are not enacted by economists; they are the handiwork of politicians. And the politician has a very simple philosophy of taxation. To him, taxation is a system of levying compulsory contributions in whatever way will produce the least outcry. From the politician's point of view, the measure of taxation is not ability to pay but inability to resist. His favor leans to the element that can produce the votes. He tempers the wind, not to the shorn lamb, but to the ram with horns. Public sentiment, he says, demands a high tax on some things and a low tax on others. What he means of course, is that one element of organized selfishness is more audible than another. That is why the most desirable tax, in the eyes of the average political representative, is a tax on the estates of deceased persons, for dead men have no votes."

The foregoing is rough but simple and it hits the bullseye of truth.

If the politicians doubt this, they should check over the emphatic manner in which the people have voted on new tax-raising schemes and office-creating laws offered for their approval at recent elections.

Production at the Auburn Automobile Company plant reached a new high for June with 1,433 cars as compared with 546 for the same month last year, an increase of more than 160 per cent. Total production for the second quarter of the present calendar year reached 4,731 cars as compared with 2,491 cars for the same period of 1926, an increase of approximately 90 per cent.

While hauling gravel last week on the Newville-St. Joe road in DeKalb county, Claude Tarney's truck hit a stump in the road and threw him out. The truck ran a short distance, got into a rut, turned completely around in the road and started back toward Tarney. He captured the runaway and headed it in the right direction, suffering no injuries except a lame back.

At the intersection of the Auburn-Ashley road with the T. & C. pike, by actual count, out of 111 on the north and south road, passing in 1 hour, there were less than two out of ten observing the warning signs. 114 cars passed on the T. & C. pike this same hour last Sunday evening. While this corner is not obstructed, numerous accidents and fatilities have occurred here in the past few months.

DeKalb county exceeded its quota by $500 in the call for donations for the Red Cross Mississippi flood relief fund. A total of $3,541.42 has been sent to the National headquarters. The quota for the county was $3,050 which was double the amount first asked from this chapter as a part of the ten million dollar fund necessary to take care of the rehabilitation work in the regions devasted by the flood.

A suit to partition 38.83 acres of land has been filed in the DeKalb circuit court by Charles O. Cook aganist John M. Cook, Melvin Cook, Frank G. Cook, Nora Norrick, Homer Cook, Grace Waters, Jessie Barger, Milford Cook and Charles O. Cook as administrator of the estate of the late Mary E. Cook. The court is asked to appoint a commissioner to make the sale of the land and distribute the proceeds.

A sentence of thirty days at the penal farm and a fine of $10 and costs were passed upon Reuben Clouse, living east of Auburn on the Auburn-Newville road, when he pleaded guilty in the DeKalb circuit court Wednesday morning to a charge of driving an automobile while intoxicated. What led to his arrest, was the fact that he smashed into another car in Auburn, while driving 85 miles per hour. He said a stranger gave him the liquor.

The state auditor's office at Indianapolis last week announced that collections of gasoline taxes for the month of June amounted to $950,045.95. This is an increase over the same month last year of $105,245.30, when $844,800.65 was collected. A comparison of the first six months of the calendar years 1926-1927 shows an increase this year of $529,550.51. The figures last year were $3,857,112.39 as compared with $4,386,662.90 to date this year.

Reports of the completion of the Merritt Sechler road in Concord township, the Homer V. McCullough road in Wilmington township and the Ira Grogg road in Butler township were filed at the July session of the county commissioners' court. Our country is undergoing a revolutionary change in its fuel habits. Industries now demand an uninterrupted, economical and smokeless fuel service, and also give careful consideration to such contributing factors as liberation of storage space, payment after fuel is used, cleanliness and ease of operation. Gas seems to answer all these requirements, and is expected eventually to be not only our chief industrial fuel, but our major house heating fuel as well.

Personal pride is the motive that keeps people up to certain standards. A man buys himself new clothes this spring because his pride tells him his old suit looks too shabby. That same feeling should operate with regard to his home place, which in many cases looks altogether too run down. His pride should be just as ashamed of it if he rents it as if he owns it. Whether he is owner or tenant, he should be ashamed of having it look badly as a man is if he lets his clothes become covered with dust and grease spots.

SEEING BOTH SIDES

Lila Mae Marshall

"I just hate that old teacher, she gets so hard!" exclaimed ten-year-old, Tom, as he rushed in at noon, giving his cap a spiteful jerk as he removed it from his head. "I just wish I didn't have to go to school another day, to her. Do I, Mother? Can't I go to M.... to finish this term?" naming a near-by town.

"Wait a few moments, Son until we find out just what's wrong," quietly answered his mother. "You are putting it pretty strong; it must feel dreadful to really hate anybody. I always thought Miss Larson so pleasant and sweet-appearing. What's the trouble?"

"Well," replied the lad more quietly, "this morning she put a problem on the board for us sixth graders, and she put one figure down wrong, then gave us zero because we had the answer wrong."

"Why didn't some of you point out her mistake to her?" asked his mother.

"We couldn't 'cause she erased the problem as soon as we had it copied," replied Tom.

"Then how do you know she had it wrong, instead of you boys and girls?"

"'Cause, we do know, for we all had it alike, the problem and answers, and we looked in the book, and found where she made the mistake, so we know," answered the boy with conviction.

"All right, Son, if you know, you know, and that settles that part of it. Did any of you go to Miss Larson and tell her of her mistake?"

"Yes, Don Thomas tried to, but she would not listen—just told him to go to his seat and keep still," heatedly replied the lad.

"Well, Tom, no use to worry and get all fussed up over a little thing like that; it will all come out right, I'm sure," soothed his mother. She felt puzzled, however, for Miss Larson had nearly always seemed fair-minded and patient. The error, in itself was small, but results would be serious should she insist she was right when all the children knew she was wrong. They would lose confidence in her. The mother decided to try and prevent that if she could. After a few moments' silence, she asked, "Tom, how did Miss Larson look this morning? Sweet as ever?"

"No, she didn't," answered Tom, "she looked white and her eyes and nose were red as anything, and her hair wans't one bit pretty like it usually is, and she held her hand to her head so much."

"There is the cause of your trouble then, Son; your teacher is either not well or has troubles of her own. Were you all pretty good this morning, in school?"

"I guess not very," answered the boy, beginning to laugh, "we had lots of fun. Roy stuck a bent pin in the toe of his shoe, and, say,...you'd ought to have seen Sam rise when he stuck him."

"And what did Tom do?" asked his mother.

"Well, I threw a paper wad, and took Roy whang in the ear. He sure jumped."

"Say, Sonny, suppose you were a teacher with eighteen or twenty boys around, all acting as you were, and you just had to try to teach them something, whether you were sick or well, don't you think you'd be cross and unfair sometimes?"

"Yes, I s'pose I would," answered Tom.

"Mother," spoke up Tom's big brother, who was a senior in high school, "one of the finest things you ever taght me was to see both sides."

LINDBERGH DID NOT WISH

Young men the world over have, with mingled feelings, read of the achievement of the youthful Charles Lindbergh. Admiration and pride in the glory of his feat has been most generously given by all—still what young man is there who has not "wished" that the opportunity had been his—and that he could have "zoomed" through to such everlasting glory?

The now "Colonel Lindbergh" MADE his opportunity. An unknown air-mail pilot, he SAVED part of his earnings. When the hour arrived he had $2,000 saved to offer on the altar of sincerity—and obtain the support of young business men of St. Louis. He was the largest individual contributor to the fund which made the flight possible.

ECONOMY IN ELECTRIFIED HOMES

The Evening Eagle, of Wichita, Kansas, runs the following interesting account of how Mrs. F. D. Quinlisk of that city, "sold" her husband to the idea of labor-saving equipment in their new bungalow. She sought actual cost figures of operation and compared them with the service rendered. The Eagle said:

"She had figures which showed that it would cost 9 cents a day to operate an electric refrigerator as compared to 25 cents for ice. She discovered that she could operate her curling iron 10 hours for a cent, the iron an hour for 3 cents, the percolator 2½ cents an hour, the toaster for 2½ cents an hour, the vacuum cleaner for less than a cent an hour, table and floor lamps for .7 cents an hour, grill 3.4 cents an hour, dishwasher .7 cents an hour, electric fireless cooker 3.7 cents an hour, immersion heater 1.7 cents an hour, ironing machine 8 cents an hour, sewing machine .3 cents an hour, electric range 15 cents a day, vibrator .3 cents an hour, waffle iron 4 cents an hour and a radio set 14 hours for a nickel."

In her studies to sell a practical husband on modern electrical conveniences, Mrs. Quinlisk made a discovery which was news to her friends—electricity is cheaper than before the war, and it pays to wire a house for its use whenever possible.

WHAT IS IT TO YOU?

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life." John 3: 16.

God made man for himself then He lost him but still He so loved man that His love sought a way and found it that their fellowship might be restored.

God's love prompted the greatest gift possible for man—His-Only-Begotten Son, a Saviour.

God's love worked out a plan that is complete, universal and triumphant. Nothing to be added, no one is excluded, and even the devil and his angels are not able to change God's plan.

God's love offered this plan to mankind on conditions that are fair and equally accessible to all—namely, belief in and acceptance of His Son, Jesus Christ. Not by works but by faith are ye saved. Now, what will you do with Jesus, which is called the Christ?

Roy S. Brown, Minister.

SERVING CURRIED DISHES

In spite of the high seasoning, people who have visited India are enthusiastic in their praise of curry. It is ideal as a summer dish, but may be enjoyed in any season. There are all sorts of curry powders, but the following is one that may be prepared at home and you may be sure of its purity:

Curry Powder.—Take one ounce each of turmeric, coriander seed, white ginger, nutmeg, mace and cayenne. Pound well, sift through a fine sieve and bottle, cork well.

Mutton Curry.—Wipe a cut of meat from the fore quarter, cut into one-inch pieces—there should be three cupfuls. Put into a kettle, cover with cold water and bring quickly to the boiling point, drain in a colander, cover with a quart of cold water, drain again and put into the kettle with one quart of boiling water and three onions cut into slices, one-half teaspoonful of pepper corns, a sprig each of thyme and parsley. Simmer until the meat is tender, remove it, strain the liquor and thicken with one-half cupful each of butter and flour cooked together. To the flour add one-half tablespoonful of curry powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt and one-eighth teaspoonful of pepper. Add meat to the gravy with a border of hot cooked rice.

Tomato Curry With Lamb or Veal.—Mix a tablespoonful of curry powder with a quart of cooked and seasoned tomato. Put into a baking dish with alternate layers of uncooked rice, using one cupful. Bake until the rice is tender, cover with buttered crumbs and brown.

Food for the Family.

Here is a good emergency dessert to serve some time when there seems to be nothing to have for dinner: Stir up a soft biscuit dough and fill greased muffin pans half full. Make a hollow in the center and fill with a little marmalade or jam. Bake in a quick oven and serve with a hot lemon sauce.

Green Apples With Onions.—The new apples will soon be plentiful. Cut them without peeling and put to cook with a sliced onion or two, add salt, butter, and a bit of sugar if the fruit is too sour. Serve with meats.

If you like kidneys, try this:

Kidney Dish.—Take three veal kidneys and remove all the fat, cut a mild onion as fine as possible, add a small bunch of parsley shredded, add a tablespoonful of butter to a hot frying pan and drop the kidneys into it. Cover and steam 15 minutes, then pour over a half-cupful of sour fruit sauce and serve.

Minted Pineapple.—Shred half a ripe pineapple, leaving on the top and cutting out the core. Sprinkle with sugar. Wash, drain and hull one pint of strawberries, press them through a ricer and pour the puree over the pineapple. Have the mixture well chilled and serve in chilled glasses with a sprig of well washed mint; or a few leaves of chopped mint may be added to the mixture as it is chilling.

Potato Salad.—Take a pint of boiled potatoes cooked with their skins on. Cool, peel and cut into pieces, add one small onion finely chopped, a small cucumber cut into dice, and one cupful of finely cut celery. Add a hard-cooked egg or two and cover with enough thin dressing which is highly seasoned, to marinate well. When it has stood for several hours add a thick boiled dressing for serving.

Strawberry Icing.—Crush berries with a little sugar and a few drops of lemon juice and let stand until well blended. Mix into this fruit pulp as much confectioner's sugar as it will take and make a mixture to spread. Put on top and between layers of angel food baked in layer tins. Serve with or without whipped cream.

Delicious Muffins.—Pour two and one-half cupfuls of milk over three cupfuls of bread crumbs, let stand until soft, then add the yolks of three eggs well beaten, one cupful of flour, two tablespoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt and one tablespoonful of melted butter. Fold in the stiffly-beaten whites of the eggs and bake in buttered muffin tins about twenty minutes.

Lemon in some form should always accompany a dish of fish.

Photos of All Killed

Photographs of all of the thirty-three New Brighton (Pa.) men who were killed in the World war or who died in service, are now hanging in the hall of the New Brighton post of the American Legion. Two years' work on the part of post members was necessary to obtain all the photographs, the families of a number of the men having moved away from the city. The pictures were enlarged to a uniform size and placed in attractive frames.

Using Old Phonograph Records

OLD or cracked phonograph records become quite numerous in a family of children. One of the ways of using them to advantage after they are cracked or too worn to play, is to keep one on the ironing board to keep the iron polished. It is handier and quicker than a piece of beeswax that is too small.

There are other uses of old records which enable the children to learn the properties of wax and to construct things from it. The wax may be melted away from the other ingredients in the records by putting them in oil of turpentine, or by heating in boiling water. The other ingredients form a residue, leaving the wax on top. The wax can then be used for modeling various animals and toys. It can be used for waxing floors and furniture by adding turpentine to the desired consistency.

Articles that are exposed such as floors and doors will not warp or crack under the heat of sun or radiator if they are frequently treated with wax. A good floor wax is composed of two parts of wax and three parts of venice turpentine.

An Inexpensive Favor

COMBINING the practical with the novel and beautiful, the hostess may surprise her feminine guests with this bouquet made of the small articles every woman needs.

The small paper doilies used for ice cream service are made the base of the bouquet. The rest of the items may be purchased at the local variety stores. Spread next to the paper are ten artificial leaves with their wire stems running through the center of the paper to form the bouquet holder.

A deep rose ruffle of crepe paper is next sewed to the leaves. A spool of thread is wound in a lighter shade of rose paper. A thimble is also covered in this shade. A paper of hooks and eyes is rolled into a pale green shade of crepe paper cut like a poinsettia. Lingerie tape, black pins, a rolled package of needles and a few colors of embroidery floss are likewise partially covered with pale rose-colored crepe paper.

At first glance the favor looks like a bunch of small flowers.

The MILWAUKEE Road

Clean by Electricity

The uses of electric cleaners are many, especially those which can be reversed to blow as well as inhale. One was rushed into a coal mine at Bicknell, Ind., in 1923 to pump air to miners imprisoned by rock falls after an explosion. A householder used one last winter to blow warm air down between his house walls to thaw out a frozen water pipe. Another effectually defeated beetles whose larvae, previously uncapturable, damaged the rafters of an English castle. An American farmer uses one regularly each summer to separate leaves from berries that have been picked and spread out on a sheet.

IS A HEALTHIER STRONGER GIRL

Because She Took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The fertile valleys of Oregon help to supply the tables of America. This is possible through the magic of the humble tin can.

In one of the canning establishments, Julia Schmidt was employed. It was complicated work because she did sealing and other parts of the work. It was strenuous work and she was not a strong girl. Often she forced herself to work when she was hardly able to sit at her machine. At times she would have to stay at home for she was so weak she could hardly walk. For five years she was in this weakened condition.

She tried various medicines. At last, a friend of hers spoke of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and she gave it a trial.

"Everyone says I am a healthier and stronger girl," she writes. "I am recommending the Vegetable Compound to all my friends who tell me how they suffer and I am willing to answer letters from women asking about it." Julia Schmidt's address is 113 Willow St., Silverton, Oregon.

Girls who work in factories know just how Miss Schmidt felt. Perhaps they, too, will find better health by taking the Vegetable Compound.

Gave Up $100 Bill but Got Husband

A woman's honesty lost her $100, but won her a husband who has thousands.

Six weeks ago Miss Elsie Willbanks, a San Francisco salesgirl, walked into a bank. On the floor she noticed a crumpled piece of currency. Picking it up, she found it to be a $100 bill. Miss Willbanks turned the bill in to the cashier.

"If it is not called for within three days, it is yours," the cashier told her. Three days later, still hopeful, the young woman returned to the bank.

"Sorry," said the cashier, "but the money was claimed by James Litton, a broker. I gave him your address."

"Oh, well," said the salesgirl. But two days later she received a letter from Litton. "You being a lady, it is hard for me to offer you money for your honesty," he wrote. "May I have the pleasure of your company at dinner?"

Miss Willbanks accepted the invitation. Three weeks later she accepted Litton's offer of marriage.

Gave Word to Language

Tontine, a word associated with insurance, is applied to a form of annuity named from its inventor, Lorenzo Tonti, an Italian banker, who for years carried on business in Paris, France, in the Seventeenth century. His son, Henri Tonti, was the able and loyal lieutenant of La Salle, prominent in history, who explored the lower Mississippi river and the adjacent country.

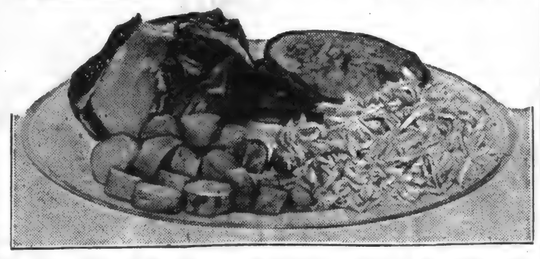
VEGETABLE COMBINATIONS ALWAYS GOOD



Corn Fritters, Cole Slaw, Carrots and Baked Apple Make a Good Vegetable Plate.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

In order to serve a "vegetable plate" at home you don't need the special kind of plates used by restaurants for the purpose. If your combination is pleasing the family will be satisfied to have the vegetables served as at any ordinary meal. From three to five vegetables are usually selected for a vegetable dinner. Innumerable good combinations may be planned as the vegetables come on the market.

Here is a good in-between-seasons menu: Corn fritters, cole slaw, buttered carrots and baked apple. This combination fulfills the requirement that there should be something hearty—the corn fritters, made with egg and milk, and rich because they are fried; something mild-flavored—the carrots; something acid—the apple. The pungency of the cabbage gives the necessary pronounced flavor that lends character to the whole plate. The illustration was made by the United States Department of Agriculture, which further suggests that some thought be given to the color and appearance of a vegetable plate, since appetite is so often stimulated through the eye.

PROTECT AGAINST DAMAGE BY MOTHS

Woolen and Fur-Trimmed Clothing Must Be Stored.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Woolen and fur-trimmed clothing, fur coats and separate pieces, and all the extra woolen blankets that are not in use during warm weather, must, as every housekeeper knows, be very carefully protected against damage by moths. The miller, or adult moth, does not eat fabrics; it selects them for laying its eggs, however, so that the larvae, or worms, will have an abundant supply of suitable food as soon as they are hatched. If there are spots due to food on the garments reached by the moth, the larva is even more attracted to that part of the material.

It pays, therefore, according to the bureau of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture, to put everything away scrupulously clean. Coats and suits that are properly stored immediately after a trip to the dry cleaner have a very good chance to escape moth damage. This is not only because the spots have been removed, but because, in all probability, the garments have been thoroughly brushed, so that any concealed moth eggs are dislodged, and after that they have been aired and sunned to get rid of the gasoline odor. The same general treatment—thorough cleaning and brushing, with a good sunning—applied to all clothing at home before storing it for the summer, will go a long way toward assuring protection from moths.

Everything must be kept in tight containers. A brown paper parcel will do as well as an expensive treated bag, provided it is carefully done up in such a way that no moths could possibly get in to lay their eggs. Any tight chest or trunk is good, if the clothes have first been properly prepared, but cedar chests have the special virtue of killing any young larvae that might chance to develop in spite of the most careful efforts to brush and beat the garments. The use of napthalene or paradichlorobensene flakes inside a tight package or box or trunk is also good and is recommended, since the fumes, when closely confined will kill the moth.

It is sometimes possible to seal a closet where clothing is being stored in such a way that moths cannot enter. On the whole, the safest course for the housewife to follow is to put the clothing for each individual in a suit box by itself, with napthalene or paradichlorobenzine, and wrap each one up in several thicknesses of heavy paper, turned under at the ends so that no insects can get in to lay eggs. It is needless to add that each box should have its contents noted on the outside so that it need not be unwrapped in order to locate some article.

Guard Against Moths by Fumigating Clothing in Closets.

Substantial Dish Made From Any Kind of Bean

Pea beans are probably the best kind for baking, but a very good, substantial dish may be made from any sort of beans—white, navy, lima, soy and others. Tomato sauce or tomatoes served with any kind of baked beans will greatly enhance their flavor. Beans supply protein as well as a large proportion of starch, but the protein is not so efficient a kind as that of meat, milk, and eggs. It is well, therefore, to serve a milk or egg dish at the same meal with beans. For example, a cream soup, or a custard dessert of some sort. Most of the dried beans are good sources of vitamine B, but as vitamines A and C are also needed these must be furnished by other foods, especially by vegetables, salads, and milk dishes.

A pint of dried beans will make a large potful, and the seasonings we are giving are in proportion to this amount. Soak the beans overnight and then cook gently until they can be pierced but are not mushy. The skins will break easily. Put the beans in the pot with a quarter-pound piece of well-streaked salt pork in the middle, rind side up. The rind should be scored. If you are not using meat, mix about six tablespoonfuls of butter with the beans as you put them in the pot. Add the seasonings, blend with a little hot water. Use a teaspoonful of salt, a teaspoonful of mustard, two tablespoonfuls of molasses or sugar, and a tablespoonful of minced onion, if you like it, or a small onion cut in slices. Bake the beans in a very moderate oven from six to ten hours. Add a little boiling water from time to time but never enough to bring the water beyond the top of the beans. Keep the lid on the bean pot until the last hour, then uncover and allow the top beans to become nicely browned.

Sliced Oranges Are One of the Nicest Desserts

Sliced or cut-up oranges are one of the easiest and nicest desserts, either just as they are or in a soft custard. Shredded coconut sprinkled over sliced oranges makes a favorite southern dessert known as "ambrosia." Sliced oranges may be served in tart or patty shells with a spoonful of whipped cream. Orange and water cress salad with French or whipped cream dressing is appetising, and, of course, oranges may form at least half of any mixed fruit salad, fruit cup, or fruit gelatin. Use pure orange juice for making the jelly part of a mixed fruit gelatin, with such combinations as chopped apple, banana, orange and fig; or grapefruit, orange, pineapple, nuts and dates; or canned peaches, pears, oranges and a small amount of preserved watermelon rind, citron or other spicy preserves. Plain orange jelly made with pure fruit juice is a delicious dessert in itself. When half congealed it may have the white of an egg beaten through it, but this is not necessary. A dainty way to serve orange jelly to an invalid or a child is to scoop out the contents of one orange, leaving the rind a basket shape. Fill this with the jelly when ready to mold it.

Baked Omelet Will Ease Pressing Kitchen Tasks

A baked omelet is practically a custard without sugar. The advantage in baking an omelet is that it does not require such careful watching as the other type and so may be managed when the housewife has other pressing tasks on hand. The proportion of milk to eggs is different from that in an ordinary omelet, which requires very little milk. The recipe is supplied by the bureau of home economics.

Baked Omelet.

1 quart milk	¼ teaspoonful salt
5 eggs	1 teaspoonful melted butter

Warm the milk and pour it into the lightly beaten eggs. Season with salt and butter and pour this mixture into a greased baking dish. Bake in a moderate oven surrounded by a pan of water, until set in the center. Serve from the dish, adding more seasoning as desired.

Constipation! How to Keep Bowels Regular

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated men, women, children, and particularly old folks, had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all headaches, biliousness, indigestion and stomach misery, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens, or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

The Impossible

The late Albert J. Beveridge, statesman and author, hated divorce or, rather, he hated the offenders who make divorce necessary.

Once, at a dinner in Indianapolis, the guests discussed with pity the case of a very admirable woman, the mother of seven young children, who found herself obliged to divorce her husband. There were obstacles, financial and other, in the way, and Mr. Beveridge said:

"A divorce like this is too bad, too impossibly difficult. It's like unscrambling an omelet to remove one bad egg."

DON'T kill flies and mosquitoes one at a time.

Flyosan—the first and only effective fly and mosquito spray (non-poisonous)—kills all the flies and mosquitoes in your house in only a few minutes.

But use Flyosan itself. Don't take chances with inferior imitations. Rid your home quickly, thoroughly, not only of flying pests but also of the filthy, deadly germs which each one carries.

"Swatting" only scatters these millions of disease-bearing germs.

Here is the right insecticide for each insect:

FLYOSAN, Liquid Spray — kills flies and mosquitoes.
PETERMAN'S ANT FOOD — exterminates ants.
PETERMAN'S DISCOVERY, Liquid — exterminates bedbugs.
PETERMAN'S ROACH FOOD — exterminates that cockroach army.
PETERMAN'S MOTH FOOD — protects against moths.

You must have a specific insecticide for each insect. No single insecticide will exterminate them all. We have had nearly 50 years' experience. We know that is true.

AUBURN CARRIER IN INSANE WARD

Mark Williams Will Likely Be Ordered Committed to Asylum

Mark Williams of Auburn, was committed to the county jail Thursday afternoon by Judge Endicott as a menace to the community.

Williams' wife, Grace Williams, filed a sworn statement with the clerk of the court alleging that in her opinion her husband is insane. She also submitted a sworn statement by Dr. I. O. Buchtel to the effect that he had examined Williams and setting forth the man's mental and physical condition.

The court appointed Drs. J. C. Baxter and A. V. Hines to examine Williams. Mrs. Williams filed a complaint under oath that her husband would be dangerous to the community if permitted to remain at large. A warrant was issued to the sheriff commanding him to bring him into court forthwith. When Williams was taken into court by Sheriff Armstrong he was subjected to a preliminary examination. It appearing that he should not remain at large he was ordered committed to the county jail pending the final determination of the cause, the expense to be paid out of the county treasury.

Mrs. Williams' attorneys are Stump & McClintock. Her husband, who is a mail carrier, attempted in March to commit suicide with chloroform in the dining room of the Auburn Commercial club. He recovered sufficiently to return to work, but he continued to have delusions and was evidently not normal mentally. He remained on duty until Wednesday, when his condition again became serious. He has been unable to sleep and he walks constantly. He scratches his face unless restrained. Mrs. Williams decided that he should be sent to the hospital for the insane for treatment. Mr. Williams realizes that there is something wrong with him and was willing to accompany the sheriff.

The insanity proceedings being followed in this case are in accordance with a new law passed by the 1927 legislature. Hearings of this kind were formerly held before justices of the peace, but now only the circuit court has jurisdiction. The court receives reports of examinations made by the attending physician and two other physicians and then holds a hearing before finally ordering commitment to the asylum.

BUTLER GIRL KILLED STRUCK BY TRAIN

Marie, 13, a daughter of Thomas Slentz, was killed on the New York Central railroad tracks, one and one-half miles west of Butler, Saturday by east bound Twentieth Century Limited train No. 3316 due to pass Waterloo at 3:30 P. M. The train is known as second 6; but was running on the Twentieth Century Limited train's time.

The back of the girl's head was torn off and her left leg was nearly severed at the knee. Her condition was such when picked up by the train crew from the weeds along the right-of-way that Mr. Slentz recognized her only by her clothing.

Marie and two children of Peter Sindle of Butler, had been at work in an onion patch and were going to Butler, walking on the ties of the track. The children started walking along the tracks from the two mile crossing west of Butler. A freight train, west bound was on the track to the north. The three were on the south side of the tracks walking on the ties, counting them as they walked. The east bound passenger struck Marie.

Raymond Ross Sindle saw the mited in time to pull his sister way from the tracks as the latter ried to catch hold of Marie.

Agreeable New Contacts

By GRACE LEA

(Copyright.)

"MOTHER, suppose you and I go into business," announced Rosana Hickson.

"My dear!" retorted her parent with a dictionary of meaning in the two words.

"Oh, I know father left us very well provided for, and we don't have to do anything but live on in a genteel, lady-like fashion without working! But, mother, I'm fed up on this drab existence. Will you listen to my plan?"

Her mother could do no less.

"It almost seems as if this home were left to us for the purpose I have in mind. I want to take in automobile tourists, lodge them and give them breakfast—or other meals, if they like. We are right on the college highway and there will be no end of nice people who may want lodging between here and the northern points. I'd like to create a real home atmosphere so that they would come back again and you and I could make something and have a little pleasure in new contacts. What do you say?"

"It seems very strange, daughter."

"It seemed strange the first time you cast your ballot, didn't it, dear?" asked the persistent girl.

"It did," admitted the mother.

If she had only realized it, she was doomed to fall into the new business scheme, because Rosana had worked it out in detail long before she suggested it to her mother. She had secured estimates on another bathroom and the decorating of four old-fashioned chambers, the renovating of the overstuffed furniture and new curtains.

"All these improvements will make our home more attractive and enhance its value if we ever want to sell it," Rosana told her mother. "And I have some perfectly lovely decorations worked out. There will be a blue room, dainty and pretty as a picture and comfortable. And the yellow bedroom is to be done with ivory walls, yellow dotted swiss and painted furniture with rag rugs. Won't that be darling? The big living room where I shall make it a point to have the guests feel at home when they stop, will be wonderful. I shall keep a big log fire burning and there will be a fragrance of pine about the room that will linger in their memories. Each comfy chair will have a table beside it with a light and some books, ash trays for the men and everything comfortable after a drive. The long table behind the big chesterfield will be loaded with magazines and you and I will make it a point to create an atmosphere of hominess that will charm them. You know you have a remarkable personality, mother dear, if you will only not be quite so stiff with strangers."

Mrs. Hickson was almost enthusiastic when her daughter talked so vividly and it was only a short time after that that they found themselves welcoming their first tourists.

When the season was well on its way, the mother and daughter decided that their venture was to be a decided success and that they were both enjoying their days as they had never done before. Many a group of guests lingered far into the evening to sit by the fire and talk and the breakfast table was frequently a very merry meeting place, and friendly hands were extended as newly-made acquaintances parted.

The day that a tidy little coupe drew up under the old porte cochere and a slender, intellectual looking man stepped out, was a momentous one in Rosana's life. The stranger who sought lodging and traveled alone was a professor in a college far up in the mountains and he wanted to leave early the following morning so as to make the remaining trip before noon.

"I know I shall not want to leave this room at dawn," he told Rosana when she conducted him to the east room done in gray and violet. "These are my favorite colors."

Fate had so ordered it that no other automobilists sought the Hickson home that night, and as Rosana's mother sat by the fire only long enough to be polite, the two newly found companions spent an evening never to be forgotten. Of books and life and their mutual tastes they talked until it would have seemed that the professor was cutting his sleep very short if he needed to make so early a start the next day.

Fresh as a daisy and with an added sparkle of beauty in her eyes, Rosana said good-by to him just after the sun had risen and they had breakfasted together on the porch.

"You'll keep my room for me at Christmas time?" he asked.

"And if it snows?" Rosana queried.

"Whether or not it snows I'd like to stop here both on my way home from college and on my way back after the New Year," Professor Bowles said, definitely.

Rosana was sure, as she watched his car disappear down the avenue of old elms that he would return.

"How did you like our guest, dear?" her mother asked, pointedly, as Rosana had her second cupful of coffee.

"I—why I liked him very much, mother," she replied, blushing as she had never blushed over the score or more of young men who had stopped at their home. "And—he is coming back at Christmas—and the New Year."

Her mother nodded. "We are making new contacts, aren't we, daughter?" she asked, playfully.

Community Building

Cost of Beautifying Grounds Never Waste

That the importation of foreign flower bulbs has reached a point where they are now available at little cost was pointed out by Joseph C. Maloney, president of the Joseph C. Maloney company, subdividers of Detroit.

"The United State Department of Agriculture has limited the importation of narcissus bulbs for 1927 to small quantities of new varieties," said Mr. Maloney. "The reason given by the department was that in 1926 alone 42,000,000 bulbs were imported. This included 500 varieties, but the bulk of the shipments were made up of about twenty of the most used commercial varieties. This heavy importation with the previous known plantings is sufficient for all propagation needs.

"The planting of flowers and shrubs has been quite an expense to the home owner, although the gain in added beauty to the home more than offset the cost. It is probable that the home raising of these bulbs will cut the cost to a fraction of what was formerly paid.

"I don't know of any other investment in land or home that returns more pleasure or actual cash value than flowers, shrubs and trees. They will beautify any vacant lot and make a home an estate. There is a danger in planting that it will be overdone. There is more beauty in a thin, well-planned planting than in a profusion of flowers and shrubs that have been planted without thought of what the entire picture is to be."

City of Small Homes Is Ideal Community

It is not surprising that the Mississippi valley landscape artists, meeting in Kansas City, should declare that the charm of a well-ordered city is in its small homes. The small homes so greatly predominate in number that unless very many of them are attractive the city, at best, offers only beautiful residential spots of greater or lesser extent. It is in the rich districts that the landscape architects get their best commissions, but they are not overlooking the importance of small home treatments, even though they have not yet devised a way to promote the landscaping of small lots.

The interesting fact is that the home owner, be his place costly or inexpensive, has real incentive for beautification. Keeping the house and premises attractive contributes to the joy of living and to the value of property. Co-operation is an important factor. A block or district otherwise well planned and cared for may be spoiled to considerable extent by a few careless home owners or occupants. Hence the expediency of neighborhood improvement associations. Through common effort desirable standards may be established and maintained.—Kansas City Times.

Roof Highly Important

Nowadays the modern home builder desires a covering for the home possessing not one or two virtues, but combining in one perfect roofing all the single advantages which the various old-style roofs possessed, together with such additional ones as modern science may have developed.

The "perfect roof," according to modern standards, must combine the following qualities: It must be a complete shelter in all climates and under all weather conditions.

It must be proof against all roof-communicated fire—for the benefit not only of the individual, but of the community.

It must be a true insulation against heat and cold. It must be easy to put on and inexpensive to maintain in good condition.

And last, but by no means least, it must be artistic—a fitting crown to a well-planned facade—it must be esthetically pleasing to the beholder.

Plan Before Building

Every little thing in the house should be planned out before hand. Stairs, doors, windows, chimneys, flues, closets, all the thousand and one things that make a house don't just happen. Any of them misplaced entirely spoils the utility or the appearance of the house, or both, it has been said, and there is quite a little truth in it, that if you wish perfection in your house, you should take as long in planning as if takes to actually build.

Chambers of Commerce

There is no better evidence of the worth of a chamber of commerce than the fact that other live cities maintain such organizations. There is not on record a single case of a live, progressive town without a chamber of commerce. Eufala must and will carry on. Unless we do carry forward the splendid work we have started, the effort and money thus expended will count for naught.—Eufala (Ala.) Daily Citizen.

Great Truth

The bigger the city the cleaner the main streets and the dirtier the side streets.—System — the Magazine of Business.

EXTRA PRESSURE USED IN ADVERTISING

Keep up the summer advertising.

This is the season of the year when the average merchant lets up in his advertising and when the mail order house begins to get in its hardest work.

It is hard for the merchants in the smaller towns to understand that it pays to advertise during July and August just as well as it pays in November and December.

The chain stores, the big department stores and all other well-managed businesses never let up in their advertising—never. And they put extra pressure behind their advertising when business begins to slack up a little bit. That's the time when their advertising departments run "full blast."

Cut down your overhead, yet, cut off all unnecessary expense, but for mercy's sake don't cut off your advertising, whatever you do. And the editor of The News does not say this for a selfish standpoint, but for the good of every merchant and business house in St. Joe. Advertising is not an unnecessary expense. Good, presistent, all-year-'round advertising is absolutely essentian to the success of any business.

People will buy from you regularly if you ask them to regularly.

A DIFFERENCE OF OPINION

Can a farmer be prosperous and who know it? Evidently so, if statements of officers of the railway train service brotherhoods are to be believed.

Railroad employes, through their train service brotherhoods, are trying by arbitration to compel the railroads to increase the wages of trainmen, and when the railroads answered that farmers were complaining an demanding lower rates and that wage increases would necessitate rate increases, W. C. Whitney, Vice President of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen had this to say:

"I firmly believe that the farmer has progressed more rapidly than the railroad man or any other man who works for a daily or monthly wage. According to an investigation I have recently made, approximately 97 per cent of the Nebraska farmers own automobiles and 89 per cent have telephones, and what is true in this respect in Nebraska is very largely true in Iowa, Minnesota and other granger states. Their homes are equipped with bathrooms, electric lights and other modern conveniences, very largely to the same extent as the better classes in the cities. It is a matter of common knowledge that hundreds of farmers are retiring annually and moving to the towns and cities to live in comfort and ease."

This is stronger talk against rate reduction and in favor of rate increase on farm products, than any railroad ever presented. It does not harmonize with the stories of distress presented by the advocates of farm relief legislation.

Farm relief advocates may say that the railroad employes are talking to justify an increase in their wages, and the other will answer that the politicians are talking to increase their votes, with the farmer between the two millstones.

Be Sure of
Your Vision

So great is the percentage of those having defective vision and so frequently are the ill-effects of poor eyesight attributed to some other cause, that you can not afford to merely guess that your eyes are normal. Even if you are now wearing glasses, changes may have occurred in your eyes that make new glasses necessary. Some common indications are: HEAD ACHE, PAINS IN THE EYEBALL, PAINS AT BASE OF THE BRAIN, A PRESSURE AT TOP OF THE HEAD, EYES SMART and BURN, SUBJECT TO DIZZY SPELLS. If you are wearing glasses they may need changing and if you are not, it may be you should be wearing them. Come in and without obligation on your part, we will give you an HONEST EXAMINATION and a SQUARE DEAL.

BARREL JUMPER TO PERFORM IN ST. JOE

Ralph R. Williams, Physical Instructor In Army During War Will Entertain Saturday

Ralph R. Williams, known as "The Great Williams," trick barrel jumper and Physical culture artist will stage a free acrobatic performance on Main street Saturday, July 23rd, under the auspices of the merchants. Two exhibitions will be given, one at 2:30 and the other at 8:00 P. M. No collection or charge of any kind, as the community will be guests of the merchants.

One of the many clever feats that Williams does is jumping in and out of an ordinary sugar barrel backward with two of our larrest citizens in the same barrel without even touching their clothing. Other feats are equally as difficult and entertaining according to recommendations which are carried by Mr. Williams from the mayors of various cities, Kiwanis clubs and the war department.

Williams served as a physical and acrobatic instructor in the army during the World War. He is being assisted by his son, Dale, who is the youngest barrel jumper in the world.

YOUNG FOLKS PICNIC AT ERICK'S GROVE

Next Sunday, the young people of DeKalb county will meet in the Erick grove and conduct their annual outdoor Sunday School with special services in the afternoon. Each township will appear on the afternoon program with some stunt. Rev. Roy S. Brown of Spencerville, will have charge of the afternoon service.

Long-Bell Oak Flooring

Oak Floors
over Old Floors

AT this time of the year many old homes are being made more attractive and more comfortable by laying oak floors right over the old floors. It is done quickly, without the mess and inconvenience of ripping up the old boards, and at comparatively small expense. When finished, the new oak floors are not only beautiful in themselves, but give the entire home a new and well-dressed appearance and an added value which is far greater than the cost of the flooring.

We recommend Long-Bell trade-marked oak flooring for this purpose. It answers every requirement of texture, manufacture, finish, durability and satisfaction. Let us show you in actual figures the economy of Long-Bell oak flooring.

St. Joe Town and Two of Her Churches Share In Estates.

Mrs. Kate A. Leighty of St. Joe Left Will Disposing of Her Property

The will of the late Kate A. Leighty of St. Joe, widow of the late Congressman Jacob Leighty, has been admitted to probate in the DeKalb circuit court. It was executed at Celina, O., February 28, 1924, with Don Short and Clyde C. Andrews as witnesses.

A son, John R. Leighty, is given the privilege of taking whatever of his mother's personal belongings that he desires. The wearing apparel goes to two sisters, the piano to Helen Philley Beauchamp, the testator's mother's picture to Mrs. E. S. Philley and a bed fully equipped to Mary B. Maloney. These persons have the authority to distribute the testator's silverware, bric-a-brac, picures, etc., as they deem best. Helen Philley is to have the paintings that she made and presented to Mrs. Leighty.

The two store rooms in St. Joe belonging to Mrs. Leighty are devised to Carl Leighty. Her stock in the Lincoln Life Insurance Co. shall be paid to the church council of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of St. Joe, to be applied on the minister's salary.

Mrs. Leighty provides that the persons named for the division of her personal belongings shall remain in, use and occupy her homestead and provide their expenses while living there from her checking account until such time as their duties are performed.

Mrs. Leighty provides that one bed fully equipped shall be given to the W. C. T. U. girl's home at Fort Wayne, to be turned over to the home from the W. C. T. U. of St. Joe.

The son, John, is given the use of the homestead. After his death it is to be sold by Wm. Curie, Frank Bowman and Ray Reasoner and half the proceeds given to the Evangelical Lutheran church of St. Joe, the latter bequest to be used for such improvement as the town authorities deem best.

On June 9, 1924, Mrs. Leighty wrote a codicil to her will, executing it without witnesses, in which she provided that her stock in the St. Joe Valley bank should be turned over to Mrs. E. S. Philley to apply on a $1,000 monument to be placed in Lindenwood cemetery in remembrance of their father and mother, who lie there. She also stipulated that the Lincoln Life Insurance Co. stock should be held by the bank and the dividend turned over annually to apply on the Lutheran minister's salary.

TO SELL REAL ESTATE

William Curie, administrator of the estate of the late Franklin P. Hart, has filed a petition in the DeKalb circuit court for authority to sell lots 31, 32, 33 and 34 in Heller's addition to the city of Butler, lots 2, 5, 6 and 7 in White's addition to St. Joe, and tracts of land at St. Joe. Mr. Curie states that the personal property, worth $250, is insufficient to discharge the liabilities of the estate, which amounts to $800.

The legal notice appears in this paper.

BUILDING NEW BARN

Raymond Rhodes commenced work Tuesday on the erection of a new barn on his piece of land just west of the Rhoads Corners, one mile south of town. This will add to the value of his land and some day if a house should be erected there, it would make an ideal home.

CARD OF THANKS

We desire through this means to thank the friends and neighbors of St. Joe for the many kind acts and words of sympathy during the sickness and death of our grandfather.

Roscoe Rickett and Family.

PROVIDES PAYMENT OF $500 TO ST. JOE M. P. CHURCH

The will of the late George W. Wade of St. Joe, probated in the DeKalb circuit court, provides that the trustees of the Methodist Protestant church of St. Joe, be paid $500 from government bonds which come due in September, 1928.

A grandson, Roscoe D. Rickett, a son-in-law, Sherman Rickett, and a great granddaughter, Maxine Rickett, each is bequeathed $1,000. The latter is to be paid when the girl becomes eighteen years of age.

The will was executed November 11, 1926, with Fred B. Leighty and John T. Betz as witnesses.

On March 7 Mr. Wade executed a codicil in which he left $4,000 to Roscoe D. Rickett, instead of $1,000.

J. C. Hull is executor.

ST. JOE MAN LEAVES ALL OF HIS PROPERTY TO SON

By the will of the late Robert A. Cochran, probated in the DeKalb circuit court, all the property goes to a son, C. A. Cochran, with the provision only that he give his father a respectable burial. The will was executed January 4, 1927, with Isaac Hose and H. M. McCavit as witnesses.

Mr. Cochran's death took place at St. Joe, July 11 and he left $1,000 in personal property. The son, who resides at St. Joe, is the only heir. He qualified to administer the will by filing $2,000 bond, with E. R. Kinsey as surety.

FISH CLUB SHOW PICTURES TO PUBLIC

A fair size crowd witnessed the showing of the pictures sent the local Fish and Game club by the South Bend Bait Co., in spite of the other means of entertainment staged here for the week.

Battling with Muskies, Inquest of the Bronze Back and Fishing Gamely for game fish, were the films shown. Each of them carried some thrills which always accompanies the landing of a fish of any size, and each proclaimed the finest action.

Picnic, August 13th

At the conclusion of the pictures F. L. Milliman had themembership to remain to assist in the completion of the plans for the Annual Picnic. The date has been set for Saturday, August 13,, and to be held in the Erick grove, one mile south of town.

A number of committees were appointed as follows:—

Stand:—Ralph Sechler, chairman, Lester Coburn, Ward Woodcox, Harry Shuff and Albert Morr.

Advertising:—Ed Storer, chairman, Byron Widney, Vern Coburn and F. B. Leighty.

Sport:—Merwood Rhodes, chairman, H. W. Kimes, H. J. Krafft, Elmer Keller, Clay Coburn and Walter Baker.

Grounds:—C. S. Hart, chairman, E. R. Kinsey and Frank Curie.

Marshal:—Clare H Hull.

This picnic will be for the public and every plan will be made to entertain you for theday. Watch for further announcements.

The membership of the Club is now 115.

Re-Stocking of Streams

Some have said, "Now just what is the idea of a fish club?" The one purpose is to use influance in seeing that the laws are obeyed; another is to secure minnows from the state to replenish the streams, so that the fishing conditions are bettered. Since the club has been in operation, the following number of fish have been given them. Last year 50,000 wall eyed pike, 2,500 rock bass, 7,500 black bass and 1,000 blue gills. Thus far this year 300,000 wall eyed pike and 900 small mouth bass have been put in the St. Joe river.

A total of 361,900 minnows.

Planting of Baby Fish

A total of 736,700 baby fish and fry produced in four state hatcheries were planted in public waters during June, according to George N. Mannfeld, superintendent of the fish and game division of the state conservation department. Of this number 718,800 were black bass; 18,100 crappie; 3,000 yellow perch; 1,800 blue gills; and 1,000 rock bass. More than 600,000 of the total June production came from the Riverside hatchery in Indianapolis.

Two warden crews according to Mannfeld, are now working in the Northern lakes removing gar and dogfish that menaced and prey on game fishes. Although the June weather retarded their work to a great extent owing to the cold and high winds, these men succeeded in removing 276 gar from Clear Lake tnd Lake Gage in Steuben county. They are now working at Big Long Lake in Lagrange county and at Winona, Pike and Center lakes in Kosciusko county.

CHAPTER XIV

Mrs. Polly Johnston, returning from an aimless walk about the piazza, was told by the elevator boy that he had just been given a message to the effect that a gentleman was waiting for her in the lounge.

"His card," demanded Polly, wrinkling her nose a little in front of the mirror to see if she needed powder. The boy handed her a slip of paper on which was written, "To see Mrs. Johnston, with a message from Mr. Rangeley."

"Take me up first," Polly instructed the boy, "and have the gentleman told I will be down in a moment."

She went to her room, straightened her hat, powdered her nose, tucked a stray lock away under her hat, surveyed herself carefully in the mirror, and sauntered back to ring for the elevator again, wondering about the message.

Claude had chosen a secluded and recessed corner, from which he could obtain an unobstructed view of those who entered from the lobby into the lounge. He wondered about Polly, after all these years. What was her mind toward Loren Rangeley? What changes had time wrought? He had only that momentary glimpse in the Hillsborough inn to go by.

When he saw her he forgot everything else. Changes! To be sure she had changed, as twenty years must change every man or woman, but she was Polly, and as he admitted to himself, still lovely enough to hold any man's glances. He saw how she was stared at as she came in indifferently. She was all in black. A black satin cape, lined with Delft blue, hung from her shoulders, and a hat of the same lovely color on her ruddy hair. She gave a swift look about her, and Claude rose.

As Claude came toward her, Polly stared, then her eyes changed and the pupils contracted. He had been much in her thoughts lately, and despite the years, she knew this must be the man she most dreaded. Indeed, after the first long look, she actually recognized him. Polly stopped for a moment, then came on. Claude stood in the corner waiting for her, and she faced him.

"A trick?" she asked in a low voice.

"No," Claude answered her steadily. "How are you, Polly? I am here with a message about Loren Rangeley. He will be at my hotel in half an hour, in time for afternoon tea, and the idea was that you should join us there to meet him."

"Whose idea?" asked Polly. "And who are us?"

"My idea," Claude answered as promptly, "and us are Mary and Ned Rangeley, Loren's son."

"I don't think I know him."

"Yes, I think you do, but you know him as Ned Carter. His name is Ned Carter Rangeley. He was at Peace Valley, with me."

"Oh, the young man who drove the car?"

"Yes," admitted Claude and waited.

He had not to wait long. "I don't like your idea," Polly told him, looking past him out of the window. "And," she continued, still gazing past him, "I have no desire to be one of 'us'."

She rose as though the interview was at an end. Claude rose, too, but stood so that he blocked her way.

"Sit down, Polly," he said, "and hear why it might be better to change your mind."

Polly hesitated. Unless she desired a scene, there was no getting past that solid figure. She had to look at him now. The look relieved her. The man before her had changed with the years, but he was neither a boor nor a clown. She had not been so fatally wrong about Claude, years ago. There was "a something" about Claude Dabbs.

Polly sat down.

"Make it brief as you can," she asked, again looking past him. "This sort of thing is—tiring."

"I didn't choose it," Claude told her. "It was forced upon me, and I understand just how you feel. I'm here solely on Mary's account."

"Mary!" breathed Polly. "Leave Mary out of it, as much as you can."

Polly saw Claude's face change and realized that before her was a man who was keeping a tight rein on his emotions and speech, for her sake. Not thus would he choose to speak to her of Mary.

"Mary told me that you had sent for Loren," he began, and he saw Polly flinch. "You might have known she would. You might have known how she'd feel about it."

"I did know."

"Well, then, you can understand when I told Mary that Loren was coming to see me, and that his coming to Paris had nothing to do with his wanting to see you but was purely a matter of business, that Mary wanted you to know at once. Mary thought she ought to rush to you right away and warn you of the true state of affairs."

"And for reasons of your own, you prevented her. Well, I'm waiting to know the true state of affairs."

Claude drew a long breath and [illegible] graven image beside him. It did not really seem worth while, but he had promised Mary. "That Loren would never have said—whatever he has said to you—if he'd known you were Mrs. Dabbs. I'm worth a great many thousands a year to Loren Rangeley. To him I am Dabbs of 'SCOUREEN' the 'Dirt Destroyer.' If you haven't seen the signs on the billboards—"

"I have seen them. Deplorably ugly." But Polly was looking at him now.

"Well, ugly or not, you know it spells money. There's plenty for you and Mary."

"For Mary—yes."

"You're legally entitled to your share, without having to take me with it," Claude informed her coolly. "It will be much pleasanter than taking Loren's money, I can tell you that."

"It's all very interesting," Polly informed him, and now she was looking at the floor, "but still I fail to see why I should come—this afternoon."

"For Mary," Claude told her shortly. "Ned Rangeley's in love with her."

Polly started. "And of course, pleased?"

"Only if Mary wants him. I'd like to keep her to myself, just as much as you would, but we can't."

He gave her a long look.

"You might think of her, Polly. Why should our d—d blunder cloud this bit of her life? You've made a good job of Mary, so far, Polly. I have to hand you that."

"Well?" Polly flung at him.

"Well," Claude returned with finality, "finish your job."

Polly looked at him now, saw what he meant and went white for a moment. Claude waited, never taking his eyes from her. It was a long minute.

She Faced Him.

"I'll come. Wait till I change my gown."

"No time," Claude told her. "You look fine as you are."

"And the red-haired devil knows it," he added to himself as he marshaled her through the lobby to the gondola steps.

Polly studied the man who sat beside her as the gondola carried them along the canal. It was even faintly amusing that after all these years they should be sitting side by side in a gondola in Venice. Her mind flew back to the time she had so resolutely put behind her.

It began to dawn on the Polly Johnston of today that the Polly Johnston of yesterday had underestimated her man. She went back, though it was a disturbing thing to do, with the man himself silent beside her, to the morning she had made up her mind to leave. She did herself justice. It was not the money, entirely, that had made her decide. She remembered doubting Claude's powers of imagination, of capability for life in a larger way than just that of a storekeeper in a country village. She remembered how she had tried the shibboleth that had shaken her newly awakened desire to stay with him.

She began to wonder about his life. Claude touched her arm gently. He was holding out his hand to help her from the gondola, and he was doing it gracefully.

Mary and Ned had begun very badly. Claude's abrupt departure had found them both unprepared. Mary had risen to her feet impetuously and followed him to the door, only to realize that it looked absurd and to go back to the window, where she stood watching her father depart.

"One father gone and another father coming, makes a complicated afternoon," she ventured.

Ned agreed and suggested that to while away the time between fathers they might order a peculiarly rich tea.

The waiter had come and gone, and still they were in that tiresome sitting room, which seemed to Mary to have held them for ages.

"I suppose we'd better stay here?" she inquired lightly.

"Much better," and Ned drew a wicker chair to the balcony window for her, and arranged himself on a cushion at her feet. Mary felt grateful. She did not have to meet his eyes, in this position.

"Sure as we stay out of this room," he told her, "my father will turn up and then Claude will accuse us of deserting our posts."

"Do you call my father 'Claude'?" inquired Mary, for want of something better to say.

"I'll call him 'father,' gladly, as soon as you give me the right," Ned reminded her, and turned to see how she took it.

She did not take it well at all. She leaned against the chair, her face hidden in her hands.

"Mary, take your hands away and look at me. I never was more serious in my life. If you'll listen to me, you'll see how hard I'm trying to keep you from spoiling Claude's romance. But for you, your mother and Claude might be happy."

Mary's hands came away from her face now. "But for me! Why, I'm all that holds them together."

"So you think, but you're quite wrong. If you were safely removed from their grasp, Polly would think how lonely Claude was, and Claude would think how sad it was for Polly. Even at over forty, my dear, grown-ups can't make love before their children. But if you should engage yourself to a nice, handy, lovable young man, like myself, then that lets father and mother off to attend to their own affairs, while the responsibility for making Mary happy falls on the young man's shoulders. I know a pair that fairly ache for that responsibility."

He took a step nearer—and the waiter entered with the tea. By the time he had gone again, Polly and Claude had entered.

Even as Mary flew across the room to kiss and cling to her mother, her mind paid homage to her father's greatness. To bring Polly Johnston into this situation, with this promptness, was marvelous in his daughter's eyes. She longed to have been present to see it accomplished. Mother, of all people, sitting calmly at Claude Dabbs' tea table, drawing off her gloves and making conversation with Ned!

Claude came toward his daughter, a humorous question in his eyes. But it remained unspoken, for at that moment Loren Rangeley was announced and entered.

Ned, standing beside Mrs. Johnston-Dabbs, was the first to meet his father's eyes. Mary saw Loren stiffen, and then come forward with an easy: "Ah Ned. This is an unexpected pleasure."

"Quite," said Ned, without showing that one of his pet theories had gone all to smash. Far from Dabbs being Loren's agent, it was Loren who bore himself as though he was Claude's agent. Ned meant to get it out of Claude before the evening was much older. "I'm staying with Dabbs," he volunteered. He did not want to let his father down, either.

"I didn't know." Loren was making his way to Mrs. Polly with a smile and outstretched hand, but somehow or other Claude was there before him.

"Think I'll have to introduce this lady to you, Mr. Rangeley," he announced amiably. "Mrs. Claude Dabbs."

Loren's face was a study in mixed emotions, but Polly was calm and smiling as she lifted her eyes to his.

Beautiful Work Done by Spanish Potters

Ceramic arts flourish throughout Spain, partly because fine clays are common and also because the Spaniard is an expert potter.

The beautiful reproduced in the shapes of Etruria, as of Phoenicia and Egypt, are old pottery of the Iberian regions. The finest and most extensive use of ceramics is seen in the southerly provinces, where house floors, walls, and much of the garden may be adorned with brightly colored pottery tiles. The vases, cups, plates and other domestic articles made in such regions as Seville, Granada, Talavera and Valencia, are widely known, while the coarse but beautifully shaped and brilliantly colored work of Murcia, the production of local peasantry, is a delight to the eye and hand. No Greek or Roman vases are more beautiful than those of modern Spain, based upon the work of long-forgotten predecessors in the art.—London Times.

Pheasants From Asia

Although pheasants were hunted in England in 1200, the bird is not British in origin. This fine game fowl came from Asiatic countries originally, including both Japan and China. The Mongolian type is one of the most beautiful, though the golden pheasant is said to be the most beautiful. The Reeves pheasant has a tail sometimes five feet long.

Know Your Sweetheart by His Handwriting

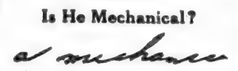
Is He Mechanical?



What is

Mechanical ability gives an automatic appearance to the writing. Lower loops will be absent, only a short blunt line being made. Words will be connected but very often separated within themselves by syllables, showing psychic ability.

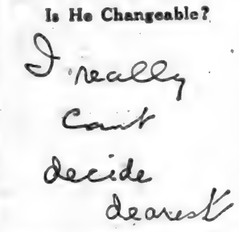
The terminal will often be brought back from the end of the word to cross the t and thus will be made a triangle that speaks of mechanical ability.

The writing of a mechanical person is seldom large. The ability to concentrate is theirs and it will be seen in smaller writing.

Anything unlike the copybook form will indicate ability to handle things in the field of mechanics. Of course, if the signs of ideality are visible and the writer has mechanical ability, he will turn it into inventive channels and come forth with something new.

The letters h and b made without loops spell mechanical ability on the part of the writer and are usually found with a short blunt t bar.

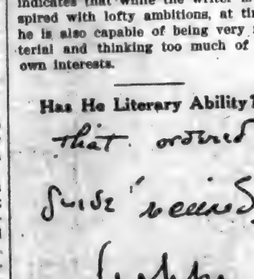
Is He Changeable?



Watch the fellow who actually complains that nobody understands him. There's a reason and it usually is because he does not understand himself and never acts the same way twice. Such a personality is seen easily in the writing and the plainest key is that of a variation in the slant of the writing. The dual personality writer will write vertical, back-hand and slanting forward all in the same letter. He will also make a t bar to the left of the upright at the start of a sentence, one atop the upright in the middle of the sentence and another far to the right of the upright before he is through. This also spells versatility.

Look also for upright letters like t, l, and d, reaching high toward the heavens, and then you will see the lower half of the letters f and p reaching far down under the line. This indicates that while the writer is inspired with lofty ambitions, at times he is also capable of being very material and thinking too much of his own interests.

Has He Literary Ability?



The best sign of literary ability is not common and is never overlooked when prevailing. This is the little loop found on top of the d, when that upright stroke is made singly. This little loop flies off to the right and means unique style of phraseology and weird imagination.

Capitals and letter formations that speak of originality also tell of ability to write. When you find certain curves and lines that seem uncommon, the literary trait is existent.

Letters throughout the words will vary in size and large loops will be found throughout the writing as well as flying tails or terminals; often crooked y's.

If writing is made in back-hand style or vertical, and the signs of imagination are seen, then you may deduce that the writer has the ability to stick to a theme until it is done. Such writers will be good on research work and will be scientific in their bent, able to polish and write with continuity. Pronounced slant in writing where literary gift is found makes it very difficult for the writer to concentrate.

Note.—Do not make final judgment until other signs in writing are studied.

Keep Old Custom

In the days when the Romans occupied Great Britain, what is now known as St. Mark's day was observed in the glorification of an agricultural deity, and the customs of that day are in part followed to this day. In many parts of England it is usual to cut down a small thorn tree on April 25 and burn a portion of it near a field where wheat is springing from the ground, exactly as was done 2,000 years ago.

PRINCESS AND FAIRY PRINCE

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

PAULINE had just two great interests in life. One was a love for fairy stories that amounted to an enthusiasm to the nth power and the other was the absorbing passion for wandering through old second-hand shops where she bought something now and again.

The fairy tales she no longer read, of course, being grown up and now in the so-called business world. But she never could forget about fairy tales—especially the happy endings, where the girl always was found by the fairy prince and they lived happily ever after. Pauline entertained the secret belief that she, too, would some day meet a fairy prince dressed like an ordinary young American business man.

"But I'll know him for the prince when I see him," Pauline would tell herself with shining eyes as she brushed her hair to a glossy silkiness. "And there'll be no more rushing through breakfast to get a crowded street car; no more lunching in twenty minutes in a cafeteria where a thousand persons can be seated at once, reminding one of—of cows at lunch! No, and there'll be no more rushing after 5:30 to get a seat, and—oh, bah! Instead I'll be getting up in the morning, pulling the shades up high to get the morning sun, running the vacuum around to clean up nicely and cooking delectable little suppers for two—" And Pauline would dream away a few minutes, in which she was the fairy princess pursued by the fairy prince.

But all of that was mere "maybe" dreaming. At the present time Pauline had only a room, third floor rear; a room which she furnished herself and kept tidy to the queen's taste. The various little trifles and curios which she had bought at the second-hand shops needed some sort of cabinet to guard them or at least hold them together. For this purpose Pauline had purchased a hanging wall-case of brilliant red lacquer.

Strangely enough, she had not noticed the long, slender space in the center of it—a space which really needed some tall, slender figure to fill it nicely. After the wall-case was in place she noticed this, but among all the little trifles she possessed there was nothing to fit the space.

The next day being Saturday she set out for her favorite second-hand shop, an excess of 55 cents in her purse. She would find something inexpensive to fill that space while she saved up for some fitting piece to take the central place in her cabinet. There was a tiny wedgewood jar of dull blue with dusty white figures dancing toward a sun dial. The dealer asked only 60 cents for it, which was cheap enough except that she had only fifty-five. There were little figurines, any one of which might have filled the place, but Pauline liked none of them.

"I want—oh, I don't know exactly what I want, but I'll know when I see it," she murmured. "I just want some little thing—inexpensive."

"Say, you want a figure?" asked the man shrewdly.

"I have just the thing and—and—I'll give it to you," he said excitedly. "Here—take it!"

He held up a tiny Buddha figure, which was very ugly and very heavy and—strangely enough—the exact size to fit her space.

"You not—what you call—superstitious?" he asked anxiously. "It bring bad luck. I have it three days now and," he shrugged, "not one sale. Bad-luck Buddha, they call him. A man in Minneapolis sent him to me. A man in Fargo sent it there; Seattle was before that—and bad luck, bad luck, bad luck fellow heem everywhere! I—I am not what you call superstitious, and so I told my frien', but—three days and not a sale! You take heem? I give heem to you"—he lapsed into broken English and dropped his head on his chest.

"I can't take it, but I'll pay—what? Fifty cents?"

"A quarter," said he magnanimously. "The man in Fargo was—killed. The man in Minneapolis found a bomb—just in time—take heem—a gift."

But in the end Pauline triumphantly carried home the little figure and still had 90 cents in her purse. It was very, very heavy, considering its size. The shop owner reluctantly agreed that it looked to him like solid silver, but in spite of that fact he was delighted to be rid of it. He even followed her to the door and said doubtfully that he hoped nothing ill would befall her as he liked to keep his regular customers!

Even that, however, failed to dampen Pauline's enthusiasm. She scrubbed it good with her hand-brush in the bathroom before she put it into the red lacquer case. Then cross-legged, she sat on her little beruffled day bed that turned into a regular bed at night and surveyed it. Then she shook her head in bewilderment. Why that had been said to bring bad luck was past all understanding. Mutely sat the Buddha regarding something in the air before him. A banging on her room door startled her.

"Come," she said with an ease which she did not feel.

The door burst open and a red-headed young man stood there blinking at her in the light to which his eyes were as yet unaccustomed after the dimness of the hallway. "Got that Buddha?" he demanded hoarsely.

"Right here," she said, indicating the silver figure in the case.

He ran toward it, lifted it down and then mopped his face with his handkerchief. "It's all right," he said, "it's all right!" He twisted the nose of the Buddha now and the face parted from the backhead. He sank down on the floor, did this red-headed young man, and from the interior of the silver figure dropped dozens and dozens of glittering gems.

"Just like a fairy story," murmured Pauline in amazement.

The red-headed young man smiled widely. "You've said it and—" he looked at her now with a long, long look. One might have thought him incapable of moving his eyes. "I—I've chased after this silver Buddha over two continents and now I've found it and—and you, too."

Pauline stared at him.

"You'll get twenty thousand out of this," said the amazing young man. He looked quickly at her left hand, bare. "I'll—I'll be back—you'll be here in an hour?" he begged. "We could take in a movie. Old Cruder told me where you lived and I—say, I got up here in just no time. Sacred jewels these are—worth a fortune outside of their intrinsic value and—and—you'll be ready—in an hour?"

Pauline felt like the last scene in a "movie" thriller and as he rose to his feet she took the card he held out. She glanced at it only when he was at the door. On it it said:

F. PRINCE
Royal Détective Agency.

She went to the door and called softly: "What—what is your first name?"

"Fred," he called back. "Why?"

But Pauline did not tell him until a long time afterward anything about the princess and the fairy prince.

Nicknames Given to the Various States

Many of the states have more than one nickname. The commonest is usually given first in the following list:

Alabama, Cotton, Lizard, Yellowhammer; Arizona, Baby, Sunset, Apache; Arkansas, Bear, Bowie; California, Golden; Colorado, Centennial, Silver; Connecticut, Nutmeg, Constitution; Delaware, Blue Hen, Diamond; Florida, Flowery, Everglade.

Trodden by Pioneers

A century after the first settlements in America were established it was evident that the future of the country depended upon overcoming the barrier of the Appalachian mountains and the great forests that clothed them. New colonists pushed inland along the rivers and later struck into the mighty forests from the head of navigation. They followed the Indian trails which they found, and these trails came into general use. Thus Nemacolin's path, which Washington followed on his mission to the French (1754), was the forerunner of Braddock's trail (1755) and the National road. The Kittanning path up the Juniata to the Allegheny furnished the route of Forbes' trail (1758). The Warrior's path from the Shenandoah valley through the Cumberland gap to the falls of the Ohio became Boone's Wilderness road (1769), over which Kentucky was settled, and the Iroquois trail from Albany to Lake Erie developed into the Great Genesee road.

And Garret Rent Free

The West Virginia legislature has established the post of poet-laureate for that state and fixed the salary of the incumbent at $900 a year. That seems like a heap of money for a poet. The state will have only itself to blame, if it turns the head of some promising young artist. Given $900 a poet who isn't too prolific can buy all of his copy paper, typewriter ribbons and postage; and outside of that he will have nothing to do but work for a living.

Sheep-Killing Dogs

After a dog has once killed sheep it seemingly becomes a maniac with him and he is seldom, is ever, broken of the habit. He not only destroys sheep himself, but leads other dogs to do so. No consideration should be given to such a dog. If additional losses from the source are to be avoided, the dog should be killed as soon as his habit is known.—Exchange.

INCREASE IN ELECTRICITY USED

The monthly report of the production of electricity by public-utility power plants for May, issued by the Geological Survey, Department of the Interior, shows a total for the first five months of the year amouning to 32.4 billion kilowatt-hours, or about 9½ per cent more than the output for the same period in 1926. An estimate based on the output so far this year and on comparable figures for 1926 indicates that the total output for 1927 will be in the neighborhood of 80 billion kilowatt-hours. The total for 1926 was 73.8 billion kilowatt-hours.

The effect of the increasing hours of daylight and the rising temperature from the first to the middle of the year on the demand for electricity for light and heat is shown in the decrease in the average daily production of electricity that occurs during this period each year. This year the decrease in the average daily output from January to May was about 3 per cent; in 1926 the decrease was about 5 per cent; in 1925, 6 per cent. The lessening of the decrease in 1927 may be due, in part, to the increasing load for electrical refrigeration.

The average daily production of electricity by the use of water power in 1927 has set a record for each month from March to May. As the amount of electricity produced by water power is directly dependent on the amount of water flowing in the streams used for the development of power, it is expected that the output will begin to decrease after the month of May, as March, April and May are generally months of maximum flow for streams in the United Staes.

Notwithstanding the record-breaking output of petroleum this year, the consumption of fuel oil by public-utility power plants has decreased each month, and the consumption in May was less than generally months of maximum flow logical Survey began to publish monthly power reports in 1919.

EXCESSIVE LOANS ATTRIBTING CAUSE OF FAILURE

Depositors of the Grabill State bank, Allen county, will be paid 25 per cent of their deposits at once by the Harlan State bank, which has been appointed receiver, it was announced Tuesday by Thomas Barr, deputy state bank commissioner. The Grabill bank was closed Saturday. The receiver was appointed by Judge Sol Woods of the Allen circuit court. Mr. Barr said a complete examination of the bank is being made, but that he is convinced the institution's failure was due not to agricultural conditions but to excessive loans.

TEACHING THE CHILD UNSELFISHNESS

John Faux Douglas

One of the first things that every child should learn in the way of etiquette is to be unselfish and considerate of the rights of others. This is one thing which can be taught with comparative ease when the child is at the plastic age, but which is almost impossible for him to learn later.

An only child is very apt to be selfish and inconsiderate of the rights of others unless he is taught at an early age that he can't always have his own way. Sometimes such a child will be so lonely for other children's conpanionship that he will agree to anything that another child desires, but this is the exception rather than the rule.

When I was but a tot, I knew a girl by the name of Consuella. She was in the habit of playing with children I played with, and I had a chance to learn much about selfish children from her. She was the chief interest of a rich family. When she wanted a thing she asked for it, and, unless her wish was extremely extravagant, she got what she desired. This made her entirely unwilling to give in to the other children. She would want to play with our playthings, and if she took a fancy to them, she would try to keep them. The worst part of it was that her parents would defend her atrocious behavior. She very soon became so unpopular that none of the other children would permit her to play with them. Of course she was quite hurt at this. I don't consider, now, that she was to any great extent to blame for her actions. If her parents had taught her to give in to others at least half of the time, she would have been liked by everyone, because she was by nature a sweet child, I believe.

The children of a large family should, and usually do, learn to give in to each other. Besides this, they should be taught not to complain if one member of the family receives a gift or favor and they do not. It may be their turn next time. In any case, they should be taught—not told—to rejoice in each other's good fortune. Of course parents should not "play favorites;" this causes ill-feeling towards the one favored.

It is especially essential that the father should always treat his wife with great respect and deference before his young children so that they will always regard their mother in the same respectful way. They will treat Mother unselfishly if Father does. So, in order to set the proper example, if for no other reason, Father should always try to treat Mother with the greatest kindness.

Children learn very much by watching others, principally their parents, and if they see that Mother is always treated with great consideration by Father they will just naturally think that there is no other way to do. Father will come in for his share of devotion when the children are older, for they will be sure to think that their father is better than other fathers if he treats his wife better than other men do.

PIG CLUB TOUR ENDED SPENCER TOWNSHIP

Tuesday and Wednesday of this week completed the pig club tour in this county, under the leadership of the vocational teachers. At each of the places where stops were made, the boy who is in the club discussed the following points:

1. Why I joined the pig club.
2. How the pig was secured.
3. How the pig has been fed.
4. How the records are kept.
5. Future plans for raising pigs.

John W. Schwab of Purdue accompanied the club on this tour. He discussed many points that were helpful and interesting to the club members.

Six Spencer township boys with Mr. A. J. Smith, accompanied the party on Wednesday on the following route :

LINDBERGH
DID NOT WISH

Young men the world over have, with mingled feelings, read of the achievement of the youthful Charles Lindbergh. Admiration and pride in the glory of his feat has been most generously given by all—still what young man is there who has not "wished" that the opportunity had been his—and that he could have "zoomed" through to such everlasting glory?

The now "Colonel Lindbergh" MADE his opportunity. An unknown air-mail pilot, he SAVED part of his earnings. When the hour arrived he had $2,000 saved to offer on the altar of sincerity—and obtain the support of young business men of St. Louis. He was the largest individual contributor to the fund which made the flight possible.

HUSBAND BRUTAL, WIFE COMPLAINS

Florence Walter of Concord Township, Mother of Four Children, Asks Divorce

Charging that her husband was brutal to her, Florence A. Walter of Concord township, has instituted divorce proceedings in the DeKalb circuit court against George T. Walter.

Mrs. Walter alleges that her husband often struck and beat her violently, that he threatened her life and told her he cared nothing for her; and that on July 14 he beat her and ordered her to leave.

The couple were married February 3, 1914, and they have four children, Dale, 12, George, 8, Lewis 5, and Russell, 2. Mrs. Walter says her husband owns $10,000 in real and personal property and has an income of $2,000 a year. She asks for $5,000 alimony, the custody of the children and $600 a year for their support.

AUBURN PLANT EXPANDS

Plans for the finest service station for automobiles in Indiana have been approved by the Auburn Automobile company and the contract for the building has been awarded to J. R. Muhn.

Mr. Muhn started Wednesday to lay out the lines for the foundations of the new structure, another substantial unit to the large number of buildings. The new building will be 280 feet in length and 70 feet wide. It will be two stories in height and it will be constructed of concrete blocks, steel and glass. Mr. Muhn expects to rush the building to completion in the next ninety days.

The building will face Wayne street. The first floor will contain automobile parts and accessories. The second story will be used for the servicing, of Auburn automobiles and for the offices of the service department.

Early Bottles Quaint

Metal molds were used in making the first American bottles, which were quaint in design and more often than not colored. Inscriptions, rough bottoms and uneven necks characterized these early products. The necks or mouths were uneven because the glass was cut with shears while still in a molten state.

African Locusts Large

In certain parts of Africa the locusts are said by explorers to grow to an extraordinary size. In some places, it is reported, they attain the length of four inches, and eat mice as their ordinary food.

They Were Home Birds

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

WHEN Willa Wentworth had had a few very successful years of interior decorating in New York the longing for home and all that home meant swept over her.

"Home Sweet Home," she had written back to the folks at home in a thriving young midwestern city. "I'm coming along as soon as I can arrange it and build up my business there near you. I have saved a considerable sum to start with but know it won't take long—not with the New York stamp to my credit."

So Willa had stepped off the train from the East and into the arms of her devoted family. She almost took their breath away with her lovely clothes and the undoubted joy of home-coming.

"You've not grown away from us then, dearie, with all your success," said the fondest of mothers.

"Our Willa isn't that kind," said her father. "I always knew she'd fly home to the nest."

"We haven't even pulled down your old play house that—"

"And I'm glad you haven't," interrupted Willa, "because all the way out on the train I was thinking that it could be turned into an adorable studio-shop—that is, with slight improvements."

"You'll have to get the original builder to put on the addjitons," laughed Irma, the younger sister. "You decorators can't mix up your period design, you know."

Willa laughed heartily, "You were too young so you won't remember the designer of that play house—it was Lanky Dickinson, mother, you'll remember him—I seem to see him now with his long legs and lanky black hair."

"His folks still live in the old house," said Mr. Wentworth. "I hear Lanky has turned architect and has made good somewhere or other. He'd certainly be proud to see his first effort at building."

"I'd simply love to have him see it," laughed Willa, and in her eyes was the memory of that fine lanky boy who had been her playmate.

"He's hardly been home except for short visits while making his name and fortune," her mother told her "And now, we'll have to be busy planning some grand parties to show off our own homing bird."

And so the next few weeks were spent in a round of the most wonderful times that Willa had enjoyed for five long years.

Certainly the passing of a few years had not severed the bonds of love, and Willa found herself the center of a most devoted colony of friends.

Then, the urge to get to work again assailed her and she inspected the little old play house.

Lanky Dickinson had built it, and even then in his teens had shown promise of the big work he was to do in later life as an architect.

Willa gazed at the quaint little fireplace, the small windows draped in some lace that her mother had salvaged from the scrap bag, the small door on real hinges and the porch. That porch had been Lanky's especial pride, and he and Willa had planted a tiny shoot of rambler rose with hopes that had been more than realised. It had been only with generous pruning that the rose had been prevented from swamping the entire dwelling with crimson flowers.

As Willa stood contemplatively within her old play house where she and Lanky had spent so many joyous days a rush of memories swept over her.

"I simply won't have anyone but Lanky touch this place. If he's not to be found I will just build an entire new one," she told herself, and wondered how best to get in touch with Lanky.

The problem solved itself for Lanky, now known as Lawrence Dickinson, had also come home.

Willa was making a before-breakfast tour of the dew-linden garden when looking up she saw a long-legged man with a strand of black hair straggling across the sunniest of blue eyes gazing at her over the hedge.

"Lanky!"

"Snubs!"

A second later he was over the hedge and was holding both of Willa's hands and looking into her eyes with much the same look he had always kept for Snubs when they had played at sweethearts in days gone by.

"But I'm not Snubs anymore," said Willa blushing hotly, "I'm Miss Willa Wentworth, Decorator."

Lanky laughed a boyish, warm-hearted laugh. "And I am not Lanky, Miss Wentworth, but Lawrence Dickinson, Architect, F. L. G. P. H. L., etc., etc."

They both laughed and unconsciously moved toward the play house of memories.

"Lanky—I want it made a bit bigger and I don't want anyone but you to—"

"Snubs—If you let anyone but me build a stick on that house I'll—"

"Mind your head, Lanky—remember you've grown upward a bit."

"Upward maybe but not away," said Lanky, when they were both within the tiny house, "and remember, Snubs, you were my sweetheart then and I'm not giving up anything that was mine."

"I don't want you to," said Willa.

SPENCER TOWNSHIP FOUR H CLUB MEETING

More than a hundred members and friends of Spencer township Four H Clubs met at the Spencerville school Friday evening, July 15. The Clubs include Corn, Pig, Lamb, Poultry, Garden, Potato and Health Clubs.

The program consisted of a short talk by A. J. Smith, club leader. Songs and yells led by Virginia Goldsmith and Ada Bowsew; a reel of pictures on "Sheep Raising;" Another reel on "Should I own a tractor" and a playlet portraying the Corn Borer situation which was written by Kenton McCrory and Howard Beams, members of the club. Howard Beams, Harry Farver, Frederick Laub and Virgil Laux did the dramatizing in a very able manner. Refreshments of ice cream, cake and pop corn balls, were served and all went home feeling that this was a very successful meeting.

UNIQUE IN MYSTERIES

All sorts of detectives and mysteries have figured in fiction—but none so unique and interesting as those in our new serial, "The Green Cloak." You will be intrigued by the mystery itself, but more so by the old professor of science with his application of electric discoveries and mechanical devices. You will be deeply absorbed in the question as to whether the girl in the story was a criminal, was entirely innocent or was the unconscious tool of others. We doubt if you ever have read a more completely fascinating tale. It is to start soon in The St. Joe News.

LOVELY RAIMENT FOR BOUDOIR; THE MODISH THING IN PRINTS

WHO would forfeit the pleasure and satisfaction of owning lovely raiment for the boudoir, since anyone possessed of an artistic sense of color values, and a little ingenuity can conjure alluring garments at a slight expense, which look as if they cost a "million."

The first requisite for one contemplating making a midsummer boudoir negligee is to rightly choose the materials. "Sheer" is the word when it comes to the purely feminine types now so in vogue—this being interpreted means dainty chiffons and lace in abundance. And the colors! The rainbow, the depths of a sea-shell, the heart of a rose or a bouquet of nature's choicest blossoms tell the story of tones and tints which blend into a symphony of beauty under the artful maneuvering of creative genius.

A Lovely Boudoir Robe.

When it comes to a picturesque silhouette, depend mostly upon sleeves for its accomplishment, if sleeves one may call the long floating panels and drapes which fall from the shoulder with such infinite grace, as do those in this picture. The color scheme for this dainty negligee is peach with orchid, the latter placed over the former, one thin material on top of another. Quantities of deep cream lace enter into the composition with a plentiful use of peach and orchid ribbons with handmade silk flowers adding still another enchantment.

There's a new vogue starting within the realm of milady's boudoir—the negligee of soft white crepe satin with trimmings of white lace and white ribbon or else exquisitely faggoted.

Effective, too, are the colorful satins which bear applique designs of one shade upon another. The motifs stress both conventional patterns and realistic florals.

There's no end to the silk-print subject. Prints in the small cravat types are the essence of smartness. The flowers stand out vividly against their plain grounds, their gay color accented further by solid navy or bright borderings or trimmings—perhaps an inset portion of the plain silk is introduced in a manner as illustrated.

If you have not acquired a silk-print frock it is a safe guess that you will before the season is over, for few there are who will escape this epidemic for printed chiffons, flat silks or crepe de chines which is sweeping the country.

One does not stop at the dress when ordering print silk for the costume. It is very proper to line one's solid-color coat throughout with this same print, or why not make a little circular cape of the silk with which to accompany the frock!

Plaited printed silk is wonderfully effective in combination with the smooth figured fabric. If you are making your silk-print frock at home use plaited flounces on the skirt, or an entire plaited skirt. A little money spent on plaiting and hemstitching is a guarantee against that "bogie" which ever dwells in the mind of the amateur—the fear of a "homemade" look.

It adds to the appearance of the silk-print frock if each ruffle is bordered with a band of solid color. If the edge is picoted before plaiting the ruffles are given an exquisite finish. Picoted plain silk should then also trim the blouse or waist portion. Sprightly shoulder and hip bows could also be made of the solid-colored silk, which should be picoted on each edge like ribbon.

The compose idea of a printed-silk jacket with a plaited white silk skirt is an outcome of the print-with-plain vogue. This is especially effective when the silk is colorfully patterned in chints designs. Prints in black and white are meeting with success.

TO CAN PEACHES AND APRICOTS AT HOME

Most Satisfactory Plan for Canning.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Peaches are among the most satisfactory fruits for canning at home. They should be canned as soon after picking as possible. Only clean, sound fruit should be used. The canning may be done by the water-bath method—that is, in a wash-boiler or any covered vessel sufficiently deep to hold all the jars completely immersed in water while standing on a rack or false bottom. The following directions for canning peaches are taken from Farmers' Bulletin 1471-F, "Canning Fruits and Vegetables at Home," which may be obtained free from the United States Deparement of Agriculture.

Before preparing the fruit make thin sirup, using 1 cup of sugar to each 3 cups of water. A richer sirup may be made if desired, if the peaches are not very sweet, using only 2 cups of water. Put in one cracked peach pit for each quart of sirup. Boil 5 minutes and strain.

Immerse the peaches in boiling water for about 1 minute, or until the skins will slip easily, cut the peaches into halves, and discard the pits. If any quantity of peaches are to be handled, it is better to use a lye solution for peeling them. The method for doing this is described in the bulletin on canning. Pack the peaches into jars as soon as they are peeled and cut into pieces, placing the halves in overlapping layers, concave surfaces downward. Fill up the containers with boiling sirup. Process quart and pint glass jars for 25 minutes in boiling water if the fruit is fairly firm and hard, or for 20 minutes if it is ripe and tender. No. 2 and No. 3 tin cans are processed 15 minutes.

Apricots are handled in the same way.

USING COTTON IN TAILORED STYLES

Easily Laundered at Home and Are Crisp and Fresh.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The trend toward simple tailored styles for street and business wear is being reflected in summer washable dresses. Various cotton fabrics are seen in offices or in the shopping districts during the warm months, and because of the appropriate weaves, patterns and colors available this season, these are giving excellent satisfaction. Cotton always has the advantage of being easily laundered at home so that one may have a number of fresh, crisp, inviting garments on hand all the time.

One of the best cotton materials for making up in tailored styles suitable for street wear is dotted swiss. It comes in many different colors including several that do not readily show soil, such as brown, navy blue, gray, or forest green, and also in many lighter shades or in combinations of color—a background of one color, with dots of another. The crisp texture of dotted swiss is excellent for rather severe designs, although so often this material is thought of only in connection with afternoon or party dresses.

Dotted Swiss in Tailored Effect.

Here is a trim street costume in navy blue dotted swiss with trimmings of white bias lawn tape. There are two collars, the upper one white and detachable so that it may be washed more often than the entire dress requires. The dress appears to be a two-piece costume, but in reality it is all in one, the joining being concealed by a dark blue belt matching the tie. There are three pleats on each side of the skirt, bound on the edges with white bias tape, which serves to keep them in place. The bottom of the blouse is finished with a scalloped line bound with the tape, and the cuffs on the short sleeves are trimmed in the same way. The tie is made interesting by having pearl buttons in graded sizes set on it, and these are matched by the pearl belt buckle. Many other trim designs could be developed in dotted swiss, and this style, as well as others, could be made up in numerous cotton materials appropriate for street wear. The new printed charmeuse, ginghams, printed zephyrs, lawns, and suitings are all pleasing and practical. All-over patterns on dark backgrounds are generally best to select when one must ride in public conveyances or handle dusty books or papers.

USE WHITE ICING FOR LAYER CAKE

Successful Way of Making Cooked Frosting.

Here's an entirely different and always successful way of making cooked frosting for layer cake. The outside of the icing will have a crisp, shiny crust and the inside will be moist and soft. The bureau of home economics furnishes the recipe, which can be modified for chocolate or caramel frosting. If directions are carefully followed there should never be a failure with this icing.

Put the sugar, water and unbeaten egg-white into the upper part of a double boiler. Have the water in the lower part boiling. Commence beating the mixture with an egg beater at once and beat constantly while it cooks for about 7 or 8 minutes. It should then appear just like ordinary boiled frosting and should be almost thick enough for spreading. Take it from the stove and continue to beat about 5 minutes or until it has thickened.

If the icing proves to be insufficiently cooked it may be placed in the double boiler and be recooked for a short time. Or if it is too stiff add a small quantity of water and cook again.

Chocolate Frosting — Melt 2½ squares of chocolate and pour into above mixture just before removing it from the stove. Beat thick and thin spread.

Caramel Frosting.—Caramelize one-half cupful of sugar, then add a few tablespoonfuls of boiling water. A thin dark sirup should result. Substitute about two tablespoonfuls of this sirup in place of two tablespoonfuls of water, or such amount as will produce the desired flavor; and continue as in vanilla frosting, above.

Food Materials Wasted Because of Preparation

It is more economical to serve small, though adequate portions, and permit second helpings to the hungry ones, than to heap up the plates, only to have uneaten food thrown away. Food should look appetising when it comes to the table. It takes very little time and no extra expense to garnish a platter, cover up the hot vegetables to keep them warm, or remove skin, surplus fat and gristle from meat. Good food materials may be wasted because of poor preparation. Scorched food is an especially needless waste. Inexpensive materials can be made palatable by good seasoning.

Make Your Aprons of Paper

A DOZEN basting stitches, a half roll of cheap crinkled crepe paper, and an apron is made which never knows the labor of ironing or washing day. Its life is shorter than cotton, but its expense is infinitely less, and its labor is nil.

A half roll is taken for the skirt, a double band for the waist. A small section for the bib and two crinkled straps frilled at the edges make quick decoration to take the place of lace or embroidery. There is enough paper left from the single inexpensive roll to make another shorter apron.

The new paper table cloths are also a great saving in ironing, and they can be purchased in packages of one dozen, with the varied designs of linen cloths put into them.

Crepe paper dust caps are a better protection to the hair while cleaning than those made of loosely woven cotton. We also get the message that at the smart boarding and day schools the little girls are wearing generous bows on their hair of bright crepe paper to take the place of expensive ribbons. The bows are first made and then fastened to the hair with the usual small comb or loop of tape.

To Make an Unusual Basket Pillow

TO MAKE an unusual cushion in the shape of a basket, an ordinary square pillow may be used as the base. Chalk lines or pencil marks may then be drawn upon it the shape of the basket, and the sides of the pillow sewn on these lines, pressing the feathers inward as the sewing progresses. The sides may then be cut off leaving the pillow in a basket shape.

Gray, green or old rose moire silk makes an excellent basis for the cover, its heavy weave suggesting a basket texture. Two yards will be sufficient for the cushion. Strips of dull gold braid sewn onto the moire silk crosswise give an added basket effect.

An effect of overhanging flowers is made by sewing different shades of pale green colored satin ribbon, leaf shaped, upon each other. Full blown flowers at the top are made with rose-colored satin or taffeta, buttonholed with chenille.

Chains of gilt braid form the handles at the side of the basket, and the rings are made of thin curtain rings buttonholed with heavyweight embroidery silk.

Medieval Flowers

The cultivation of flowers in the Middle ages was not merely a delight in beauty; superstition led to some peculiarly mundane uses. Flowers were charms to keep away evil spirits; they were prized for medicinal value, made into love philters and adopted as emblems of rival camps and factions.

Native American

Muskrats are purely North American animals. Their long scaly tails, flattened vertically, act as rudders when the stocky animals are in the water, says Nature Magazine. There is little danger of extermination at present, though their fur has been extensively used under various trade names. The average length is 21 inches, weight two pounds.

Oldest American Line

The Baltimore & Ohio railroad is the oldest in America. Its first rail was laid July 4, 1828, by Charles Carroll of Carrollton, the last survivor of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. It can thus claim the distinction of being the oldest American railroad, although the Delaware & Hudson is an older company.

GIRLHOOD TO MOTHERHOOD

Iowa Woman Found Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Always Helpful

Vinton, Iowa.—"When I was seventeen years old I had to stay at home from school. I finally had to quit school, I was so weak. I suffered for about two years before I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, then I picked up one of your books and read it. I began taking the medicine. Now I am a housekeeper with six children, and I have taken it before each one was born. I cannot tell you all the good I have received from it. When I am not as well as can be I take it. I have been doing this for over thirteen years and it always helps me. I read all of your little books I can get and I tell everyone I know what the Vegetable Compound does for me."—Mrs. Frank Sellers, 510 7th Avenue, Vinton, Iowa.

Many girls in the fourth generation are learning through their own personal experiences the beneficial effects of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Mothers who took it when they were young are glad to recommend it to their daughters.

For over half a century, women have praised this reliable medicine.

DAVID AND GOLIATH

LESSON TEXT—I Samuel 17:1-58.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom shall I be afraid?

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Boy Overcomes a Giant.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Boy's Brave Deed.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why David Was Not Afraid.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Victories of Faith.

I. The Contending Armies (17:1-3).

On the north side of the Valley of Elah, on the highlands, stood Saul and his army, and on the south side stood the Philistine hosts, eyeing each other for battle. According to an ancient custom, the Philistines, having a warrior among them of great strength, sought to decide the war by a combat between two selected champions. The nation whose champion was slain was to be subject unto the other.

II. The Champions (17:4-37).

1. Goliath of the Philistines. (a) He was a giant (v. 4), perhaps eleven and one-half feet in height. The appearance of such a man greatly intimidated the Israelites. Saul, who once was brave, made no attempt or effort to meet this giant.

(b) He was filled with proud conceit. His size, his panoply of war, and his strength, caused him to believe that no evil could befall him. His conceit became his snare.

(c) He was boastful. No doubt he was a much-talked-of man among the Philistines. Their possession of such a map recalled the former experience of their nation when Samson, the Israelite giant, wrought such great mischief among them.

(d) He was defiant. He openly defied the army of Israel—the people of the Most High. That is just like the champion of Satan's hosts now. He is becoming more and more defiant of the Lord's people, and ultimately will defy the Almighty Himself.

(e) He was scornful. He treated the Israelites with the utmost contempt. This is what Satan is doing daily. He treats God's people with the utmost contempt.

2. David, the Israelite.

In the providence of God, David was sent to the camp at a time to hear the blatant boasting of this proud and contemptible Philistine champion. His three eldest brethren were in the army, and his father sent him with some provisions for them as well as for the captain. While David was talking with his brothers, Goliath made his appearance. The sight of Israel's cowardice and lack of zeal for God prompted David to offer his services. Note the character of David. (a) A mere youth, a stripling not used to war. (b) He was courageous. When all Israel were afraid, he undertook this task. Besides, he had proven his bravery before in defending his flock against the lion and the bear. (c) He had a mighty faith in God. He argued that what God had done for him He would do again. (d) He had meekness and self-control. This he exhibited in a remarkable manner under the gibes of Eliab (v. 28). (e) He was skillful. He had become such an expert in the use of the sling that he had absolute confidence in the issue of his attack. He was not a blind enthusiast who disregarded the use of means, but was careful to use means, and most particular as to what they should be. He put aside the untried armor of Saul. He knew that God's will for him was to use by faith that which he had thought insignificant. This is God's will for us.

III. The Battle (vv. 38-48).

When Goliath beheld David coming up against him, he cursed him by his gods—Dagon, Baal, and Astarte, showing that it was not merely a battle between David and Goliath, but between true and false religion. David hasted and ran to meet Goliath. The stone from his sling smote Goliath in the forehead and he fell to the earth upon his face. David went forth in the name of the Lord of hosts—that all the earth might know that there was a God in Israel. The whole matter shows that the battle is not with the strong, but with those who put their trust in God.

IV. The Victory (vv. 49-58).

The Philistine champion was killed and the army routed. This victory is a prophecy of a greater one when the devil, the defiant enemy of God and man, shall be slain and his army put to flight. David is thus the type of Christ and Goliath a type of Satan. Goliath's sword was turned against himself and typified that Christ shall turn Satan's weapons against him for his own destruction.

Colorado Boasts of Most Expensive Road

The most expensive road built in the United States is in Colorado.

This is the state highway between Ouray, Silverton and Durango and parts of it cost $50,000 a mile.

This highway follows an old toll road and to construct it the state had to blast out large sections of the mountains, build masonry embankments, fill in gorges construct bridges and build stone walls to make travel safe.

There are numerous places where the stream in the bottom of the canon near Ouray is more than 2,000 feet below the highway and other places where it is 3,000 feet or more.

Aside from the scenic gradeur of this highway, piercing as it does some of the most rugged mountains in the state, the marvel in its construction is the wonder of the auto tourist. It is on the direct route between Mesa Verde, Telluride, Ouray, Silverton and Durango.

Wesley Great Horseman

The most redoubtable horseman of the Eighteenth century was John Wesley. All through his active life he rode from 60 to 70 miles a day; after he was eighty years of age his record for a year was from 4,000 to 5,000 miles. Often he was in the saddle by 3 a. m., and, when weather permitted, it was his custom to ride with loose rein, reading history the while.—A. M. Pagan, in the Empire Review.

Explorer's Homely Longing

Men enduring hardships in foreign lands never seem to pine for rich French dishes, but for the everyday things they despised at home.

DAIRY

BIG POINTS IN JUDGING CATTLE

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Dairy-cattle judging as practiced today is based on the supposition that a correlation exists between producing ability of the dairy cow and her conformation, says the United States Department of Agriculture. The principles of judging commonly used in selecting animals of the approved conformation are outlined in Miscellaneous Circular No. 99-M, just issued by the department. The publication is well illustrated with photographs illustrating various points in dairy-cattle judging.

The aim of the circular is to show the dairyman or the prospective dairyman, who has first made his selection and choice from the records of production, by what points of conformation he should be guided in selecting animals for his herd so that they may approach as nearly as possible the type selected by the breed association and followed generally by judges in the show ring. The publication will also serve as a guide for students in dairy husbandry who may wish to compete in judging contests.

Since the most important objective in dairy-cattle judging is to enable one to select more efficiently cows that will be economical producers of milk, it is well first to fix clearly in mind the points that are thought to be most closely associated with milk production and that are therefore the major points, and to leave those of less significance in the background. From the present knowledge of the relation of function to form, these points are dairy temperament, body capacity and mammary system. Of less importance from the production standpoint are general appearance and type, also size and condition. In addition there are what might be called the fancy points, closely associated with type, such as a pretty head, level rump, small horns, straight back, and well-balanced udder. These fancy points are only slightly, if at all, correlated with producing ability. They do, however, add to the beauty of the animal and thus enhance its selling value.

These points and the emphasis to be placed on them in judging animals are discussed in the circular in considerable detail. A copy may be obtained, as long as the supply lasts, by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington.

Satisfactory System of Calf Feeding Developed

The Ottawa (Canada) experimental farm has developed a fairly satisfactory system of calf feeding. For the first feeding they see to it that the calf gets the colostrum milk from its dam. If this is not available then another fresh cow is used. For the first two weeks the calf gets a daily ration of from eight to twelve pounds of whole milk. This is given three times a day so as to not overload the stomach of the calf.

The amount of milk is slightly increased during the third and fourth weeks. Following that time the calf is gradually shifted to skim milk and is fed a grain mixture plus a calf meal. Only a limited amount of this meal is given at first and the amount gradually increased as the calf increases in size.

The calf meal which they use as a substitute for the fat in the milk is made of two parts of finely ground oats, two parts of corn meal, one part of ground flaxseed, one-half of one per cent salt and 1 per cent bone meal. Two parts of oil meal may be substituted in place of the flaxseed, but it is not so good. This mixture is fed by putting the amount needed for a day's feeding in a pail, pouring scalding water over it and then feeding the mixture the following evening and morning.

Low-Yielding Cows Will Reduce Dairying Profits

It is low-yielding cows that "play hob" with farm dairying. They eat just about as much as cows that yield a profit, and each one costs just as much in labor, feed and equipment as does a good cow, the one that makes money for her owner. The worst thing about these low yielders is the fact they put milk on the market in competition with the money-making cows, and do this during times of surplus. Thus they increase the supply of milk out of proportion to the demand, which lowers the price of all milk throughout the year, whether used on the fluid market or for butter, cheese or other dairy products. The menace to dairying is not more good cows, but too many cows of low production.

Sire for Dairy Herd

Most dairymen prefer to purchase a young bull. By so doing they save express charges, they run less chance of introducing disease into their herds, and they get a bull that is easily handled. It is a safer practice, however, to buy a proven bull. The get of a bull furnish the best proof of the kind of individuals he will sire. An inexperienced breeder should have some one familiar with pedigrees to advise him about the breeding of a bull before purchasing.

Uncle William's Golden Dream

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(Copyright.)

My Genevieve, sweet Genevieve,
The seasons come, the seasons go—

THE words of the singer came over the radio very distinctly to Uncle William, more distinctly than to any of the other old men of the home clustered about the radio. This was due partly to the fact that he was younger than any of the others and his hearing was quite perfect. But it was also due to his familiarity with the words of the song. Years ago he had sung it with a girl whose name really had been Genevieve—Genevieve Gray.

There had been a time when he had hoped that her name would become Genevieve Whipple, but shifting circumstances and events had separated them and to this day he did not know what had become of her.

But still the hand of memory weaves
The golden dreams of long ago.

If one doesn't care much for checkers or reading or raking the garden, there isn't a great deal for an old man to do except think. And it pleased Uncle William to think a great deal about this long ago Genevieve. She had become his golden dream. He recalled her as an apple blossom sort of girl—pink-cheeked, softly fashioned, sweet.

Sometimes, when his niece Gloria dropped in to see him, he scanned her for some resemblance to his old sweetheart, but although Gloria was young and lively and handsome she was as different from Genevieve Gray as her cropped head, brief skirts and frank outspokeness were different from the other's ribboned curls, lace ruffles and demure charm.

Yet Gloria was very good to Uncle William. She hated his being at the home, but what could a girl do who earned every cent she had in the world? Even if she married Jim Corbin, it would be a long time before Jim earned enough to run an establishment for three people. No, Uncle William was better off at the home. But Gloria ran in whenever she could with bits of gossip about her small affairs, a ticket to the theater, a magazine.

It was Gloria who came in just as "Sweet Genevieve" died away in the speaker. She had some very important news this time, although at first hand it didn't seem to concern Uncle William particularly.

"Do you remember the Demings, Uncle William?" she began.

"Demings," repeated Uncle William thoughtfully. "Demings. Let me see. Might it be Harvey Deming's boy that went to the city and opened up a hotel?"

"That's the one," nodded Gloria. "Well, I met a girl who rooms there and when she heard I came from Cabotville, she remembered that Mrs. Deming, who runs the hotel—it's a sort of family boarding house—also came from Cabotville and took me round to see her. And now she's asked me to have my wedding in her little parlor. If I don't, Jim and I will just go round to the city hall. But if I accept her invitation, why, you can come and see me married. It hangs on you, you see. How about it, Uncle William? Will you come?"

"Very well, my dear," he said indulgently. "If you want the old man to come, guess he'll have to. Let me know the day and I'll spruce up the best I can."

Any bride is lovely and any recital of the ceremony solemn and breathtaking. But Uncle William, stiff and uncomfortable, his hands folded on an ivory-headed cane, was ill at ease and wishing himself back in the home when, suddenly, his eyes became riveted on the young girl who stood up to take Gloria's flowers as she held out her finger for the ring. He had been noticing nobody but his niece, and now he had all the sensations of a blow in the face. The girl—it must have been that friend Gloria had spoken of—was the exact embodiment of his golden dream. She was Genevieve Gray in likeness if not in the flesh itself.

Uncle William trembled, looking at her. He could hardly wait until the minister closed his book, gave the couple his blessing, and turned away.

Just then Gloria came over to him and threw her arms about his neck. "Thanks for coming, darling," she cried. "Now you must meet Rita's mother. Oh, Mrs. Lane—"

But Uncle William was already staring at the stout, gray-haired woman with the plump, homely face who was walking towards him. "Surely," she said, "you haven't forgotten the little Genevieve Gray who used to sing in the choir with you! I'm Mrs. George Lane now, and Rita here is about the same age as your niece. Ah, how we all change with the years! I remember you as a tall, thin boy with a mop of black hair and—well, heaven knows what you remember about me!"

When Gloria had gone away with her Jim, and Mrs. Deming and Genevieve Gray Lane were talking about the wedding, Uncle William turned pathetically to Rita. "I'll be lonesome, with Gloria away. Run in and cheer an old man up sometimes," he suggested wistfully.

"Of course, I will," said Rita gently. And, if she thought of it and had the spare time, she would. How could she know that she embodied his "golden dream of long ago"?

Her Reply to His Proposal

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

IT HAPPENED not long ago—the very Monday after New Year's day, to be exact. Tom Brinsley had started the year off right, as he thought, by spending the evening writing to Helen Beaston asking her to be his wife.

Helen Beaston was a very efficient young woman who was now proud to be called the general manager of the query department of a large research organization. Through time and the custom of her work she had become very precise. Nothing that might conceivably be done today did she ever leave until tomorrow. Surely not the answering of a business letter, and just as surely not the answering of a personal letter. Helen did not like to have personal letters come to her office, and Tom knew she didn't, but once Tom had got up enough courage to ask Helen to be his wife he was impatient to know her answer. Helen had been away for over the New Year's holidays and he wanted her to read and answer the letter Monday.

Helen read the letter as she ate her luncheon—or she read it as her luncheon became cold before her and was finally left almost untasted. Clearly Helen was much moved by the contents of this letter, but her mind was made up to say "no." She had spent some years in working up to the position she now occupied. She felt that she was needed there.

It was somewhat cold that Monday after New Year's and as Helen took her chair before her desk her fingers were numb. It was also the first business day since the first of the year.

Helen used her personal stationery; and as she rolled the sheet into the typewriter she was framing the words of the first sentence of this really difficult letter. She always dated her letters at the top. Her fingers started to write 1926—then she restrained them. One of the figures should be changed. Instead of writing 1927 she wrote 1937.

Helen felt that this was a stupid mistake. But she decided to go on with the letter. Later when she had taken the sheet from the roller she would erase the mistake and rewrite it correctly.

"Dear Tom," she wrote—and her eyes glanced up at the figures 1937 staring at her from the top of the sheet. "I spent my entire luncheon hour reading your letter." Again she saw those figures—1-9-3-7. Rather unpleasant looking date, she thought. Helen wondered whether she would still be sitting there before that desk in 1937. "It is not easy to write my answer—in fact, I think it would be easier to talk to you instead." Then another look at the figures. Helen reflected that in 1937 she would be thirty-eight. She would be living alone in 1937 as she was living now. "Somehow I want to let you know how much I admire you." Helen wrote that because that was part of the letter she had planned on her way from the lunchroom, but again the figures stared across at her. Helen wondered where exactly she would be in 1937. She was ambitious and she had found what success she had gained sweet indeed. But in a way she had reached the top rung of the ladder. There were no better-paid positions open to women in her organization. But she would be able to do something else. Yes, in ten years more she ought to have doubled her present salary. Still it wasn't just more salary that counted. The figures at the top of the letter seemed to grow larger and larger—that was perhaps the effect of coming into the heated office from the cold outdoors. It would have been so much easier to write the letter if she had not seen that horrid date, 1937—1937.

With Tom it would be different. In ten years Tom would, as he hoped, be a very prominent lawyer. There was not the slightest doubt of that. He would have friends—loads of them—a wonderful home and—it seemed as if a voice somewhere outside of her whispered the words—"a wife," and then, as Helen protested that Tom said he would never marry anyone else, the voice seemed to laugh—and another serious, proper sort of voice said, "Anyway you wouldn't want to think that just because you didn't want him Tom would never, never marry. You ought to be glad to think that men always do get over such disappointments. You really want Tom to marry—"

That was as much as Helen could stand. She snatched the paper from her typewriter with a yank that almost sent the machine off her desk. Then she quickly ran another sheet of paper into place. She didn't bother with any date.

"Dear Tom," she wrote. "I spent all my lunch hour reading your wonderful letter. It is hard to write my answer because I want to see you to tell you how happy you have made me. Of course my answer to all your questions is 'yes.' Please come to see me tonight. We can have a talk in the little parlor downstairs. Always yours and only yours."

Without rereading the letter Helen signed it and tucked it in an envelope, which she addressed by hand. Then she pressed the button on her desk that summoned an errand boy.

"Take this over to Mr. Brindley's office in the State building," she told him, "and see that you give it to him personally. It is a matter of very important business."

NEARLY 22,000 MEMBERS IN INDIANA 4-H CLUBS

Number at Present Time Is Largest Ever Enrolled in Any State

LAFAYETTE, July 19.—Nearly 22,000 Indiana farm boys and girls are enrolled in the 4-H club army of the state, it was announced today by Z. M. Smith, state club leader of the extension staff of Purdue University, and director of vocational education. This is the largest enrollment since the war, when thousands were in garden clubs, and is the largest bona-fide agricultural and home economics club number ever entered in the state. The clubs extend into every county of the state, and are growing rapidly.

For the second successive year the girls are leading the boys in number enrolled. They have 11,519 members against 9,919 boys, although both groups have several more clubs to be entered which will increase these figures somewhat.

In the girls' club work, which is supervised by Misses Neva Stephenson and May Masten, the clothing club as proved most popular, attracting 8,802 girls between the ages of 10 and 18 years. The baking clubs attracted an enrollment of 977, the health club 944 girls, canning 643, homekeeping 135 and leadership clubs, in which club members are trained to direct the work of oncoming club members, have 18 enrolled. Several hundred girls are carrying one or more lines of this work. Their enrollment comes from 86 counties, in which a total of 681 clubs have been organized under the direction of 541 women leaders.

Pig clubs, one of the oldest lines of junior project work, proved most popular with the boys with 2,406 enrolled. The poultry project was second with 1,860, corn third with 1,680, potatoes fourth with 1,563 and dairy calf club fifth with 1,125 members.

The other lines of club work had following enrollment: Livestock judging, 825; beef cattle, 496; dairy record club, 120; lamb club, 275; colts, 50; bees, 58; garden, 222; orchard, 87 and farm management, 252.

The boys' club work is supervised by a host of leaders, including teachers of vocational agriculture, county agricultural agents, other teachers, and a number of instances volunteer leaders including farmers, bankers and others interested in the work. The assistant state leaders are F. M. Shanklin, H. F. Ainsworth and W. A. Smith.

Pulaski county, with 461 girls enrolled, has the largest number of girls in the various forms of club work while Tippecanoe county, with 351 boys, has the largest number in those clubs. Delaware county is second in both classes of enrollment with 368 girls and 297 boys, or a grand total of 665 against a grand total of 682 in Tippecanoe, the largest gross enrollment.

Some of the other outstanding counties in the way of enrollment follow: Boys, Laporte, 288; Knox, 283; Madison, 263; Grant, 254; St. Joseph, 248; Fountain, 240; Greene, 235; Wayne, 221 and DeKalb, 215. Some of the largest enrollments of girls in club work besides Pulaski, Delaware and Tippecanoe counties follow: Laporte, 335; Wells, 302; Johnson, 297; Grant, 296; Allen, 298; DeKalb, 290; Huntington, 290, Madison, 235; Knox, 280; St. Joseph, 201; Fountain, 211; Greene, 214; Wayne, 277; Elkhart, 263; Henry, 242; Lawrence, 242.

An interesting phase of the growth of club work, especially the girls' work over the last few years has been the part taken by men and women who because of their interest in this work have volunteered their services to supervise the work of the boys and girls and direct it in the right way. Five years ago there were only 4,459 girls enrolled and 226 women supervised their work. This year with 11,519 thus far, there are 541 women, including 58 vocational teachers of home economics.

The training given in this 4-H club work is intended to bring about what the 4-H emblem implies, development of the head, heart, hand and health, and the state program is planned broadly along these lines. All of the projects have a direct practical application for farms and homes of the state.

Be Sure of

Your Vision

So great is the percentage of those having defective vision and so frequently are the ill-effects of poor eyesight attributed to some other cause, that you can not afford to merely guess that your eyes are normal. Even if you are now wearing glasses, changes may have occurred in your eyes that make new glasses necessary. Some common indications are: HEAD ACHE, PAINS IN THE EYEBALL, PAINS AT BASE OF THE BRAIN, A PRESSURE AT TOP OF THE HEAD, EYES SMART and BURN, SUBJECT TO DIZZY SPELLS. If you are wearing glasses they may need changing and if you are not, it may be you should be wearing them. Come in and without obligation on your part, we will give you an HONEST EXAMINATION and a SQUARE DEAL.

BARREL JUMPER WILLIAMS GAVE EXHIBITION

In conjunction with the weekly band concert Saturday evening St. Joe and community were given an exhibition of barrel jumping by Ralph Williams and son, who are circulating the small towns and soliciting merchants to finance the two performaces.

Mr. Williams served as physical and acrobatic instructor in the army during the World War and carries credentials approving of his work and ability along this line.

The fore part of the program was given to physical exercises. The stunts showed skill on the part of the performer. The highly advertised stunt, that of jumping into a barrell with two of the largest citizens and never touching their clothing, was pulled off just as advertised. In the afternoon John Betz and one of the bridgmen assisted and in the evening Joe Foltz and Derwood Ridgway assisted, and can verify to the truth of the act. Many other novelty features were used and in all the Williams' pleased the large audiences.

DERTHICK PLEADS GUILTY TO CHARGE

Sherman Derthick entered a plea of guilty to a charge of child neglect when he was arraigned in the DeKalb circuit court Saturday morning.

However, Derthick told Judge Endicott that he had not been able to find regular employment and that he had just gone to work at Logansport when the officers, of the law took him into custody on complaint of his former wife, Gladys Derthick.

Derthick was free to admit that he should pay the $6 weekly ordered for the support of his daughters. The only property he owns outright is a horse and an effort will be made to dispose of it in order to apply the proceeds to the support payments.

The court took the case under advisement for a few days, ordering Derthick kept in custody in the meantime. He was told to see if he could get some one to go on his bond to assure compliance with the court's order in the future.

TWENTY-FIVE GUESTS AT AKINS HOME

Who wouldn't be surprised when twenty-five people would come to your home on a Sunday morning? Mrs Frank Akins admits she was but the best part was, they all brought their baskets well filled. FORMER NEWVILLE RESIDENT DIES IN BUTLER

James A. Bryant, a former Newville resident and veteran, died at his home in Butler last week, funeral services being conducted from the U. B. Church at Newville by Rev. Hubartt on Friday afternoon. He was born in Paige county, Virginia, May 21, 1845 and died July 20, 1927 at the age of 82 years, 1 month and 20 days. At the age of 17 he was mustered into the army from the south and served two years. In 1896 he married Mrs. Jennie Ritter of Chicago, and they lived there some four or five years, then moving to Newville. About twenty years ago they moved to Butler. For the past twelve years he was blind. Richard Rupp had charge of the burial.

ST. JOE WINS

St. Joe again proved that they have a real ball team when they defeated the fast Hicksville A. A. on the local diamond Sunday, score 8-3.

Hicksville put up a good fight but lack of hits when needed proved their defeat. However, much credit is due to our battery and the fast team work of our fielders, fact is, there was no special star, they all starred.

The team certainly appreciates the support they are being given, but they need more. So come on you fans, snap out of it. Watch bills for next game.

LIFE OF WILLIS BAKER IS ENDED

Ephriam Willis Baker, son of Stephen and Mary Reasoner Baker, was born in Licking County, Ohio, March 23, 1855 and departed this life at the home of his son, Ora D. Baker, in St. Joe, on Thursday, July 21, 1927, at the age of 72 years, 3 months and 28 days.

When he was a boy of thirteen years, he came with his parents to Concord Township and located two miles north of St. Joe, or just north of the Ora Baker home which was marked by a log cabin up to just a few years ago, and for practically eighty years he has been recognized as one of Concord Township's substantial farmers and citizens.

In November, 1875, he married Anna J. Saylor and one son, as above mentioned was born to this union.

Four years ago in April, Mrs. Baker passed away and since that time he made his home with his son. In fact, Mrs. Baker died in his home also, as the Baker homestead had been destroyed by fire, shortly before.

Mr. Baker was a very prominent figure about St. Joe, being jovial in his disposition and being a pioneer of the township was able to relate many interesting tales of his boyhood days. In spite of his ill health for months past he continued in this same good spirit. His illness of late was short, being confined to his bed only a few weeks.

Besides his son, Ora, he leaves two grandchildren, Lester and Violet, one sister, Mrs. Joseph Hull of St. Joe and Mahlon Baker, a cousin of Auburn, and a host of friends in this community.

He was converted under the pastorate of Rev. Lancaster at Concord.

The funeral service was held from the M. P. Church Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. C. H. Havens of Muncie, officiating assisted by Rev. J. F. McKnight. Interment in Riverside cemetery. E. R. Kinsey, director.

CARD OF THANKS

We desire in this maner to thank the friends and neighbors, the singers and all who assisted in any way during the death of our father.

BROTHER OF MRS. MARTHA WOODCOX DEAD

Funeral services for the late William H. Callendar, the father of Mrs. Gay West of Auburn, who passed away suddenly Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Lottie Bassett of near Concord, another daughter, were held at the Union Chapel church Saturday morning at 10 o'clock with interment made in the cemetery at Hicksville, Ohio.

The deceased was eighty-two years of age the second of December last. He was born in Stark County, Ohio, and came to DeKalb County thirty-two years ago from near Hicksville, taking up his residence near Union Chapel. Since six years ago the deceased has lived in Auburn.

Mr. Callender is survived by two daughters and two sons, Mrs. Hay of Auburn, Mrs. Bassett at whose home he died, O. E. Callender, living on a farm a mile north of Albion and O. L. Callender of Cosinga, California. A sister, Mrs. Martha Woodcox of St. Joe, and thirteen grandchildren are other surviving relatives.

ORDERED TO PAY $40 EACH MONTH

An order was entered in the DeKalb circuit court Thursday requiring George T. Walter to pay $40 a month for the support of his family pending the trial of the divorce suit filed by Florence A. Walter July 15.

The defendant is also restrained by court action from selling or encumbering his farm in Concord township and from making any disposition of a $1,400 mortgage held against Wm. Keeler. The latter was directed to make his payments on the mortgage to the St. Joe Valley Bank to be held there until further order of the court.

Mrs. Walter, in her divorce complaint, charges her husband with striking and beating her violently. She is asking for $5,000 alimony, the custody of the four children and $600 a year for their mantenance.

FAMILY REUNION TIME IS AT HAND

MAKING CURTAINS TO FIT WINDOWS

Use Yardstick for Accurate Measurements.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Before you buy your material it is a wise precaution to draw to scale the window to be curtained. Use a yardstick or folding ruler, as a tape-line may stretch, resulting in inaccurate measurements. Note the exact dimensions of the window on your drawing, and also the width of the trim and apron. Then sketch in lightly the kind of curtains you wish to have and decide whether or not they are suited to that type of window. If the window is very broad, you may not need a valance, since that emphasizes the horizontal lines; if the window is narrow and high, a valance and side draperies set far over at the edge of the trim will help to correct its proportions.

Let us assume that you are going to make glass curtains of scrim, marquisette or net, with side draperies and a gathered valance of cretonne, unlined. Following directions given by the United States Department of Agriculture, you will probably begin with the glass curtains. They are to be shirred on a rod without a heading, as the valance hides the top of them. The measurement for their width is taken on the plan drawn to scale, on the part of the trim nearest the glass. Allow twice the width of the window in soft materials—almost two breadths, usually. They should be just long enough to escape the sill. Glass curtains may have hems from 1½ to 3 inches wide at the front and lower edges, and ¼-inch hem on the outside. A common rule is to add 9 inches to the length of any finished curtain for hems, heading, and shrinkage, but since the glass curtains are to be run on rods through a casing at the top, without a heading, 2 inches less may be allowed.

Each curtain length should be measured and checked before any material is cut off. Before cutting, draw threads if possible to provide an accurate guide. Trim off all selvedges and put in the side hems, then the top and bottom hems. They should all be turned under the depth of the hem. Otherwise when light shines through the curtains, an irregular line is seen inside the hem. A tuck should be taken just below the casing to allow for shrinkage when the curtain is laundered. Hems look better when put in by hand rather than by machine stitching, and will not draw. If there are many curtains to be made, however, machine stitching is advisable.

Skimpy side draperies are not attractive. Cretonne is usually 36 inches wide, and you will need a length the full width of material for each side. Fifty-inch material may sometimes be split lengthwise and finished with an extension hem. In estimating the length of the side draperies, measure from the top or middle of the upper trim to the bottom of the apron and add 9 inches for hem, casing and shrinkage. If there is a decided pattern in the material, you must see that the pattern balances on each side before the material is cut. A little extra yardage may have to be allowed for matching patterns.

Measure and cut the side draperies with the same care as in making the glass curtains. Slip the selvedges at intervals of 3 or 4 inches or trim them off. Turn a hem 1½ inches on the lengthwise edges and a 2 or 3-inch hem at the bottom. Make a casing at the top for the rod to run through, since there is to be a valance.

The valance when finished is usually one-sixth of the length of the finished side draperies. Hem, heading and casing allowances are added to this depth in calculating the material required. The length of the valance across the window is one and a half times the width of the window and side trim if the valance is gathered, twice that much if it is plaited. Make the valance in the same way as the curtains.

Three rods will be needed for hanging these curtains, since the valance and side draperies should not be hung on the same rod. The glass curtain must be set closer to the window than the other hangings. The neatness and general attractiveness of the finished curtains will depend on the way they are hung. Solid round rods which fit into sockets are desirable for glass curtains. Flat or round rods may be used for the overdraperies.

All curtains should be pressed when finished. Avoid making crosswise folds in them, or any unnecessary lengthwise creases.

Organdy Appears Again as Material for Frocks

Organdy is a fabric that has almost been forgotten. Its revival this year is in part due to interest in fluffy, full-skirted dresses in delicate shades and flowered patterns for young girls' party frocks, afternoon dresses, and summer evening wear generally. It is made in such colors as pink, peach, orchid, nile, blue, and maize, both plain and in floral designs.

The textile division of the bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture, calls attention to the pleasing qualities of organdy as a fabric for summer afternoons and evenings. It is sheer and cool, yet has a crispness that remains after laundering. It can be washed at home successfully. Full-skirted fashions are recommended for development in organdy, with trimmings of inserted bands rather than ruffles. Shaded effects can be produced by combining two or more colors in various ways. Slips of baronet satin or other rayon fabrics are good under organdy because of their sheen and the fact they are also washable. Organdy trimmings for other cotton materials are effective, as, for example, bands of organdy with tissue gingham, or collar and cuff sets of organdy, or matching hats. Organdy is also recommended for dainty bedroom curtains and lamp-shades.

VEGETABLE PLATE EXCELLENT FOR DINNER

Stuffed Pepper, Celery, String Beans and Fried Eggplant Make a Good Combination.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When vegetables constitute a large portion of a meal or when one is serving the type of dinner sometimes called a "vegetable plate," attention must be given to variety and contrast both in flavor and texture. There should be at least one hearty kind, that is, one that contains a rather high proportion of protein and starch, either in the vegetable itself or in the other foods combined with it. Milk, cheese and eggs are often used in sauces on vegetables and add to the proportion of protein. There should be also something crisp, something soft, something mild-flavored, something acid, and at least one pronounced flavor to give zest to the entire combination. There should be enough richness in the seasoning of the vegetables or the way they are cooked to make them substantial enough for the main course at dinner. This can be obtained by the use of butter or cream or by frying one vegetable. Much-needed minerals and vitamins are supplied by most of the vegetables. Give some thought, too, to the colors that will predominate on the plate. An attractive appearance stimulates appetite.

The vegetable plate in the illustration, which was taken by the United States Department of Agriculture, fulfills the foregoing requirements. Green pepper, stuffed with a rice and meat mixture, is substantial. Celery is crisp in texture and has a pronounced flavor. Fried eggplant adds richness as well as another distinctive flavor, and its browned crumbs add to the color as well as to the "crunchiness" of the vegetables. String beans will be liked as a contrast to the other flavors, and there is a bit of pickle to furnish the necessary acid which rounds off the dinner.

Human Speech Calls for Little Energy

Speech requires a small amount of energy, according to telephone engineers, who explain that if a million persons were to talk steadily, and the energy of their voices were to be converted into heat, they would have to talk for an hour and a half to produce sufficient heat to make a cupful of tea.

One acoustic expert has divided the English speech into 36 letter sounds, and he found that the vowels carry most of the energy. It is estimated that at the upper and lower limits of hearing it takes a million times as much energy to make sound audible as in the range of 1,000 to 5,000 cycles, where the ear is most sensitive.

On the radio the sounds "th," "f," "s" and "v" are the most difficult to hear correctly. This is attributed chiefly to their very weak energy.—Scentific American.

The First Doll's House

What may prove to be the earliest British doll's house has been discovered in an old country house in Chelmsford. It is a two-storied house about five feet high, built of solid oak, and contains four large rooms, attics and a balcony on top. The legs on which the house is mounted and the paneling and the mirrors, are, it is said of definite Queen Anne design and workmanship.

Luminous House Numbers

A luminous number which can be seen from a distance at night has been put up on the town hall at Budapest, writes the correspondent of the London Observer, and the authorities are considering the advisability of putting luminous numbers on all houses in the city, and luminous plaques at the street corners on which the street names may be easily read after dark.

It is claimed that Budapest is the first city to consider this method of obviating this difficulty.

—23—

"Mrs. Dabbs has been separated from me for some years. By mutual agreement she used her maiden name, but we've never been divorced," Claude explained.

Loren's brows drew together, but before he could speak Claude had slipped his hand through Mary's arm and brought her forward. "And my daughter, Mary Dabbs," Claude continued with pride. "You knew her, of course, as Mary Johnston."

"Just so," Loren Rangeley's cold smile took in the whole party, as he asked: "And the reason for this little family party? You see, I only expected to meet you, Dabbs, and talk business, so I am a little—surprised."

"Naturally," Claude agreed, "but as you were coming we thought—"

Ned interrupted. "It's rather up to me to explain, Father. You see, I want to marry Claude Dabbs' daughter."

"I telegraphed you last night," Polly said, quietly, "to come at once. You see, Loren, I had never met your son, and naturally I wished to be assured—"

"Oh quite," Loren agreed hastily, his color coming back gradually. Then the red-headed beauty had not given him entirely away. It would have been awkward, especially in view of his relations with Claude. "The boy's of age, so my consent is hardly necessary. I congratulate you, Ned, on your choice," and he bent over the shrinking Mary's hand, and kissed it.

"Thanks, Dad," and for the first time in many months Ned's hand and his father's met in a hearty clasp. "And now," Ned turned to interpose between Polly and her daughter, "won't you allow Mary and me to leave you? You can discuss us so much more thoroughly, when we are gone," he said, smiling at Polly.

He put his arm about Mary, who was clinging to Claude's hand, and swept her from her father's grasp and through the door into Claude's bedroom, saying, "Your hat's in here, Mary." He closed the door and took her hat from the bed. "Put it on, darling, and not a word until we're clear."

Mary mechanically put on the hat, looked at herself in the glass and was whisked out into the hall, hurried to the elevator, and found herself being piloted to a gondola by a tall young man who laughed down at her and treated all the rest of the world as moving shadows.

He stooped to look under Mary's hat and the smile died out.

"That sort of an engagement will never hold me," Mary said quietly, meeting his eyes. "It was very cleverly done, but I can easily break it, and I will."

In the silence that followed this remark, she could hear Ned's heart beating hard and fast. "Then the idle apprentice hasn't won the master's daughter?"

"No."

The little word seemed to echo about them, although she said it so low.

"That settles — everything," Ned spoke slowly. "I'll go, tomorrow. You needn't be afraid," he added, "so stop shaking."

"You can't go. Father's fond of you."

"Yes, I'm fond of Claude Dabbs, too, but he'll have to get along without me. He has you. He won't care."

Ned reached in his pocket mechanically for a cigarette. Mary wished she could keep from looking at his mouth. What was there about it?

He was actually turning to speak to the gondolier, when Mary stopped him. They were nearing the fatal bridge and she knew now why she couldn't help looking at his mouth. It was because, warm, curving and generous, as it was now, it was shaped like Loren Rangeley's. If Ned were thwarted and disappointed, and denied, it might become in time the same straight, hard, lean line that his father's mouth had become. The thoughts were unbearable.

"Ned," whispered Mary, "we might try it—until Father and Mother make up their minds."

Ned looked at Mary with positive dislike. "That's Mrs. Johnston's daughter speaking," he said coldly. "I'm in love with Claude's."

"It's Mary Dabbs who is giving you a chance," she told him with spirit. "Mary Johnston would throw you over like that!" She snapped her fingers in an airy gesture. "So make up your mind, Loren Rangeley's son, for the offer will be withdrawn in a moment. Why should I," she asked of blue sea and sky, "jump for joy at the chance of marrying Ned Rangeley, when it comes to that?"

Neither sea nor sky answered, but Ned did. "Done!" and his hand pressed hers.

Loren Rangeley, after gravely discussing his business with Claude, though uneasily conscious of Polly sitting nearby, took his departure. Before he left, Claude had told him that Ned was to be his partner and personal representative, and Loren had expressed the hope that Ned, who as he said, "had fallen on his feet," would appreciate his good luck. He was content, he said, to leave the boy in good hands.

When he had gone, Polly rose.

"Better wait for the children," Claude suggested. "Why not dine here, Polly? We could all have dinner together quietly, and discuss Mary's plans for the future, and make our arrangements for her."

Polly stood irresolutely looking down at the Grand canal, just as her daughter had done that afternoon, oppressed by the tumult of her thoughts.

"I want you to know, Claude, that it wasn't the money—your money. It was Mary alone that brought me here today. You may not believe that, but it's true."

"Why, Jiminy, I knew it, Polly. No need for you to tell me that."

"I can get along," she told him, "on what I've left, especially if I live over here. Do what you like for Mary, but leave me out."

"How can I?" Claude asked. "Mary will want you, and I'll want you to stay with Mary, whatever her plans are, until she marries Ned. I'll keep away as far as I can. You'll have to let me play around with Mary a little, but I won't bother you. Of course, you can and will live where you like. But I think Mary will want you near her."

"Thanks, Dad," and for the First Time in Many Months Ned's Hand and His Father's Met.

Polly sank into the chair at the window and played with her gloves. "Mary!" she murmured. "What's my life going to be like, without Mary."

Claude looked down at her pityingly. "Well, you're going to have her for a little while yet. Your case isn't nearly as bad as mine, Polly. Mary won't want me to help buy her trousseau, but she will want you." He paused a moment and said, diffidently, "You will help me out with that—and some other things, won't you? You've no idea, Polly, how I've been hoping you'd take charge of the money and—"

"Spend it," Polly snapped.

Claude nodded. His face, turned toward her in the faint twilight, looked strangely pleased. "By Jiminy! It would be great to see some of it go for things women like."

Polly stared out over the water and was silent for awhile.

"You're rather wonderful, Claude Dabbs. I don't know that I quite take it in."

C. M. Dabbs moved uneasily. "Oh, I've just gone along," he told her, "doing what came uppermost. It's you that are the wonder, Polly. Look what you've made of yourself—and Mary. Though," he sighed, "I haven't hardly forgiven you yet for keeping Mary to yourself."

Polly rose. "Don't, Claude, you can't understand."

"Think I do," Claude told her, facing her. "I've given a lot of time to thinking that out, and it came over me with a flash, Polly, that in your place I would have done the same thing. What did you know about me?"

"Or you of me?"

"Well," said C. M., "it happened that way, and we acted each according to our natures; but if I can make Mary happy, and buy you both some pretty things now, that's something."

Polly looked at him in slow amazement. Before her his life seemed to spread out. He had toiled and grown rich, unspoiled. Claude was neither meek nor humble. He was wholly master of himself. Even while she determined never to ask the inevitable question, she heard it coming from her own lips.

"In all these years, there must have been some women—"

"You spoiled my taste for just women," Claude answered, brusquely, "and I hadn't much time then, though I own—I missed 'em. I had a whole lot to look after. Tell you about it, some day, Polly, if you care to hear."

Polly nodded. She became aware that Claude was regarding her humorously.

"You'll notice," he said, as she looked up at him inquiringly, "I haven't asked how many men?"

Polly laughed. "They didn't count. I had Mary."

Claude laughed, too. "Well, you won't have her all to yourself, Polly, now that Ned's come into the story. You'd better try to like him. He's a nice boy, though his ways are sudden."

"I don't like his sudden ways," complained Polly. "How dare he say he's engaged to Mary!"

Claude's slow smile stopped her. "I guess Mary knows."

Polly looked at him, half angrily. "Were you playing for this?"

"Oh, Jiminy, no!" Claude gave a quick look at her. "I wanted the girl to myself a little while, but I know better than to interfere with young people when their minds are made up."

Then suddenly Polly realized. "Has—has she said anything to you about—when?"

"No, but if I know Ned, it will be soon. Will you go back with her to the White house, Polly, and stand by? We can talk everything over—later."

Polly hesitated and was conscious that Claude waited anxiously. "I must talk to Mary, first," she said, and saw the keen blue eyes regard her with a curious look of disappointment

CHAPTER XV

Mary and Claude Dabbs were climbing Winding Willow road on their way to Clover Hollow. Venice was barely three weeks behind them, but as Mary confided to her father, it seemed more like three years, or as though Venice had never been.

Claude gave her an odd little look, and immediately Mary put her head on his shoulder and told him that of course she didn't mean exactly that. Claude agreed that he thought she couldn't, possibly.

Directly behind them was Peace Valley and the grocery. In front of the grocery Polly had climbed out of Mary's car and into Ned's. She sat there waiting for him.

That was the sore spot in Mary's heart. Mother had come back rebelliously to the White house, though outwardly quiet and acquiescent.

During all the journey home she had remained secluded in her stateroom while Mary, Claude and Ned had paced the decks together and tried to arrange their lives and hers. She still called herself Mrs. Johnston. While she acknowledged Mary's engagement to Ned, and spoke to Claude when necessary, she steadfastly refused to enter Claude's store or home. He might, and did, lavish all that money could buy on Mary, yet Mary's mother continued to live on her own slender income.

"While I refuse to enter the grocer's shop," she told Mary with finality, "I cannot accept the grocer's money."

When Mary demanded that the whole world, and especially Peace Valley, be told that this was her own father, Polly told her calmly, but determinedly, that that day would see her depart from Peace Valley, Clover Hollow and Mary. Mary must be content that Loren Rangeley knew and that there would be no divorce. That was as far as Polly Johnston was prepared to go, at present.

Perfect Exponent of Bird Love Is Linnet

There are not two more devoted little lovers to be found than a pair of linnets. "I have often looked upon acts of devotion in the birds' world, but if you want to see bird love at its best you must watch the home life of the linnet," says Oliver G. Pike, the well-known ornithologist. Almost every action that they perform at the nest speaks of happiness, and you could not find any birds more attached to their young. If enemies approach, and they are surrounded, the hen will fall to the ground, showing the greatest bravery, and by feigning a broken wing or leg will drag herself along, keeping dangerously near the cat or weasel, until she has attracted it far from the nest. While she is bravely doing her duty the male will stand by the young, covering them with his wings until his mate returns. But when at last the young are able to fly they are led from the nest, and they never return to it again. The beautifully made home is deserted, and three weeks later the parents prepare to rear another family in a new nest.

Sessions of Congress

The Constitution provided that the congress should assemble March 4, 1789, and thereafter convene "in every year" on the first Monday in December unless they shall by law appoint a different day. Up to and including May 20, 1820, 18 acts were passed naming dates other than December. Since then, with few exceptions, congress has convened in December.

BY MAN SHALL HIS BLOOD BE SHED

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

THE wounded man roused himself, then motioned to the nurse. She bent over him.

"Read to me."

"What chapter?"

"Genesis; ninth chapter, fifth and sixth verses."

Turning to the places designated, the nurse said:

"And surely your lives of your blood will I require it and at the hand of every beast will I require it, and at the hand of man; at the hand of every man's brother, will I require the life of man whosoever sheddeth . . . by man shall his blood be shed; for in the image of God made he man."

The nurse would have read on, but he halted her.

"Raise me."

She adjusted his pillow and he leaned back, gasping.

"That is better," he said, reclining on the pillow, his chest rising and falling as he breathed with effort. "It has been ten years since first I heard those words you just read."

"You must not talk. The doctor's orders are for you to remain quiet."

"Those words," he went on, ignoring the nurse's commands, "impressed me little ten years ago, except as being mighty appropriate for the time and occasion. It was in a little church at Valcartier. The congregation of soldiers—part of the 33,000 Canadian expeditionary forces that landed first in England in October. I had left my cabin in the wilds to enlist, but was rejected—too old!

"I stayed on anyway, several days visiting with Calhorn, who had enlisted and was eager as any of the men to be away at the front."

"Calhorn! that is the name of the man who stabbed you, isn't it?"

"The same. But it isn't the first time you have heard of two old friends turning on each other like a couple of wolves, is it?"

The nurse admitted it wasn't.

"The minister choose his text that day in a little church at Valcartier from the verses you just read. He told the solemn, silent congregation where they were going many of them would shed the blood of their brothers and in turn their own in the rising emergencies of war. He told them blood was precious, sacred, an atonement for the soul—a vehicle belonging to God, and always demanded, always forfeited, sooner or later the debt was contracted, and exhorted them never to shed it needlessly. How weighty and significant his words seem now when they then but passed with the hearing!"

"You were strong and well then. Soon will be again if you obey the doctor's orders. What appears mountains to a sick person shrinks to mole hills when they are well and strong again."

"A man," he rumbled on in self-analysis, "may regard truth lightly, trample it heedlessly all his days, but he never will stamp it out. It smolders on, one day to blaze up.

"All my life I have been a man of slaughter. Shedding blood needlessly—a trapper in the Canadian wilds! I have made countless orphans. Many, many furred and feathered parents desolate that I might secure money. I have enough now, gained from that source, to supply all the needs of life, and have wasted as much again in useless excesses."

"Beasts! what of their blood?"

"But the book says 'at the hand of every beast,' if the blood of beasts does not count why is it mentioned? I went back to the wilds. Returning with furs to sell. Was at the station when the boys entrained on the Canadian Northern for the seaport where they would take ship for the eastern front. I had my knife with me. It had a deerfoot handle. I had carried it all my trapping days. It had been dipped in the blood of beasts countless numbers of times—so often that the ten-inch blade had become blemished with dark brown spots—blood had dried and would not scour off in sand or any way I tried. That blade had been stained with human blood, too! I had used it more than once in fights over game poached from traps and traps stolen. I wore the knife in my belt as I stood by the train talking with Calhorn. He, leaning from the window, noticed it.

"'A pretty knife you have there, Jim. Let's see it.'

"I handed it to him. His fingers closed around the handle and he made several swipes with the blade through the air.

"'A dandy weapon in a set-to with a boche!

"'It's sure fire. Take it along,' I yelled as the train pulled out."

Suddenly he straightened up from his pillow, his eyes wild, demanding:

"Where is the weapon he cut me with?"

"There, there," the nurse soothed as she reached over and attempted gently to force him back on his pillow. "You have exerted yourself enough, too much, already. Recline and go to sleep."

He pushed her hands away. His voice rose, insistent, angry:

"Get me that weapon. I must see it!"

"You have already seen it. You pulled it from your side with your own hands when he cut you," the nurse replied, alarmed, but hoping to quiet her patient.

"True, I did. But I was too excited —too drunk to notice whether I had been stabbed with a knife, a sword or a bayonet. Calhorn himself did not know. Crazed, in our drunken quarrel, he reached up among his collection of weapons on the wall brought back from the fields of Ypres, the Somme and Vimy Ridge. His fingers closed on the first they touched and he struck me."

With hopes of quieting the patient the nurse stepped over to the telephone.

"Mr. Keller; this is Miss Collins. Old Man Priest wants you to bring over the weapon he was stabbed with. Says he must see it; at once!"

"He's bringing it right over," she reported, returning to the bedside. The patient relaxed on his pillow. He was so weak! It was pitiful to see one but a few hours before strong and robust now as helpless as a child.

Keller, the lawyer, thinking he might be in the way of obtaining some new legal points in the case, came hurrying over, the weapon wrapped in a newspaper. The patient roused himself excitedly as the bearer of the parcel entered and approached the bedside. He snatched the parcel and tore off the wrapping.

"The same knife!" he gasped, sinking back on his pillow. "Old deerfoot!" clasping his fingers around the unique handle and holding the knife up as Keller and the nurse looked on, fascinated oddly.

"Blood-letting weapon of a lifetime," continued the patient, oblivious of the nurse and lawyer's presence. "Who can explain your strange return?"

He raised his burning eyes to those of the lawyer.

"Do not prosecute Calhorn. I do not want him prosecuted. Promise. Shell-shocked, gassed in France. Maddened by the abuse I heaped upon him in our drunken round. He did not know what he was doing. Promise!"

"I shall present your request at the examination," rejoined the lawyer.

Priest sank back on his pillow and lay quiet for a spell. Then, rousing again suddenly, looked at the keen, worn bright blade. Held it up so that the sun's warm rays coming in through the window scintillated on the glittering steel—held it up for the nurse and lawyer to gaze.

"See!" he quavered. "The spots I could not scour off are gone! The blade is clean!"

The nurse hastened to the patient's side. A smile had parted his lips. His hands relaxed and dropped heavily onto the coverlet. The knife clattered from his fingers to the floor. He fell back heavily against the pillow with a tired outlet of breath. His head fell forward, lolling, on his breast.

The lawyer sprang to assist the nurse, but all they could do was straighten the deserted body.

Took Full Advantage of Croesus' Kindness

Croesus, informed of Alcmaeon's kindnesses, made him a present of as much gold as he should be able to carry at one time about his person. Finding that this was the gift assigned to him Alcmaeon took his measures and prepared himself to receive it in the following way:

He clothed himself in a loose tunic, which he made to bag greatly at the waist, and placing upon his feet the widest buskins that he could anywhere find, followed his guides into the treasure house.

Here he fell to upon a heap of gold dust, and in the first place packed as much as he could inside his buskins between them and his legs; after which he filled the breast of his tunic quite full of gold, and then sprinkling some among his hair, and taking some likewise in his mouth, he came forth from the treasure house, scarcely able to drag his legs along, like anything rather than a man, with his mouth crammed full, and his bulk increased in every way.

On seeing him Croesus burst into a laugh, and not only let him have all that he had taken, but gave him presents besides of fully equal worth. Thus this house (the Alcmaeonidae) became one of great wealth; and Alcmaeon was able to keep horses for the chariot race, and won the prize at Olympia.—Herodotus.

Evolution of Pockets

Man's trousers pocket is said to be just 300 years old, says the Los Angeles Times. Before that time the citizen was wont to carry his petty valuables in a little bag of cloth, which might be tied about the waist. But thieves would slip up behind some fat party in the crowd around the score board and slit the string with a knife—thereby making off with the treasure. So a thoughtful Frenchman sewed the bag in the lining of his garments and thereby instituted the first regular pocket. Now there are 15 pockets in the average suit of clothes and the wife can find them in the dark. What wonderful progress the world has made.

History of Silver Dollar

The original coinage of the silver dollar was authorized in 1792. By the act of January 18, 1837, the weight and fineness of the coins were changed. The act of February 12, 1873, provides for the discontinuation of the coinage of silver dollars. The acts of February 28, 1878; July 14, 1890, and March 3, 1891, authorized the recoinage of silver dollars. The silver purchase under the act of 1891 was consummated in 1904. There was no further authorization to purchase silver for dollars until the passage of the Pittman act of April 23, 1918. From that time on, silver dollars have been issued each year.

Lesson for July 31

DAVID AND JONATHAN

LESSON TEXT—I Samuel 18:1-4; 19:1-7.

GOLDEN TEXT—There is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Two Good Friends.

JUNIOR TOPIC—David and Jonathan.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Choosing the Right Kind of Friends.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Obligations of Friendship.

The friendship of David and Jonathan has become immortalized in the world's thought. It was unique in that it occurred between two men of rival worldly interests. Jonathan was the crown prince, the heir to the throne. David was heir according to the divine choice and arrangement. Jonathan knew this and magnanimously waived his natural personal rights to the one he knew God had chosen.

I. Friendship Established Between David and Jonathan (I Sam. 18:1-4).

1. Love at Sight (vv. 2).

Following the interview of Saul and David after the victory over Goliath, Jonathan's soul was knit with that of David. He loved him as his own soul. While there was mutual love, this pleasing trait stands out more prominently in Jonathan than in David because it meant great loss to him—the loss of the throne; while it meant immense gain to David, the acquisition of the throne to which he had no natural right.

2. Covenant established (vv. 3, 4).

Following the love covenant between them, Jonathan stripped himself of his court robe and his equipment and gave them to David. This act was a virtual abdication of the throne to David.

II. Jonathan Defended David Against Saul's Frenzy (I Sam. 19:1-7).

David went into the battle with Goliath out of zeal for God and true religion—not for personal glory, but it turned out as always that because he made God first, God honored him.

Upon David's return from victory over the Philistines, according to Oriental custom he was met by a triumphal chorus of women from all the cities of Israel chanting praises to him for his victory over their enemy. They ascribed more praise and honor to David than to Saul. These women seemed to sing as answering chants. The one sang, "Saul has slain his thousands," the other answered, "and David his ten thousands." To hear sung the praises of a shepherd boy surpassing his own was too much for Saul. It aroused murderous envy which had been slumbering in his heart and moved him twice to attempt to kill David. This wickedness was in his heart as a bitter feeling, but this occasion fanned it into a flame, making it a burning passion of evil.

In Saul's third attempt to kill David, Jonathan defended him before his father and evoked from him the oath that David should not be slain. He thus exposed himself to the anger of his infuriated father for David's sake.

III. Jonathan Revealed to David Saul's Murderous Intent (I Sam. 20:30-40).

The beginning of the new moon was celebrated by sacrifices and feasting at which all the members of the family were expected to be present (v. 5). David's excuse for being absent was that he might go home to attend the yearly sacrifice of the entire family. The annual feast was more important than the monthly feast. Matters were now so serious that Jonathan and David renewed the covenant between themselves. In this renewal the terms were broadened beyond the life of Jonathan (vv. 14, 15). Saul's anger was now so fierce that for Jonathan to be found in David's company was most dangerous, so he cleverly planned a sign by which he could make known to David Saul's attitude and purpose. We prove our friendship by warning those who are exposed to danger. David's heart responded by pledging fidelity to Jonathan's seed forever. This pledge was faithfully carried out by David (II Sam. 9:7, 8). Concerning real friendship observe:

1. It should be made while both parties are young, when the hearts are capable of being knit together.

2. Real friends are few. We should be careful in the formation of friendships. For though we should love everybody we can have but few friends. Friendship should be formed for the purpose of helping each other. There can be no real friendship except where merit is on both sides.

3. Real friendship can only be with God-fearing people. Both David and Jonathan recognized their obligation to the Lord.

Satan on Watch

Prayer is the strategical point which Satan watches. If he can succeed in causing us to neglect prayer, he has won; for where communion between God and His people is broken, the true source of life and power is cut off.—Andrew Murray.

The residence of Mrs. Jennie C. Brunkhart on Lake Shore Avenue, Auburn, was completely destroyed by fire Saturday morning including all contents except a few pieces of bed room furniture.

The 'Fiddler Crab' is so called because the male has one brightly colored claw of immense size, which, when he runs ,he waves as if he were playing a tune on a violin.

A total of 93 bankruptcy petitions, 89 voluntary and 4 involuntary, were filed during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1926 and ending June 30, 1927 in the United States district court at Ft. Wayne.

Rev. O. B. Noren of Saginaw, Michigan, has been extended a call to the Auburn Lutheran church. July 10th he preached a trial sermon and last Sunday the congregation extended the call. Should he accept the first sermon will be September 4th.

Now let's see. If Jackson peddled Stephenson a $150 horse for $2,500, ya gotta hand it to him as a hoss trader anyway. And if Jackson is that smooth in a hoss deal, do you have any idea that bunch as wants him out can hang anything on him?—Albion Democrat.

Friends of Warren T. McCray, former Governor of Indiana, confidently expect his release from the Federal Prison at Atlanta, August 31, on which date he will have served one-third of his term of ten years. He began his sentence May 1 1924, and whether he will return to Indiana is not known.

Early Saturday morning the residence on the former John Knight farm north-west of town, now owned by St. Joe Valley bank, burned to the ground and with it the personal effects of John Cooley. No one saw the blaze until too late. The loss was covered by insurance. Mr. Cooley was at the Saylor home at the time.

A dahlia that measures 9½ inches in diameter is not to be sneezed at, but rather to be admired. Mrs. J. P. Buckingham has one this size growing in her flower garden and it sure is a beauty. If you are a lover of flowers it would pay you to call on Mrs. Buckingham or at the Market and they would be pleased to show the flower.

Mrs. Ethel W. Cheek and three children of Denver, Col., who have been visiting the former's father, M. E. Leighty, superintendent of the DeKalb county infirmary, are guests for the week of her sister, Mrs. Marguerite Perry at Kalamazoo, Mich. Mrs. Cheek and children will return next week to remain until September. Mrs. Cheek is a former school teacher of DeKalb county.—Star.

Mrs. Ebon Carnahan, residing near Freeman's Corners, six miles south of Auburn, was injured Saturday afternoon about 4:30 o'clock when an automobile in which she was riding with her husband went over an embankment into a ditch near the farm of Lyman Lockwood. The breaking of the radius rod of the car sent it from the highway, overturning with both occupants pinned underneath, unable to extricate themselves. Some people passing came to the assistance of the helpless couple who might have drowned in a short tome had not help been given at the time. Mrs. Carnahan will be three months recovering from her injuries.

Save $10 by ordering your SUNBEAM CABINET HEATER during

$unbeam $aving $eason

August 1st. to 31st.

Order your Sunbeam Cabinet Heater before August 31st, instead of waiting until a few weeks later—and save $10.00. Make a down payment of $5.00 and receive, in accordance with the $unbeam $aving $eason offer now in effect, a credit of $15.00. Start paying the balance, when your Sunbeam is installed.

The Sunbeam thoroughly heats the home with 5 to 7 rooms, but requires no basement. Only a heater constructed like the Sunbeam with a cast iron heating unit of the furnace type; an 84 pound fire-pot; one joint above fire bed; an inner casing that doubles the heating surface, can give this result. For the heating capacity, economy, efficiency and long life of a cabinet heater depend on these parts, which you do not see. Everyone can afford Sunbeam whole-home warmth. Sunbeam prices are now the lowest in Sunbeam history.

FISHING LICENSES VALID UNTIL EXPIRATION DATE

Holders of licenses issued prior to the new law enacted by the 1927 legislature relative to hunting and fishing may use them until they expire, which in each case is one year from date of issue, according to George N. Mannfield, fish and game superintendent of the state conservation department.

It is mandatory, however, he declares, that holders of such licenses follow the new law as regards open and closed seasons' bag limits, etc., and not the law printed on the back of the old license.

Mannfield explained to several hundred sportsmen who have written his department for enlightenment on this question that when the old license was issued the buyer made a contract with the state to hunt and fish on said license for a period of one year from date of issuance. Naturally the laws in force at that time were printed in digest form on the reverse side of the license as a convenience to the holder.

The 1927 legislature enacted additional laws and made several changes, among which was that declaring that all licenses now issued be for the calendar year, automatically expiring on December 31 of the year. But having sold thousands of licenses under the old law which continue for one year from date of issuance, these still are valid until they expire.

CONGRESSMAN DICKINSON TO SPEAK AT WAYNE

Hon. Louis J. Dickinson, farm leader in Congress, will address the Republican reunion at Trier's Park, Fort Wayne, on the afternoon of Saturday, August 20th. An urgent invitation has been tendered to Postmaster General Harry New.

Senator James E. Watson Senator Arthur Robinson, Congressman David Hogg, State officials of Indiana and the Republican County officers of the Twelfth District will be present.

Free tickets on all the attractions at Trier's Park will be given in abundance to those present. After a basket dinner in the evening the dance pavilion will be thrown open for one hour to those attending the picnic.

Congressman Dickinson is one of the best qualified men in the United States to speak on the farm problem. He was much sought after for the Vice President nomination in 1924. He is a speaker of virile force and is one of the outstanding figures in the United States Congress.

Subject Changed

We fell into conversation with a bright looking boy the other day. Almost every sentence he spoke was prefaced by the ejaculation "Gee." Finally we remonstrated. We asked him what "gee" meant, anyway, but he didn't know. "But if you don't like 'gee' I won't say it any more," said the boy. "I'll say 'gosh' instead." We changed the subject.—Lewiston Journal.

What's Going on at WINONA LAKE

RUSSIAN COSSACK CHORUS

Because of the splendid program given by the Cossack Chorus at Winona Lake last season and the many requests that they be heard this year, the Winona Management announces that this great chorus will appear at Winona Lake on Monday evening, August 1st.

These men, fourteen in number, natives of Russia, are highly trained in their art. A year long tour in Italy was a triumph of artistry. They were the hit of Paris and the French Riviera concert season. The Queen of Spain visited all their concerts while at Madrid and congratulated Mr. Socoloff, the leader, with the success obtained by his chorus. Latin America greeted them as the greatest artistic organization of the world, and the United States, during the past year, has been giving them an enthusiastic hearing. This chorus has long been the singing voice of Russia.

The handling of chorus numbers by this group of artists is entirely different from anything ever heard in America. The shading and general delivery of the singers are near perfection, as are the interpretations of the brilliant director. The program to be given will be Russian throughout, with the exception of the encore numbers.

The hearers will be given an example of real technique in choral singing, made possible by artistic leadership and wonderful training. Solo parts sung by the clear-toned baritone, blended with the united harmony of the whole deep rumble of the bass, the high notes of the falsettos and each of the other parts taking their important place, give the effect of a mighty organ.

The costumes of the chorus with their appropriateness will add a great deal to the atmosphere of the presentation, the leader's being slightly different from the rest, but all strictly Russian.

The chorus, in the opinion of those who heard it here, among these, many talented musicians, was pronounced to be the most skillful group singing ever heard in this section, exampling the beauty of music possible through leadership and perfection of unison.

ALBERTO SALVI

Alberto Salvi, the world's greatest harpist, is coming to Winona Lake, Indiana, on Thursday evening, August 4th.

Probably never has any concert artist been a greater revelation to his audience than Signor Salvi. He has revolutionized harp playing and has accomplished brilliant results which were hitherto considered imposible for this instrument.

This is Salvi's third appearance at Winona. Each time he presented a most brilliant program. The management considers itself fortunate to be able to secure again this noted artist.

DO YOUR CHILDREN DECEIVE YOU? WHO'S TO BLAME?
By an Old-Fashioned Lady

I knew something was the matter the moment I entered my brother-in-law's back-yard and saw the children's faces white and scared, as they stood facing their father. What terrible thing can have happened, thought I.

It was not necessary for me to inquire, for their father turned immediately and explained the situation.

"Do you see these three eggs?" asked he in an awful tone. "Well, the twins stole these, yes, actually stole these from my chicken house, and put them under the old hen that had made a nest under the currant bushes. Think of the price of eggs and see what they've wasted!"

As the children crept off, my brother-in-law called after them, "Now if this hapens again, remember that I'm going to give you a good tanning."

Turning to me, he added, "I never thought that I should be disgraced with such dishonest, lying children. They said at first they didn't know anything about these three eggs."

I said nothing, as I walked on out to see his prize birds. I was too busy thinking. I recalled that my nephews had confided in me how much they wanted to raise some little chickens and their father would not let them own a single one.

"We haven't a single pet, and Grandma says Father had lots of chickens when he was our age, but he won't let us raise any dear little downy chickens."

I could still see the tears that gathered in their eyes as they told me this.

"Your father's birds are so very fine," I replied. "Perhaps, he'll let me give you some common little chickens for Easter."

But the father did not wish any birds on the place except his own. He had no time to build a separate pen and would not let me have it done. So the matter was dropped by us older people, but not, as it proved, by the children.

Now, as I walked by the angry and disappointed father, I wondered whether he realized that a little time spent in fencing in a separate yard would have saved the children and him the unhappiness they were suffering. The love of chickens and of ownership, inherited from their father, had made the temptation to take the eggs greater than they could withstand. But, who was really to blame for their wrong-doing?

That week-end we went to the sea shore. The conductor came to collect the fare. I paid mine My tickets—one for himself and one for my sister.

"How old are the boys?" asked the conductor?

"Four," immediately replied the father.

The children crowded forward to correct the mistake, but their father instantly silenced them. Their mystified faces seemed to say, "Can Father so soon have forgotten our birthday cake with the six candles?"

When Cousin Fred met us at the station, he must, at once, swing each child high in the air and ask their age. He always did so, no matter how often he saw his pet cousins.

"Six years old," the twins sang out. "But Father forgot, and told the conductor we were four."

Cousin Fred laughed. "Oh!" he said, "that was to fool the conductor, so he wouldn't have to pay for you on the train."

With widening eyes, the twins gazed in silence at their father and at Cousin Fred.

MRS. DELLA BRANDON, AGED 63, IS DEAD

Two Strokes of Paralysis Fatal to Mrs. Della Brandon

Stricken with paralysis on the afternoon of July fourth and weakened by a second stroke two weeks ago Mrs. Della A. Brandon passed away Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at her residence east of Auburn on the Auburn-Newville road, at the age of sixty-three years.

The funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the late residence, Rev. S. E. Slater, pastor of the Lutheran church at Hoagland, officiating. Burial was made in Woodlawn cemetery near Auburn.

Mrs. Brandon was stricken while returning from Garrett in an automobile on the afternoon of Independence Day and was taken to the residence of her cousin, T. A. Carter. An ambulance was summoned and Mrs. Brandon was removed to her home where at first some hopes were given for her recovery. The second stroke, however, made her condition so serious that she grew weaker each day.

The deceased was born December 2, 1863, in Concord township. Before her marriage to Samuel Brandon Jaunary 25, 1885, she was Della Krise. Mr. Brandon died August 17, 1912. For twenty-five years Mrs. Brandon has made her residence in the home in which she died.

Surviving are five children, William S. Brandon, at home, Frank M. Brandon of Niles Mich., Mrs. C. A. Huguenard of Fort Wayne, Mrs. J. Park Ross of Auburn and Mrs. Don Callahan of Chicago. A daughter, Mrs. Clyde Vaughn, died two years ago. Besides the children there survive four sisters, Miss Isa Krise, Mrs. B. W. Markins, Mrs. John Timmerman and Mrs. Frank May, all of DeKalb county. Three grandchildren also survive.

JOINT MEETING OF MISSIONARY SOCIETIES

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Societies of the Lutheran and Methodist churches were delightfully entertained at the home of Mrs. Mabelle Thornton Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock. A very interesting program was prepared by Mrs. McKnight and Mrs. Thornton, respective Presidents of the societies. A special feature on program was a Thermometer illustrating the different steps in the advance or decline of the temperature of the missionary societies of the churches of today, which was conducted by Rev. McKnight. A very amusing soliloquy was given by Mrs. McKnight, subject: "Getting ready for a missionary meeting." This was an original production. Moral, Be prepared. The program ended with a song after which the hostess, assisted by Mrs. McKnight, served a delightful lunch consisting of sandwiches, tea, fruit slices and crackers.

LIVED IN HAY MOW THREE DAYS WITHOUT FOOD

The mystery of the whereabouts of Mrs. George Duncan of Smithfield township, was cleared up Wednesday night about 9 o'clock when she walked into her mother's home, two miles from her own. A search had been made by the family and others without avail. Mrs. Duncan stated she had spent the three days in her hay mow without food or water and the family found this to be true. She had dug a hole in the mow aobut 6 feet deep, had placed pillows and comforts there for her comfort. The lady has been returned to the East Haven hospital at Richmond.

BIG CROWD ATTEND Y. P. ANNUAL PICNIC

On last Sunday about two hundred young people of the county met for their annual picnic at the Erick grove. After a morning worship and study period they had bountiful pot luck dinner. In the afternoon they were addressed by the Rev. R. S. Brown from the subject, "The Church and Its Youth." While some played games, others courted and the Sunday Schools, as well as the individual young folks, will be greatly profited by the day.

Few things are as expensive as those we try to get for nothing.

Our young people will leave on Monday for the lake. We have a cottage this year but we will take our bedding and eats as before. With the cottage we get the use of a boat. The necessary expense for each one will be $4.00—($2.00 for registration, $1.00 for cottage and $1.00 for jack-pot.)

Last Sunday the young people of the county met at the Erick grove for their annual picnic. Rev. Roy S. Brown addressed them on "The Church and Its Youth." He said "the young people are not revolting against the fundamentals of the christian religion but only against meaningless forms and phrases; outworn customs; and, ancient interpretations."

He continued, "the church never had a more understandingly sympathetic attitude towards its youth than today; and was never more ready to cooperate with them than now. This is shown by the Institutes, Conventions and Round Table discussions with and for the young people. Also the church organizes its youth and gives them a place in its administration today."

He closed by calling the Youth to take notice that the field is open to them and now the task is theirs; Hence the call to consecration—to the study of the task—to courage for the undertaking and to seadfastness for its completion.

Historic Portrait

A portrait of Benjamin Franklin was carried away from Franklin's home in Philadelphia by Major Andre. Andre gave it to General Grey, who took it to England. Earl Grey, a descendant, sent the picture back to the United States with the request that it be placed in the White House, and President Roosevelt agreed to do so.

LINDBERGH DID NOT WISH

Young men the world over have, with mingled feelings, read of the achievement of the youthful Charles Lindbergh. Admiration and pride in the glory of his feat has been most generously given by all—still what young man is there who has not "wished" that the opportunity had been his—and that he could have "zoomed" through to such everlasting glory?

The now "Colonel Lindbergh" MADE his opportunity. An unknown air-mail pilot, he SAVED part of his earnings. When the hour arrived he had $2,000 saved to offer on the altar of sincerity—and obtain the support of young businmen of St. Louis. He was the largest individual contributor to the fund which made the flight possible.

Reelfoot Lake, Made by Earthquake

Reelfoot Lake, Showing Earthquake Ridges Marked by Trees.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

MOST large national lakes of America came into existence many thousands of years ago, the Great Lakes, most notably, being formed during the Ice age. But one sizable body of water, Reelfoot lake, Tennessee, was formed by a great convulsion of nature, before the startled eyes of the first American pioneers on the banks of the Mississippi little more than a century ago. And now within the past few weeks the Reelfoot country has been shaken again and a ridge of gravel has appeared in a formerly level section.

Perhaps De Soto, in his wanderings along the Mississippi river, saw this country as a vast unbroken wilderness. As he thrust wearily northward along the west bank of the "Father of Waters," to the great Indian village of Cahokia, he little dreamed that this placid wilderness would within three hundred years be torn and racked by nature's forces, and that during one of the greatest earthquakes of historical times lakes covering tens of thousands of acres would come into existence overnight.

The old Spanish settlement of New Madrid, formed many years after De Soto had come and gone, did, however, play a prominent part in recording the story of Reelfoot, for here resided many of our American pioneers whose letters supply the details of that, to them, awful winter.

At the beginning of the Nineteenth century this region was called Indian country, and rightly so, for in the rich bottom lands dwelt a tribe of the Chickasaws, which camped at the base of bluffs that rose 300 feet above the Mississippi, providing the lookout points so needed in a wilderness.

Birth of Reelfoot Lake.

One of the pioneers of New Madrid, Eliza Bryan, described the earthquake that caused the birth of Reelfoot lake as follows:

"The Mississippi first seemed to recede from its banks, and its waters gathered up like a mountain, leaving for a moment many boats, which were on their way to New Orleans, on the bare sand, in which time the poor sailors made their escape from them.

"Then, rising 15 or 20 feet perpendicularly and expanding, as it were, at the same time, the banks overflowed with a retrograde current rapid as a torrent. The boats, which before had been left on the sand, were now torn from their moorings and suddenly driven up a little creek, at the mouth of which they had lain, to a distance in some instances of nearly a quarter of a mile.

"The surface of the earth was from time to time by these hard shocks covered to various depths by sand which issued from fissures that were made in great numbers all over this country. Some of these closed up immediately, after they had vomited forth their sand and water. In some places, however, a substance resembling coal or impure stone coal was thrown up with the sand.

"It is impossible to say what the depth of the fissures was; we have reason to believe that some of them were very deep.

"The site of this town was settled down at least 15 feet, but not more than a half mile below there does not appear to be any alteration of the bank of the river.

"Back from the river large ponds, or lakes, which covered a large part of the country, were nearly dried up. The beds of some of them are elevated several feet above the former banks, producing an alteration from their original state of 10 or 20 feet, and lately it has been discovered that a lake was formed on the opposite side of the Mississippi, in the Indian country, upward of 100 miles long and from 1 to 6 miles wide, of a depth of from 10 to 50 feet."

Several such letters are full of interesting detail, yet now we know that the facts were greatly exaggerated. For example, the 100-mile lake is nearer 14 miles in length and 6½ miles in width.

Great Area Affected.

This we do know and realize, however: That such an earthquake, if occurring at the present time, would probably cause ten times the damage which followed the San Francisco earthquake of 1906.

Reelfoot was not the only lake formed, for large areas in eastern Arkansas and northwestern Louisiana were partly submerged and a number of small lakes formed. This earthquake, known historically as the New Madrid earthquake, caused a settling and rising of the land over a large territory, and partly demolished the old Spanish settlement from which it was named.

General Rogers of Revolutionary fame, living at Rock Island, on the Caney Fork river, at the foot of Cumberland mountains, 200 miles to the east, saw great blocks of sandstone, loosened from the top escarpment, 1,000 feet above the river, crash down the mountain sides.

A great area throughout America was affected by this earthquake. Far up in the northern woods of Canada the Indians reported that earth tremors occurred; to the west in Missouri and Arkansas, the reports of James' expedition say that the Indians were terrified by the same quake, while to the southwest, on the Washita river, there was much fear among the settlers. At New Orleans, 500 miles away; at Detroit, 600 miles away; at Washington, 700 miles away, and even at Boston, at a distance of 1,100 miles, slight tremors were felt.

What occurred in the Reelfoot region? What happened to New Madrid? There were no hard rocks in that section; all the country was covered by rich loams and clays, and under this surface soil was layer after layer of loose sand and clay, down to a depth of 2,000 feet.

The earth waves came up through these 2,000 feet of sand and clays, and where breaks occurred on the surface poured streams of quicksand from deeply buried layers, veritable sand geysers.

The great forest trees moved, with branches interlocked, like fields of grain before the wind. Their trunks, not having the suppleness of youth, fell prostrate or reclined at grotesque angles to the earth.

The rhythmic motion of the earth is well shown by the parallel lines of cypress trees growing on the low crests of the many rolls in the Reelfoot lake region. An airplane view brings to life again the roll of the earth as it occurred more than a century ago.

During the last 100 years the Mississippi river has continued to ravage the areas along its course during the flood seasons. While the river writhed back and forth across its mighty plain, the newly-born Reelfoot lake grew more beautiful, and nature began to heal scars on the landscape which were inflicted at its birth. Its clear, brownish water became the home of many fish and its surface was dotted with lily pads, called "yonco pins," whose gorgeous flowers had the imprisoned yellow of a river sunset. In and around the stunted cypress growths, struggling for existence in five feet of water, was a filmlike iridescent green carpet, called "moss seed." Along the borders of the lake a dense growth of saw grass, mud-foot, swartweed, and even wild rice soon appeared.

Fine Resort for Birds.

To this haven of beauty, teeming with plant growth and fish, soon came, on their yearly 20,000-mile pilgrimage, the wild denizens of the air—ducks, geese, water turkey or cormorants, coots and the white heron, while the rail, gallinule, bittern and teel nested among the saw grass and the lily pads.

As wild fowl and wood folk flocked in, so did the French trapper and the American hunter and pioneer. Here one still finds the mink, weasel and otter, along with the opossum and raccoon.

As the country was gradually developed, a number of the sport-loving settled along the lake and lived on fish from its waters and the fowls from its marshes, while the trapping of animals supplied their necessary revenue.

Located in the most-used highway of migratory birds, Reelfoot lake is visited in the spring and autumn by no small percentage of our journeying waterfowl. From a naturalist's standpoint, the region is one of great interest.

Some fifteen years ago the state of Tennessee, realizing the value of Reelfoot lake as a source of revenue made it a fish and game preserve

POULTRY

FOR BIG PROFITS WATCH IN SUMMER

The summer and fall seasons are the ones in which the producer of market eggs must be most particular about the quality of his product if he expects to receive the top market price. "At that time of the year," says the poultry department of the state experiment station at New Brunswick, "the spread in price between the two top grades of eggs may be as high as 12 to 15 cents per dozen as compared with a spread of 2 or 3 cents in the spring, which indicates that the producer's net profit at the end of the year may depend to a very large extent upon the quality of his summer and fall eggs."

There are several factors entering into the cause of this wide spread in price at the seasons mentioned, but probably the most important is the fact that the interior quality deteriorates very rapidly, and the eggs reach the market very loose and watery. To overcome this trouble, the producer should collect his eggs two or three times daily and keep them in a cool place previous to shipment.

A cave or cellar makes a very good place to hold eggs, but care must be taken to see that the place is clean and sweet, as eggs are very prone to absorb any foul or musty odors. Shipments should be made as soon as possible after the eggs are laid, and never should be less frequent than twice a week.

The eggs should not be excessively handled, since this aggravates the condition, causing the egg to become extremely loose. The aim should be to handle the eggs as a perishable product, which in reality they are. Speed and care in handling are the two prime requisites where the producer is being paid on a quality basis.

Faulty Rations Cause of Heavy Mortality

Faulty rations cause vast numbers of chicks to die every year. A pullet once stunted with improper or spoiled feed will never get back to successfully compete with those who were healthy from the start.

The feed the chicks get from the beginning should be directed toward the eggs the pullets are expected to lay when they mature, says an Ohio specialist.

The all-mash method of feeding chicks that has been perfected by the Ohio, Indiana and Wisconsin agricultural experiment stations makes it possible to feed the flock with more exactness. It also takes less time to care for them. It does not differ greatly from the scratch grain and mash method of feeding. The grain that is ordinarily fed whole or cracked is ground and mixed with the mash.

Charcoal Is Beneficial to All Growing Chicks

It has become common practice for the majority of chick mashes to contain some charcoal. Experiments show that it is beneficial as a preventive of trouble. It does not have any particular food value. Charcoal is a black odorless and practically tasteless product and does not go into solution in water. Its value lies in its ability to absorb gases of indigestion or dyspepsia. Some people claim that it will even absorb toxins or other poisonous substances, that are sometimes generated in the intestine. It aids in warding off and curing diarrhea and other troubles caused by indigestion.

Poultry Notes

Heavy hens bring 8 to 10 cents a pound more than the light breeds on the market.

• • •

Watch the young poultry for signs of lice. It is amazing how suddenly an entire brood can become infested.

• • •

Because a coal-burning brooder stove keeps a colony house very dry, there is a tendency for some poultrymen to neglect sanitation until the conditions are very bad.

• • •

Usually chicks should be three weeks old before giving them freedom to mash all day.

• • •

Let the sun in the brooder house, having it shine directly on the chicks without going through ordinary window glass.

• • •

More incubator chicks die from bowel trouble due to chilling than perhaps any other cause. Chicks with hen mothers are seldom affected, and thrive in severe weather, if they can run to their mother when cool.

• • •

Turkeys do better on free range than in confinement as it is their nature to roam.

• • •

Hens need plenty of water. During periods of heavy production they consume more water than during the winter. Eggs contain 70 per cent of water.

• • •

Three very fundamental things necessary for you to furnish your chicks to make chick raising highly successful are proper feeding, necessary warmth, and healthful sanitation.

SHE WENT FROM BAD TO WORSE

Down to 98 Pounds — Finally Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Cleveland, Ohio.—"After having my first baby, I lost weight, no matter what I did. Then a doctor told me I would be better if I had another baby, which I did. But I got worse, was always sickly and went down to 98 pounds. My neighbor told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it helped her very much, so tried it. After taking four bottles, I weigh 116 pounds. It has just done wonders for me and I can do my housework now without one bit of trouble."—Mrs. M. Riessinger, 10004 Nelson Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

If some good fairy should appear, and offer to grant your heart's desire, what would you choose? Wealth? Happiness?

Health? That's the best gift. Health is riches that gold cannot buy and surely health is cause enough for happiness.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound may be the good fairy who offers you better health.

Half the time, silence is the best answer.

There is nothing more satisfactory after a day of hard work than a line full of snow-white clothes. For such results use Russ Bleaching Blue.—Adv.

FLOUNCES, SLEEVES, AND BONNETS WIDE OF BRIM

IN THE fluttery, flowery chiffon dresses which glorify this summer's mode and which are so flattering to the modern woman, Dame Fashion fulfills her promise of recapturing the for-a-time lost art of an alluringly feminine styling. It would seem as if these lovely frocks had filled the cup of beauty to the brim and overflowing—yet their program of enchantment continues.

One of the fascinations lately thrown upon the screen of fashion is the dainty gown of diaphanous print which has a skirt adorned with tiers of hemstitched petals, and sleeves flowing open from the elbow with untold grace, just as you see in this picture.

Beflounced and Beflowered.

It is astonishing how many tiers, drapes, jabots, floating panels, flounces and the like can be lavished on one chiffon frock without overdoing the matter. However, such is the scheme of design for these sheer frocks now so popular, they must achieve a soft elusive silhouette through intriguing manipulation of the fabric, independent of any applied trimming.

Another item of interest in regard to the adorable gown as illustrated is that it is made of white chiffon trimmed with the flowered rather than being entirely of the print. A word should be said concerning the large rose patternings, such as this model fascinate. Some of them flippity-flop in such a winning way, others assume a cartwheel aspect, while many recent types suddenly narrow at the back, suggesting a bonnet-like silhouette. She who wears this type must "right about face!" else who can tell whether her eyes be blue or brown such a teasing way have these brims of shutting off the view from the side. That this type is the cunningest ever, is a truth attested by the clever model of black straw, centered below in the picture. It is simply banded with ribbon, of course, for the ribbon trim is outstanding at this moment.

The zig-zag fabric applique is a feature worth taking note of as it appears on the hat at the top to the right. It's a new way of embellishing the chapeau without disturbing its contour. There is a pretty play of color reveals. These single immense florals either on dark or light grounds are the top o' the mode for dressy wear. To be sure, the prevailing style trend is toward tiny figures, but the enormous rose motif is one of the many exceptions to the rule.

Some Late Summer Hats.

It is also part of the "elegance in dress movement" that the sheer summer frock be accompanied with a picture chapeau, especially favoring transparent capelines in entrancing pastel colorings tuned to the frock. The last word in midsummer millinery is the exquisitely colorful flat feather skull cap.

Dainty footwear, too, harmonized to the general color scheme is an essential to the ensemble. Satin slippers in colors are in excellent style for formal wear.

Modern woman, at least so far as fashions are concerned, has recovered her femininity. She now wears picturesque frocks with picturesque millinery—which means for the interworking of several shades of taffeta for this model.

There is also an effective two-color scheme displayed in the straw-and-fabric hat pictured to the left below. The newest wide brims show straws of many colors sewed together in around-and-around stripe effect.

The last hat is a beige hair body, with beige velvet ribbon. It's the correct thing this summer to trim the straw hat in matching velvet ribbon. Pink roses at the side unite with a fan of velvet by way of a finishing touch.

THE DAIRY

GUARD COW FROM ATTACKS OF FLY

Although the effect of flies on dairy cattle is commonly overestimated dairymen are finding that there are times when the pests are sufficiently numerous to warrant the use of repellents, states E. J. Perry, New Jersey extension dairy specialist.

Where flies and mosquitoes are numerous, spraying with some good fly mixture makes the cows more comfortable and helps somewhat to prevent a drop in milk production. Many good repellents are on the market, but some are better than others, says Mr. Perry.

The experience of dairymen has been that to secure satisfactory results spraying must be done twice daily. They spray after milking in the morning and again one hour before the night milking. All pails and cans are left outside the barn while the spraying is going on and kept out as long as possible. In this way, tainting of the milk is avoided. The milk is strained inside the barn. Commercial mixtures are coming more and more into use, but for those who wish to make their own fly repellents the following are suggested by the dairy specialist:

No. 1.

Powdered resin	4 pounds
Laundry soap	4 pounds
Fish oil	2 quarts
Oil of tar	2 quarts
Kerosene	3 quarts

Boil the powdered resin, laundry soap and fish oil in one gallon of water. After boiling for a few minutes add two gallons of water and the kerosene and oil of tar. Boil this mixture for 15 minutes. Shake well and apply as needed.

No. 2.

Kerosene	2 gallons
Pine tar	1 quart
Crude carbolic acid	8 ounces
Fish oil	2 quarts
Linseed oil	2 gallons

Mix thoroughly and apply as usual.

Garget Caused by Germ in the Udder of Animal

Garget, an affection of the mammary glands of the cow, and of some other animals, is caused by a germ that gets into the udder through the teat duct. It was formerly thought that there were two forms of this trouble, one being caused by mechanical injury, but investigators are now inclined to believe that every case is caused by bacteria. It is thought that with a heavy-producing cow or one that has just freshened the milk accumulates in the udder and forms a good medium for bacteria to multiply should they get into the udder. They set up an inflammation and the result is called garget. These harmful bacteria are not always present, but when they do gain entrance to the udder there is trouble, if conditions are favorable for their development.

Dairy Cows Will Reduce Living Costs on Farms

Every farmer realizes that the difference between what he gets for food products and what the consumer pays for these products is much larger than it used to be. Economists agree that this large difference must continue as long as freight rates and wages remain as high as they are now. But the farmer is a consumer also, and the best way for him to beat the game is to produce more of his own food on the farm. Milk and cream occupy first rank because they take the place of the most expensive foods the farmer has to buy—meat and fats—and also because they are such healthful foods. There is nothing like milk and cream to make the children grow, keep the whole family healthy and cut down the doctor's bills.

Dairy Facts

Milk utensils should be sterilized. This not only kills bacteria and makes utensils sweet and wholesome, but they also dry quickly, which prevents rusting.

• • •

Cows, however well bred or selected, which are unduly thin or out of condition do not make profitable returns from rations. It pays to keep cows in thrifty condition at all seasons of the year.

• • •

The amount of salt required daily by the dairy cow varies according to the milk production and feed consumption. Allow the herd to have free access to salt or give them a certain amount regularly with their feed.

• • •

The man who can have—and has them—green pastures throughout the winter months does not need a silo for his cows.

• • •

Ten milk cows will need about 30 tons of silage next winter. Ten milk cows and their young offspring will need about 80 tons.

• • •

The cow which is allowed to shrink in milk flow will never come back to normal. Keep up the flow of milk through the dry-pasture period with green corn and sorghum.

A Child's Laxative Which Mothers Can Rely On

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he constantly advised mothers to give only a harmless laxative which would help to establish natural bowel "regularity."

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin mothers have a regulating laxative which they can depend upon whenever a child is constipated, bilious, feverish or sick from a cold, indigestion or sour stomach. All children love its pleasant taste.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself how perfectly it cleanses and regulates the bowels of infants and children.

Stamp of Legality Put on Zoning Ordinances

Decisions of the state Supreme courts in a substantial majority of cases, or in twelve out of a total of sixteen, had been favorable to city zoning ordinances. But the essential issue involved had not reached the United States Supreme court until a test case, arising from Euclid, Ohio, a suburb of Cleveland, was laid before that body. The main question involved in this case, according to Alfred Bettman of Cincinnati, a member of the Hoover conference on city planning, "was whether it was constitutional to form, by zoning, exclusive residential districts, into which industrial lands could not approach."

The court not only answered the question affirmatively but amplified its position by pointing to the legality of many other protective moves aimed at the security and general welfare of people in cities. Not only could districts be zoned against industries, the court said in substance, but against apartments and against other types of structures, whether intended for habitation or business use, that were not in reasonable harmony with individual family dwellings or that might tend to interfere with the proper use of them.

The decision, it has become evident, is far-reaching. It clarifies the whole question of zoning, virtually closes the door to litigation over it, and opens the way to a new era in city development. The decision means, says Mr. Bettman, "that where a city has a zoning ordinance the city authorities are strengthened in the enforcement of their orders, and that cities now without zoning ordinances may proceed more quickly to get them with the knowledge they are invulnerable to attack if properly drawn."

Cogent Reasons Why Home Ownership Pays

Harry H. Culver, president of the Los Angeles realty board, puts the advantages of home ownership squarely as follows:

Pay rent eleven years—you have nothing to show for it.

Apply this amount on your home monthly—eleven years, home free of incumbrance.

Material will never be cheaper than now.

Thrift—personal, local and national is encouraged.

Health in one's own home is more readily safeguarded.

Purpose in life is stimulated through responsibility and proprietorship.

Comfort of body and mind is best attained in one's own home.

Self-esteem is encouraged by pride of possession.

Self-confidence is fostered by a sense of proprietorship.

Financial stability is increased to home owners.

Social prestige is accorded to home owners.

Permanency of home, school and neighborhood association is secured.

Community stability is improved, through absence of labor troubles in home-owning communities.

All-Electric Village

The first all-electric village on record has grown up at Eltham, England, a community built by the Woolwich borough council as part of the national housing program.

The original plans included the wiring of the dwellings for electric light and appliances and the use of gas for cooking. The cost of laying gas mains for a considerable distance to a small village proved prohibitive, and electric service was determined upon. Today the 600 houses of Eltham use electricity for lighting, household devices, cooking and heating, and Eltham claims the honor of being the only all-electric village in the world.—Utility Bulletin.

Beautify School Grounds

The orderly arrangement of shrubs and flowers, the neatness of walks and driveways, the artistic grouping of buildings, the curves and arches of these structures, well-kept lawns, everything connected with our public schools should be such as to make eloquent appeal to the children who attend these schools, for these things will become a vital part of their general and practical education. Slovenly schools, carelessness in the arrangements of buildings, equipment and grounds may develop these qualities in pupils, and thus deprive them of advantages they ought to have.

City and Country

The man in the city imagines if he had a farm in the country he could raise chickens and grow rich, while the farmer just thinks if he could make the salary the city man makes he could save enough to retire on. So there you are. Neither is satisfied. But you will notice the fellow in the city gets wrinkled and careworn first. —Centerville (Ala.) Press.

CHERRINGTON BELIEVES NEWSPAPERS FAIR

Westerville, July 27.—Newspapers of America are cleaner, fairer and less prejudiced on the prohibition question than ever before, believes Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington, general secretary of the World League Against Alcoholism.

"A study of the American newspapers, both daily and weekly, metropolitan and rural, discloses," Dr. Cherrington asserts, that whatever be their attitude toward the principle of prohibition, and whatever they print editorially, most of the newspapers fairly report news dealing with prohibition. There are as few wilful liars among newspaper men as among any other professional class. In the very nature of the case many statements appear in newspaprs which give the wrong impression as to the facts but this is usually not due to any prejudice on the part of the management of the paper.

"Temperance workers are too often prone to regard adverse news stories printed in newspapers as proof that such newspapers are unfriendly to prohibition, and that they are glad to print material against prohibition, but averse to printing material favorable to prohibition.

"That is true of only an infinitesimal number of purely yellow sheets. The great bulk of newspapers use their columns impartially, though their editorial columns may be biased.

"The great news collecting and distributing agencies are as free from bias in their news as any human agency may rightly be supposed to be.

"The general policy of newspapers is to get and print the news That job in a daily newspaper must be accomplished within the space of a very few hours, and the writer of a news story, the editor of that same story and the headwriter cannot deliberate too long on just what to do. Snap judgment of news values and space conditions must be taken. What may seem to any particular reader to be news may lack news value in the view of the editor.

"Prohibition is the general policy of the nation. Obedience to law is the practice of the people generally. Successful enforcement anywhere is taken as a matter of course and has no particular news value because it is the natural thing to happen.

"But conspiracies against prohibition, efforts to weaken or repeal the law and therefore change present conditions, the failure or corruption of an enforcement officer and flagrant law violation, all are news and naturally find a place in the news columns.

"Newspapers will not willingly and knowingly float propaganda of any sort. That is true of most of them. A few only are outside that pale. But if you have a real news story, it will generally be printed, even in newspapers which do not favor the thing you are trying to put across.

"Naturally, since prohibition has helped all other classes of professional men and toilers, it has been a boon, too, to the newspapers and industry.

"As a class, newspaper workers, as I have known them, will compare favorably in intelligence, honesty, sincerity and general character with ministers, physicians, lawyers and teachers. The American newspaper worker generally is a high type of man."

HOW TO KEEP COOL

The hot days we have been longing for are here, or at least they have been with us in sufficient number to cause considerable discomfort. But those who realize that it takes warm days and warm nights to mature vegetation and to make crops and gardens grow, are not complaining. None of us want to pass through a famine, and that is about what would happen to us if Old Sol failed to warm up during July and August. It's a little hard on us, of course, but look around and you'll see that the citizen who suffers least in summer is the one who refuses to lose his temper and who will not let himself become agitated over trivial matters. Keep the head cool and you'll keep the whole body cool. An irritable, complaining person never knows what it is to be comfortable in summer time. Just try smiling, and refuse to frown and fuss, and see how quickly you forget all about the heat and its attendant annoyances.

BOY DROWNS IN MICHIGAN LAKE

Glen, the 16 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. John Draggoo, of near Montgomery, Mich., was drowned Sunday afternoon, while in wading at a nearby lake with three of his chums. The beach had a sudden drop, and Glen not being familiar with it, dropped out of sight without warning to his companions, and reports are that he did not come to the top. By the time help was summonsed it was several hours before he could be located, and when found was in thirty feet of water.

Glen was a student in the St. Joe schools for some time while living at Concord and he has many friends here, who were shocked to learn of the accident, and the parents have the sympathy of the entire community.

The funeral was held from the home Wednesday afternoon and relatives here and at Concord attended.

BROTHER'S ARRIVAL UNEXPECTED

Mr. C. H. Gee of Conneaut, O., delightfully surprised his brothers, Laney and S. D. Gee and other relatives, when he arrived Saturday for a three days visit. In spite of his being one of the few present at the Coburn's Corners Home Coming Sunday, who exceeded the 75 year old mark, Mr. Gee accompanied his brief talk with a clear soprano solo, which was enjoyed by all. Monday the three brothers spent calling on relatives and friends in the vicinity of St. Joe, Butler, Newville and Hicksville.

PARTICIPATE IN DRAMATIC RECITAL

Miss Priscilla Borthwick and Miss Eloise Bowman, as pupils of Mrs. Emily White Hull, participated in the annual recital given at Hicksville on Tuesday evening of last week. The young ladies gave their work in a creditable manner, apearing on the program in single and group numbers. Miss Borthwick gave two whistling solos.

MORE FAMILY REUNIONS BEING SCHEDULED

The Sechler family will hold its thirty-sixth reunion on Sunday, August 14, at the home of B. E. Widney and wife, north of town. Invitations are going forward this week from Mrs. Edith Cole, secretary. Henry Sechler of Butler is president.

The Koch families will meet on Sunday, August 21, in their fourth reunion at the Community Hall, Spencerville according to Mrs. Joseph Koch, who is secretary of the association and is issuing the invitations. Roy Wade is the president for the year.

The Monroe family reunion will be held this year on the last Sunday in August at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ira Bone at Concord.

HOME COMING GUESTS

Among those from away who attended the Home Coming at Coburn's Corners last Sunday were:

Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Wilmot, Miss Elva Wilmot, Fay Wilmot and wife, Donald Snyder and wife and Rev. Oviatt, of Fort Wayne; Rev. Konkle and wife and Mr. and Mrs. Driver of Payne, Ohio; Mrs. Anna Frank and sons, Russel, Bob, Cleon and daughter, Martha, and Mrs. Matie Gee of Auburn; Mr. and Mrs. I. S. Hadsell, Mrs. Lucy Koch, Mrs. Leora Thayer and son, Charles Thayer of Hicksville; Wallace Abel and wife, Lesalie Strong and wife and Mrs. Ophelia Headley of Newville; Chas. Tustison, Mr. and Mrs. Lee O. Tustison and son, Keith of Defiance, Ohio; Frank Scholes and S. D. Gee of St. Joe.

LOCATES AT WABASH

John Milliman, who for the past few years has been operator at Butler, moved last week to Wabash, Indiana, and continues in the employ of Wabash railroad. John has been on the job for several weeks prior to his moving. The children, Dorothy, Harold and Edna, left Monday after spending Saturday and Sunday in the Willis Beaber home. Mrs. Ila Shilling and sons were also Sunday guests.

It keeps a lot of people moving to get enough money to pay rent.

ALL HAIL TO "MISS SOUTH BEND"

Unexpected honors came to Miss Hilda Koch, 19, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Koch, of St. Joe, last week at South Bend, when she was selected by a group of judges to represent South Bend at a beauty pageant held at Gary, Indiana, on Friday, Saturday and Sunday of last week. Out of a large number of bathing girls, Miss Hilda was chosen. Her picture appeared in South Bend papers last week and The News endeavored to get the cut but at time of going to press it had not arrived.

While her parents here have had no word of her success at Gary, yet a newspaper dispatch of Monday has the following to say:—

Gary, August 1.—"Miss South Bend was Miss Indiana today, as a result of Hilda Koch, brunette beauty of the motor city being selected last night to represent the Hoosier state at this year's Atlantic City beauty pageant in September.

"Second honors in the state contest were won by Miss Harriet Rouse of Muncie, with Miss Hazel Grant of Hamond, third.

"Fourteen Hoosier cities were represented in the contest.

"Miss Koch is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Koch residing near St. Joe, DeKalb county. She has been in South Bend for about two years, employed as a filing clerk in the Studebaker offices."

JOHNSON FAMILY HOLD REUNION

The ninth annual reunion of the Johnson family was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Goings, west of St. Joe, on Sunday, July 31. Those present were:

Mrs. Rebecca Beams, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Beams and two daughters, Doris and Florence and Paul Wright of Spencerville.

Carl Johnson of Chicago.

Mr. and Mrs. D. C. Noris and children, Mildred and Dale, of South Bend.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Johnson and children, Herbert and Hilda of Elkhart; Charley Johnson and son of Steubenville; Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Reavis and daughter, Anna, of Toledo, Ohio; Mrs. Hilda Niles, Mrs. Lillie Niles and Mrs. Maud Miller of Syracuse.

Mr. and Mrs. George Goings, Mrs. Cora Hosack, Mr. and Mrs. L. V. Shull and children, Betty, Billy and Norma Jean, Herman Hiemoth, Jake Long, Mrs. Della Berger and daughter, Lillian May, Mrs. Lizzie Morr and daughter, Marie and Laura Watt and son, Hubert, of Fort Wayne.

Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Johnson Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe Johnson and son, Howard, Mr. and Mrs. Charley Haifley and daughters, Violet and Helen, Mr. and Mrs. Clair Wooliver and daughters, Berniece and Wilma, Herman Reinicker, wife and two children, Valera and Wayne, and Mr. and Mrs. William Goings and sons, Donald, James and Fredide all of Auburn.

Mr. and Mrs. George Johnson and two sons, Robert and Arthur, Mr. and Mrs. Ira Bone, Mr. and Mrs. Charley Morr, Laura Keller, Naomi Baker and Mr. and Mrs. James Goings and children, Stella, Clarence, Rachel and Ilif, of Concord.

All enjoyed a bountiful dinner and watermelons in the afternoon also a fine program.

BIRTHDAY DINNER

Little Miss Jane Keesler was given a birthday dinner Tuesday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Yeiser, in honor of her twelfth anniversary. A beautiful cake adorned the table, on which twelve candles were lighted. At the proper time Miss Jane was presented a beautiful knife by her uncle, Clarence Coburn, and was then permitted to cut the cake. Besides the Sam Keesler family, Mrs. Jane Coburn and three sons, Clarence, John and Lester, were present.

SUFFERS HEMORRHAGE OF THE BRAIN

Early Thursday morning of last week, F. M. Thornton suffered a hemorrhage of the brain which rendered him unconscious for several days, but today he is improved.

Mrs. Thornton states that she noticed him not being able to pick up his feet like ordinarily and that when he was preparing for breakfast he dropped the soap and comb. This led her to believe him to be feeling worse so she had him go to bed and Dr. Shook was called and he was still able to talk about the way he was feeling. In a short time he passed into unconsciousness and remained in that condition for several hours.

Dr. Charles Beal of Fort Wayne was called in consultation and he gave hopes of his recovery.

Today Mr. Thornton is much improved and able to use his left side, while the right foot shows some signs of life. While not able to talk yet he recognizes those about him. Liquid food is taken by means of straws and he is regaining his strength.

Mr. Thornton suffered a stroke of paralysis last fall and the left arm was effected, while this attack has effected his entire right side, including his sight, but this too, is thought will be restored with his recovery.

GYPSIES STEAL MONEY FROM FARMER

Nelson Tustison was held up at his home east of town Tuesday afternoon by two gypsy women, and released of a $5.00 bill.

Mr. Tustison was sitting in the yard, as is his daily custom and no one else was in sight when the tribe passed, seeing an opportunity to commit some depredation, they stopped their Hudson car at the foot of the hill and two women piled out. They began to talk to Mr. Tustison and at the same time feel around for his pockets, finding his purse she took the money but left the purse in the chair. The second woman started to enter the house, when she was met at the door by Mrs. Anna Tustison and ordered to leave at once.

Had Mrs. Tustison been in the garden with other members of the family, she would evidently have found her home ransacked completely and no doubt, some things missing.

The theft was not discovered until a few minutes later and by the time help was secured in St. Joe the machine was about to pass. Paul Curie, who answered the call, with Lloyd Curie, started to overtake them, and nearing Leo, they passed the car expecting to halt them at the filling station. After waiting a short time they failed to appear and it dawned upon Paul that they had suspicioned him and turned off on a west road.

At this juncture the race ended although Fort Wayne police had been called.

NEW AND TESTED RECIPES FOR LADIES OF THE NEWS

ONE-EGG CAKE

¼ cupful butter or shortening.
2-3 cupful sugar.
1 egg, well beaten.
½ cupful milk.
1½ cupfuls prepared cake flour.
2 teaspoonfuls baking powder.
½ teaspoonful vanilla.

Cream the shortening; add gradually the sugar, beating hard, then the egg; sift flour and baking powder together; add alternately with the milk, a little at a time. Add vanilla. Bake in a shallow pan in a moderate oven about 30 minutes (350-375 degrees F.) Ice as desired.

NEWVILLE ANNUAL HOME COMING

On Sunday, August the 7th, Charles Reign Scoville will conduct the regular Annual Newville Home-Coming Services. Dr. Scoville will be accompanied by his wife, Arlene Dax Scoville, who will sing several selectfons. Rev. D. R. Moss, pastor of the Christian Church at Kendallville, Indiana, will also speak and be present throughout the day.

The meeting is being advertised in all the surrounding towns and everyone is invited. The big Basket Dinner at noon will be held in the grove, providing the weather permits; otherwise plans are being made to have the Basket Dinner in the church.

So many old friends and neighbors from the various cities are reporting their plans for spending August 7th in Newville that a larger crowd is expected than has ever before attended this Home-Coming. The Christian Church at Kendallville, Ind., is epecting to come en masse.

So many things which are easy to recommend are hard to do.

OPTOMETRY—ITS VALUE TO THE PUBLIC

By Ed W. Hicks, Optometrist and Optician

What does Optometry embrace?

The anatomy, pathology and physiology of the eye. Its extreme liability to abnormalities. The means by which they may be corrected. the detection of all errors of vision and their correction without the use of drugs. Also the preparation of the necessary lenses and their adjustment of the features of the patient.

It would appear that Optometry occupies an important relation to public welfare.

Yes, it is fully as important as any other profession.

Trouble-Shooting the B-Eliminator

Where to Look and What to Do When Power Supply Gives Out.

By CHARLES GOLENPAUL,
American Mechanical Laboratories.

Trouble-shooting the B-eliminator should be a systematic process of elimination—but with nothing eliminated until it has been checked up. In other words, take nothing for granted, because things taken for granted are often the very things causing the trouble. We all recall the chap who took the automobile half apart, looking for the trouble, when some one reminded him that his gas tank was empty. Radio trouble-shooting can be very much the same.

The first step in trouble-shooting the B-eliminator is to make sure that the 110-volt current is turned on, and that it is reaching the transformer primary of the device. The next step is to be sure that the fault lies with the B-eliminator, and not with the associated radio receiver.

With the trouble narrowed down to the B-eliminator, the logical procedure is to start with the resistance bank and then work backward through the filter, rectifier tube, and finally the transformer.

Lamp or Meter Test.

A common trouble, when trouble does occur, is the absence of voltage at a given tap. This is generally traceable to an open-circuited or burnt-out resistor. Thus if the 10,000-ohm fixed resistor of the usual B-eliminator becomes open, the detector voltage will immediately increase, so that in the tuned radio-frequency receiver the signal strength will be greatly diminished, while in the regenerative receiver there will be constant oscillation.

A defective resistor may be located by means of a high-resistance voltmeter connected to each tap in turn. The reading obtained at each tap should be approximately that called for by the designation on the tap. In the absence of a high-resistance voltmeter, a 15 watt, 220-volt incandescent lamp may be employed. It should glow a dull red on the full output and on the intermediate tap of the B-power unit. If it lights equally bright at the detector tap it is an indication of an open or defective 10,000-ohm fixed resistor.

A satisfactory temporary repair can generally be made by means of a clarostat connected between the plus binding post and the terminal which gives no voltage. The resistance is adjusted until the proper voltage is obtained, and this saves the trouble of seeking the correct value for a fixed resistor, while at the same time providing ample current-handling capacity.

Look to By-Pass Condenser.

If the voltage taps are found satisfactory, yet the receiver still fails to operate properly, the trouble may be due to an open or an omitted by-pass condenser. A short-circuited by-pass condenser will act the same as a short-circuited resistor.

If there is no voltage at all the terminals, the trouble may be traced to an open circuit in the wiring, or in the transformer or choke coil windings, or again to a broken-down condenser. The wiring should be checked over for broken wires or bad connections. The transformer secondary and choke coil windings can be tested, by means of a telephone receiver and a dry cell, for continuity. Filter condensers can be tested by the same means, with a loud click at the time of making contact and a weaker click upon successive tapping of the terminals, to indicate a good condenser. If the successive clicks are equally loud, the condenser is short-circuited.

The rectifier tube should be considered after that. The best method is to try a new tube or a tube known to be good, in place of the existing tube. This is especially true with the gaseous type of tube, which gives no other indication of its operation but a slight warmth.

Rubber Mats Under Set Prevent Ringing Noise

A radio set which has a habit of developing inexplicable ringing or "microphonic" noises in the loud speaker can be cured quite effectively if a pair of ordinary thin rubber stair mats are slipped beneath it so that the bottom of the cabinet rests on the rubber instead of on the table, says Radio News Magazine. The mats may be cut down with a pair of scissors so that they will not protrude beyond the edge of the set. The rubber mats "insulate" the set acoustically and prevent strong jars and shocks from reaching it.

Radio Craze Sweeps Japan

The radio craze has grown to such an extent in Japan that some of the middle school authorities in Tokyo have issued orders that students shall not "listen in" during certain hours of the evening, but shall devote these hours to their studies. The school heads found upon investigation that the youngsters were neglecting their school work in the evening to listen to the radio.

Effects of Magnets on Volume of Radio

During the first few years of broadcasting, when regenerative receivers were the most common type, the use of permanent magnets for increasing the sensitivity of the detector tube practically dropped out of sight. The advent of multiple-tube, nonregenerative receivers brings back the possibility of reviving this old stunt to advantage.

Experiments along this line are very simple, for it is only necessary to obtain a magnet with space enough between the poles to allow the tube to go between, and explore around the tube with it. There is no fixed rule as to where the magnet should be placed, nor is one necessary, for if it is going to effect an improvement, it will be apparent when the magnet is held in the hand.

When the approximate position of the magnet giving increased volume is found, some sort of support may be arranged which will allow for critical adjustment of its position. The magnet position will depend to a degree on the strength of its field. It should be quite strong.

Magnets from old boat or motorcycle magnetos are just the thing for this experiment, but those from flivver magnetos, or even straight bar magnets may be found effective. The larger ones may be found rather awkward to use, so, if possible, the use of small ones is recommended.

The efficiency of this magnetic action is not to be taken for granted. In some cases, signals which are hardly audible are increased to speaker volume after the magnets are applied, while in other cases the volume is decreased or unaffected. In regenerative sets, the stunt is hardly worth trying as the only action will probably be a "spilling over" and distortion.

Radio Wages Crusade on Fuzzy Caterpillar

Boston.—Many and varied are the accomplishments of radio, but one of the most unique achievements on record is believed to be the tent caterpillar crusade of the Radio Nature league. The crusade brought about the destruction of 300,000,000 of the "crawlers."

This novel campaign was conducted by Thornton W. Burgess, founder and director of the Radio Nature league, a regular feature on the schedule of station WBZ.

The crusade lasted three weeks. It was conducted as a contest, with several worthwhile prizes offered. More than a million egg masses, which would have yielded approximately 300,000,000 crawly furry tent caterpillars, were destroyed by the ardent contestants. Two abreast and end to end, the exterminated pests would form a line 3,869 miles long.

Canadian-Newfoundland Chess by Amateur Radio

Dartmouth, N. S.—What is believed to be the first inter-dominion chess match ever played by radio in the British empire was recently staged between the chess club of this city and that of St. Johns, Newfoundland through the co-operation of amateur station 1DD, operated by Maj. W. C. Borrett of this city, and station 8AR owned and operated by Loyal Reid of St. Johns. According to information furnished the American Radio Relay league, of which both men are members, the game was highly successful and lasted nearly three hours, twenty three moves being completed on each side of the board. The match resulted in a draw, but, judging by the enthusiasm displayed by both teams the two amateur stations will probably be called upon in the near future to assist in a deciding match.

When Microphonic Tube Is in Range of Speaker

"Howling," says Radio Broadcast Magazine, "results from a microphonic tube being within close range of the loud speaker. The most effective way to overcome howling due to microphonic tubes is to place the loud speaker at least 10 to 25 feet from the receiving set, depending on the maximum volume used. The use of sound dampening devices, such as the placing of metal covers or wooden boxes over the tubes, has been found fairly effective. Set cabinets not tightly assembled are sometimes the real cause of the trouble because they vibrate freely at a certain frequency. The resulting vibration is then passed to the tube elements through the cabinet and socket. Sometimes merely opening the lid of the cabinet stops the trouble."

Can Locate Music, but Not the Ta-ta-tee-um

Julius Mattfeld, librarian of the musical research department of the National Broadcasting company, prides himself on his ability to locate anything in music. A few days ago, however, even Mr. Mattfeld's expert knowledge wasn't sufficient to answer an inquiry. A woman listener telephoned to ask: "Can you find that little piece that was played over a Kansas City station about two years ago—by a guitarist—maybe it was a singer—some time in the afternoon or late evening? It goes 'Ta-ta-tee tee-um'—just like that, you know. My daughter wants the music to sing tonight." That was enough for Mattfeld. He was beaten, and knew it. The music department reports that he was picked up and carried to the tea room.

Employ New Process for Coloring Wood

The use of colored woods in the construction of furniture has long been known, the material being stained after the necessary seasoning process. Within the last few years, however, a method of Austrian origin has been employed, whereby the wood is colored when in a green state.

By means of heavy pressure in a closed vessel the sap is driven out of the wood and is replaced by the coloring fluid, which may consist of a solution of the more permanent aniline dyes. The best kinds of wood for treatment are found to be birch, beech, alder, plane, elm and lime; oak, fir and pine being unsuitable because they do not stain uniformly.

The colored wood is used for furniture making and for the manufacture of doors and window frames. It can also be employed for outdoor purposes, in which case no painting is necessary, although a coating of varnish would seem to be a necessity. For the fitting of ships, railway cars, and similar purposes, this stained wood appears to be eminently fitted.

Early Coastal Survey

The records of the United States coast and geodetic survey show that an act authorizing a survey of the coastal waters of the United States was approved by congress on February 10, 1807, but that actual field work was not started until 1816, when a survey of the bay and harbor of New York was begun.

No Spank

A little girl who was visiting her friend had overstayed her time and knew that she would be late in getting home. She expressed the fear that her mother would give her a spanking for being late. Her little hostess rushed away to another room and quickly returned with a copy of Children, the Magazine for Parents, which she handed to her friend. "Take this home to your mother, tell her to read it, and she won't spank you," she said reassuringly.

Polly knew that she was behaving abominably and ungenerously, but could not bring herself to do otherwise. She had looked so relieved at this that Mary reluctantly agreed. Ned, smiling noncommittally at Polly, had put his hand on Mary's shoulder and said:

"But Claude won't mind in the least our telling Aunt Lyddy everything, and just how we feel about it."

Then he had taken Mary away and saved Polly Johnston several awkward moments.

Mary, disappointed and unhappy that her mother could not accept Claude and his money as simply as it was offered, tried hard to make a smooth path for both of them. It was wearing work, and it told on Mary. Ned, watching her anxiously, wondered at Polly's hardness of heart toward the girl she adored.

"I'll have it out with Polly yet," he told Claude savagely, and would barely listen to his elder's counsel of patience and his sage, "She's jealous, Ned. Jealous because Mary loves us. You can't argue with a jealous woman."

This afternoon, Mary looked paler than usual. Mary's beautiful mother had been impossible today and Mary was glad to escape with father in the car, while Ned took Polly in his.

Ned surveyed Polly calmly as he gave her his hand. "I'll take you for a ride, Polly dear. Claude and Mary have important business at Clover Hollow, as you probably know unless you closed your ears while Mary was trying to tell you about it. After that, they're coming home here for tea and Mary and Aunt Lyddy will probably go over the family album, sorting out pictures of Claude in his youth. At such times I feel horribly in the way, don't you?"

Polly looked at him with equal calm. She could understand Ned.

"And Claude?"

"Claude will probably come back and pretend to be busy in the shop, though it's a dull day; but presently he will steal in to those two, the only women he really loves—and who adore him. Ten to one, Polly, when we come back, my Mary will be on his knee, with Aunt Lyddy feeding them chocolate cake and retailing to them anecdotes of the illustrous Dabbs family, past and present."

Polly sighed. Ned forsook the Hillsborough road and turned his car toward the open country.

At that very moment Mary said to her father: "I can't bear it, Dad. I hate to take the credit for all your ideas and work. I want to scream out that you're my own truly, honest father, and that everything's yours. I felt I would if I went to another tea with Mother and heard all those women talk about Dabbs, the grocer. I wanted to jump up and say: 'I'm Mary Dabbs.' How mother can sit there and—"

She stopped because Dabbs had put a hand on her shoulder and pulled her to him.

"I think your mother's way is far and away the best—for her. What kind of life would it be if Polly pretended? No, thank God, Polly's an honest woman when it comes to her likes and dislikes. If she ever does decide that she'll put up with a little more of my society, I'll be so flattered this town won't hold me.

"Don't you see, Polly's attitude makes it easier to keep things going smooth just now. Down there in Peace Valley there are two camps. One of them's sitting waiting to see me get my come-uppance from Clover Hollow, and the other thinks, 'Poor old Claude Dabbs is being bamboozled by that high-flying nephew. Claude's head ain't level yet, what with foreign travel and being noticed some by them two settlementers, the red-headed widow and her girl that's gonna marry Ned.'

"But how do I look," Mary asked bitterly, "taking your money and not owning you?"

"You'll get your chance one of these days. And it'll be a lot better. If the lovely Mrs. Johnston ever does take it into her head to smile on me, my stock will go way up with the villagers. They'll think I'm clever. But they'll think the woman's crazy."

He roared with laughter at the picture he had conjured up of the village worthies discussing the affair, and Mary followed his example.

"You'll have to take your arm away, when we get round this bend," she warned him. "But, oh, Father, I do love you."

"Do you! I'd lose everything I have, rather than one hair on your little head, Mary. And now, mind the plan we talked over and show me the kind of business head my girl has. Remember that you and I and Ned agreed that it's the rebels here and there that keep things from getting stale and into ruts, and we want them in our midst." He took his arm away. "I'm Dabbs the grocer now, but I'll be father all the way down home."

Mary's head was high as, accompanied by her father, she faced the entire community assembled in Mannheim's living room. As a matter of fact, the community had that moment been discussing the extraordinary Johnston engagement, in the light of "a social experiment."

One thing Mary was devoutly thankful for, and that was that Dorothy Selden had gone away. Mary felt that she could not have stood Dorothy's sneers at the grocer.

But now she was speaking, her father's eyes on her:

"I felt I should make this explanation myself, and not let it come through a lawyer. I—I am the Clover Hollow Realty company; that is, the majority shares in that company are now mine, and I want to have, as neighbors and tenants, live people—people who have views, decided views, even though they are not mine—people who will stimulate the community and set an example of honorable dealing, fairness, courage and cleverness to the whole countryside. So you can see why—I am pleased to have you—and want to retain you—as tenants.

"I'll Have It Out With Polly Yet," He Told Claude Savagely.

"About Mr. Dabbs—" Mary turned in a simple, natural way and took Dabbs' hand, as though to present him to them, "I'm going to ask you to let bygones be bygones. I want to keep you both. Is it a bargain, tenants?".

Her smile won them instantly, and O'Toole with a muttered, "The darlint," led in gallantly holding out his hand to the "swatest landlord in the world."

They watched her go down the path and ride away beside her "agent," and Mrs. Mannheim had the last word.

"She may join with us now," she said a little sadly, "and she has all the earmarks of an enthusiastic worker, but what will happen after she marries Rangeley?"

They drew together to discuss that aspect.

Once out of sight, the agent became the father.

"Handled them like a born politician, Mary. I'm proud of you."

The landlord, seeing that the road was clear, hugged the agent.

On High Ridge road, where the wind swept across fields of young grain, and clover scented the air, Ned, who had been driving the silent Polly at breakneck speed, slowed down.

"It's a pity you don't really love me, Polly Johnston," he remarked, glancing at her, "for it seems to me we ought to cling together for protection. We are being cold-shouldered to a degree."

"Don't be silly, as well as disrespectful. Both Claude and Mary adore you. I am the odd number."

"Are you so sure about Mary adoring me?" he asked her.

Polly leaned toward him curiously. "Aren't you?" she asked.

Ned shook his head. He turned a face toward his prospective mother-in-law that was too honestly pained and puzzled to smile at or doubt.

"I'm in a frightful predicament, Polly. I'm mad about your daughter, and she—well, she's just engaged to me."

Polly Johnston so far forgot herself as to whistle softly.

"How long has this been going on?"

"Since the beginning. I took her then on any terms she was willing to make. Now, it hurts."

"Why did she engage herself at all?" Polly demanded, but more as though she was thinking aloud than asking a question, and a fairly unflattering question.

Ned did not answer. Polly glanced at him. Something in his face set her thinking. Presently she looked up and said, with the utmost sincerity, "If I understand you correctly, Ned, it's a pity."

"Yes, isn't it. You see, Polly, how your youthful mistake involves others."

"It wasn't entirely a mistake. Look at Mary."

"Have you said that to Claude?"

"No," admitted Polly. "You and Mary and Claude are all so clever, I thought I'd leave you to discover the fact yourselves."

Ned slowed down the machine and stopped it in a secluded spot on a deserted road.

"I just barely remember my own mother," he told Polly distantly, "and I think she must have had a rotten time with my father. But I don't believe she would act as you are acting toward Mary. I have a sneaking idea she would have stood for my marble-hearted father rather than have made it hard for me."

Polly Johnston burst into tears.

Ned stared, astonished, and then looked frightened. This was not in the least what he had expected. He put his arm about Polly, and she put her head on his shoulder and cried heartily. Ned patted her at intervals, a little distractedly.

"If this is doing you good, it's all right, but it's rather hard on me."

"I know it, Ned," Polly sniffed. "I'm finishing up as fast as I can and it has done me good."

"In that case," Ned was gallantry itself, "don't mind me."

Presently Polly dried her eyes, lifted her head and looked into Ned's kind eyes.

"Then you think," she said, as though continuing a conversation, "that it's because Mary is uncertain about what's to become of me that she can't decide about her own life, and if I made some definite plan for my own future, not too far removed from Peace Valley, Mary would be able to take her own happiness, and yours, into consideration."

"Any little compromise on your part would be acceptable. Say you settled down for a while in the White house so that Mary could see with her own eyes that you were not pining, and Claude could call upon you discreetly once in so often. It's your utterly detached attitude that's getting on Mary's nerves."

Then he gave her a quick, frank look as though reading her thoughts and said: "Always remembering, dear Polly, that I'm deeply interested."

Polly took out her vanity case and made the necessary repairs.

Ned watched her. "You look lovely," he volunteered. "Nobody'd know you'd been crying."

Polly turned a determined face toward him. "Before we turn back, Ned, do you think you could bring yourself to call me 'mother'?"

Ned's hand slipped from the wheel. His arms went round her.

"I'd love to—Mother."

Polly sighed. "Do you think I'm utterly selfish about Mary?"

Ned did not remove his arms. He shook his head. "No, it's just—well in the ordinary course of events. If you'd stuck to your job of being Claude's wife there might have been four or five other upstanding little Dabbses, and you wouldn't be so concentrated on Mary, to the exclusion of everything else."

"Take your arms away. You are rather nasty to me, Ned."

"You wanted the truth. Have a cigarette and forget it."

Polly accepted the cigarette.

Georgians Proud of Record of Augusta

Augusta, one of Georgia's health resort cities, founded nearly 200 years ago by James Oglethorpe, the philanthropist, was named by him for the then princess of Wales. While the city is known in the North and East chiefly as a health resort and for its splendid golf links, Georgians cherish its historical associations. It was from Charleston, S. C., to Hamburg, across the river from Augusta, that the first American-built locomotive, the "Best Friend," was operated 96 years ago, and in Augusta lived William Longstreet, who received a steamboat patent from his state in 1788, but was not able to operate his invention successfully until 20 years later, a year after Fulton's Clermont was navigating the Hudson. Augusta and Savannah each claims it was on a farm in its environs that Eli Whitney devised and set up the first cotton gin. Fifteen miles from Augusta is Silver Bluff, where Hernando de Soto camped in 1540, and Spanish chroniclers relate that it was with difficulty he induced his followers to leave the "pleasantest place" on American shores.—Ralph A. Graves, in the National Geographic Magazine.

Lesson for August 7

DAVID SPARES SAUL

LESSON TEXT—I Sam., chap. 26.

GOLDEN TEXT—Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.

PRIMARY TOPIC—David's Kindness to His Enemy.

JUNIOR TOPIC—David Shows Mercy.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Treat Those Who Wrong Us.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Overcoming Evil With Good.

I. Saul in Pursuit of David (vv. 1-3).

Ever since David took his departure from Jonathan (ch. 20), when that crowning act of friendship was shown, Saul had been hunting him as a wild animal. He now pursues him with 3,000 chosen men. David flees from place to place and is in hiding as an outlaw. Sometimes he is in the enemy's country doing disreputable things. This is the period of his schooling, which fitted him to be the future eminent king. It was a bitter period in his life, but God sent him to this school and adapted the instruction to his needs. David could never have been the broad man that he was had he not been prepared in this crucible of bitter experience. He learned many lessons, among which may be mentioned:

1. His own weakness. It was necessary that he be humbled under the sense of his infirmities. Before any one is fit to be raised to a position of prominence he must be made to know his limitations and weaknesses. Unless a man has learned this lesson, sudden elevation to power will utterly ruin him.

2. His dependence upon God. David's many miraculous escapes caused him to realise that the Lord had redeemed him out of his adversity.

3. He learned the country and people over which he was to rule. By knowing the grievous afflictions which Saul had heaped upon the people, he could sympathize and remove them.

4. He learned the magnanimity of self-control. This a man must know before he can be a true king. He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city (Prov. 16:32).

II. Saul in David's Hands (vv. 4-20).

1. David sends out spies (v. 4). This he did to find out whether Saul was come in very deed.

2. David in Saul's camp (vv. 5-11). He took with him Abishai and went in the night to where Saul was sleeping. Abishai asked to be allowed to kill Saul, but David forbade him because Saul was the Lord's annointed.

3. David takes Saul's spear and cruse of water (vv. 12, 13). Once before at Engedi (chap. 24) David spared Saul's life. Now again he was at his mercy. This David did that he might show tangible evidence to the king that he had no evil intent.

4. David taunts Abner, the king's bodyguard (vv. 14-16). He calls to Abner and taunts him for his listlessness—his failure to watch over the Lord's annointed, the evidence of which is the cruse and spear in his hands.

5. David reasons with Saul (vv. 17-20). David reasoned with Saul, showing that he had nothing but good intentions toward the king. He asked that he would show what wrong he had done, or what evil intent was in his heart. If the Lord was directing Saul he was willing to appease His wrath with an offering. If Saul was only hunting him because wicked men were urging him, a curse should be pronounced upon them. David is very humble and begs Saul to relent, for surely if he had any wicked purpose he would not have saved his life twice when the Lord had placed Saul wholly at his mercy. David recognized the fact that the Lord had delivered Saul into his hands not to kill, but to save. He did not kill, neither did he allow his servants to kill.

III. Saul's Confession (vv. 21-25).

1. He confessed that he had sinned. The sad feature about his confession is that it lacked conviction, for he went right on sinning.

2. He confessed that he had played the fool and erred exceedingly. We see about us daily many using such expressions, but still they go on repeating their sins. David shows his magnanimity of spirit, however, in delivering the cruse and spear to Saul's servant. He knew that Saul's confession was not genuine, so he was afraid to go near. He still appeals to Saul's kindness to him, and they part never to meet again.

Praying

"It is better to do a little with prayer and in the Spirit than to be busy with many things in your own strength."

Spiritual Love

All real spiritual love is but a portion of Christ's love which yearns in all who are united to Him.—Alford.

An Important Duty

You have not fulfilled every duty unless you have fulfilled that of being pleasant.—Charles Buxton.

Beware of Low Aim

Not failure, but low aim is crime.—Lowell

A Little Bit Humorous

WOMEN'S FIRST

They were playing in a mixed foursome and Percy Plunkett was very much off color. It annoyed him because he wanted to put up a "show" before the girl of his heart.

After a particularly bad miss he felt compelled to indulge in a mild expletive.

"Sorry, Susie," he apologised to the girl. "I didn't mean to say that. Forgive me for swearing like that before you."

"That's all right," returned the maiden sweetly, "you didn't."

SO HE WOULD KNOW

"Why do you pay such attention to what that crank tells you to do?"

"So I'll know what not to do."

The Perfect Guest

We love the guest who finds our home
A pleasant place to stay,
And yet who knows without a hint
The time to go away.

Simplified Society

"Your social activities require a great deal of time."

"Not so much as you might think," answered Miss Cayenne. "You can send out invitations in half an hour, notify the press in ten minutes and call up the caterer in thirty seconds."—Washington Star.

Preferred Risk

Agent—Do you own a car?

Prospective Insurer—Oh, I suppose you're going to stick on the premium because I'm a motorist.

Agent—On the contrary, the premium will be less. If you drive a car you are in less danger of being run over by one.

Also Water Hazards

"Golf is a very old game, isn't it dad?"

"Yes, my son."

"They played golf in the ark, didn't they, dad?"

"What are you talking about?"

"Why, they had lynx in the ark, didn't they, dad?"—Stray Stories.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS

She—Women's rights are growing stronger every day.

He—Yes, newspaper accounts of hubbies being beaten up by their wives are increasing without doubt.

Too True!

Mary had a little hen
But she was very queer;
She laid like fun when eggs were cheap
But stopped when they were dear.

Feathering a Nest

"Mrs. Brown, ma says will you lend her a dozen eggs for a hen to sit on?"

"I didn't know you had a hen."

"We haven't, but we're borrowing one to sit on your eggs, and then, ma says, we'll have poultry of our own."

Vain Scheme

Mrs. Crawford—How is it you and your husband can't agree about a budget.

Mrs. Crabshaw—He tries to put over too many Thrift weeks on me.

Making Provision

"Are you going to make any charitable bequests?" asked the lawyer.

"Yes," answered Mr. Dustin Stax. "I am going to leave incomes to my titled sons-in-law, who could not possibly get along without them."—Washington Star.

A Sure Thing

"How did your friend acquire his reputation for such great wisdom?"

"Why, there isn't a subject under the sun he can't remain silent about."

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Mrs. Annie Kwinski of 526 1st Avenue, Milwaukee, Wis., writes that she became so weak and run-down that she was not able to do her housework. She saw the name Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the paper and said to her husband, "I will try that medicine and see if it will help me." She says she took six bottles and is feeling much better.

Mrs. Mattie Adams, who lives in Downing Street, Brewton, Ala., writes as follows: "A friend recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and since taking it I feel like a different woman."

With her children grown up, the middle-aged woman finds time to do the things she never had time to do before—read the new books, see the new plays, enjoy her grand-children, take an active part in church and civic affairs. Far from being pushed aside by the younger set, she finds a full, rich life of her own. That is, if her health is good.

Thousands of women past fifty, say they owe their vigor and health to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and are recommending it to their friends and neighbors.

Minnow Just Had to Do That Little Stunt

Dwight M. Morrow, the New York banker, had been talking to a Washington correspondent about the difficulties of the Mexican situation.

"And when these difficulties seem insurmountable," Mr. Morrow ended, "I think of the minnow story, and then I roll up my sleeves a little higher and pitch in again.

"Uncle Wiggledy, you know, was telling his small nephew a bedtime story about a minnow. This minnow now was enjoying life peacefully when one day a great big trout suddenly dashed at him with open mouth.

"The minnow turned like the wind, swam ashore, landed, and went leaping from rock to rock up the steep bank of the stream.

"'But, Uncle Wiggledy,' the little boy interrupted, 'how could a minnow leap from rock to rock?'

"'By George,' said Uncle Wiggledy, 'he had to!'"

Muscle Has Red Cells

The muscles of the human body, it has recently been discovered, are filled with a red coloring substance almost identical with that in the red blood cells of the blood. The amount of this red substance seems to determine largely the power of the muscle, and it disappears rapidly if the muscle is paralyzed, thus showing the importance of exercising in keeping the muscles in trim.

"BECAUSE I TELL YOU TO"

Ethel Peterson

He was about four, I should judge, and had come down-town with his mother on the street car As they got off, he spied one of those machines that hold ball gum, wrapped in black, red and yellow. You depósit a cent, push a rod and —lo and behold!—as if by magic a ball of gum drops out into your hand. Can't you see how fascinating it might be to a child?

The little chap rushed toward it, crying, "Mamma, please give me a penny; I want some gum."

"No!" returned Mother, walking right along briskly.

Perforce her son had to follow, but tearfully he persisted, "Mamma, can't I have just one?"

To which his mother replied brusquely, "I said, 'No'!" and started across the street, with the boy wailing lustily beside her.

Well, maybe Mother didn't have a penny, or possibly she didn't approve of the gum habit for small boys or she might have been in a great hurry to accomplish her shopping and get back again. But just think back to the days when you were a child—what would such a short, brusque denial as, "I said, 'No'!" have done to your emotions? Wouldn't you have felt injured and rebellious? Even now, with an adult consciousness, how do you react when some one makes a short, dogmatic statement, without proof, in refutation of your opinion? It doesn't "set well," does it?

My mother invariably when I pressed her as to an adequate reason for her insistence on my doing something I did not want to do said, "Because I tell you to." For her that ended the matter, and many a scolding I received because I sulked afterwards. But to my childish mind it did not seem a sufficient reason for having to do something that I disliked. Now, I would apply the word "arbitrary" to such a statement, and though my vocabulary did not then contain that word, my thought was the same.

I noticed another arbitrary mother on a street car the other day. She ordered her daughter to come and sit by her. The child was sitting quietly right across the aisle, looking out of the window, and the car had few people in it. The child evidently enjoyed being alone—perhaps playing that she was going shopping by herself. Her brow clouded, and she asked, "Why, Mother?" I too, wondered, and then I heard, "Because I tell you to."

It seemed to me, privately, the only reason the mother could give —she was merely showing her authority in public. The little girl obeyed reluctantly, all her pleasure gone. Tears filled her brown eyes, and she cried softly until her mother threatened to punish her when they got home if she didn't "straighten up."

My sympathy was entirely with the child. None of us like to be ordered premptorily to do things, and the stronger our personalities, the less we can endure it. Why not then, be reasonable with the children? Don't deprive them of innocent pleasures for no real reason, and if you have a reason that the child has not appreciated, why not try to explain so that he will understand?

Children are becomng increasingly restive under any restraint, and the more rebellion they store up in their souls while they are little, the sooner they will break away from discipline in adolescent days. But even the tiny ones are surprisingly logical, and while they resent unfairness and arbitrariness, they appreciate justice and fairness quite as much.

LINDBERGH
DID NOT WISH

Young men the world over have, with mingled feelings, read of the achievement of the youthful Charles Lindbergh. Admiration and pride in the glory of his feat has been most generously given by all—still what young man is there who has not "wished" that the opportunity had been his—and that he could have "zoomed" through to such everlasting glory?

The now "Colonel Lindbergh" MADE his opportunity. An unknown air-mail pilot, he SAVED part of his earnings. When the hour arrived he had $2,000 saved to offer on the altar of sincerity—and obtain the support of young business men of St. Louis. He was the largest individual contributor to the fund which made the flight possible.

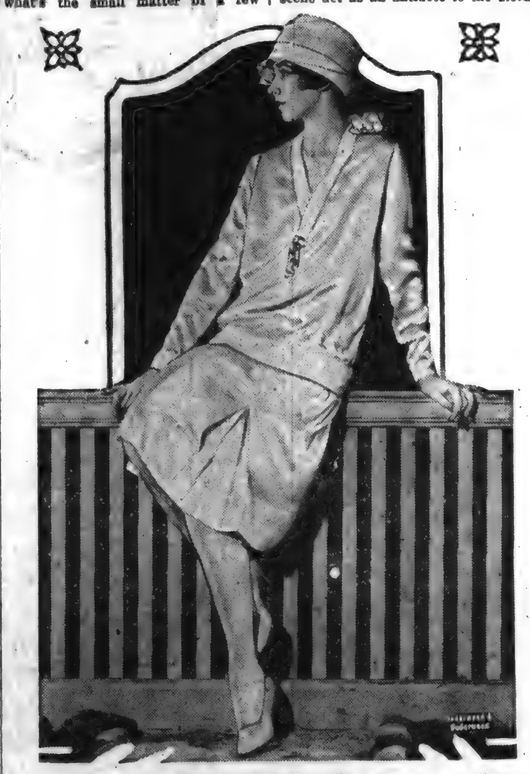
PROPER COSTUMING FOR SPORTS AND DAYS WHEN THE SKY LEAKS

SO YOU are "not going to buy any more clothes until fall?" One look at the picture of this white satin sports frock and how quickly that resolve is apt to weaken!

It simply is not within the power or inclination of modern woman to resist anything so fascinating as this adorable sports-wear model. Anyway what's the small matter of a few yards of white satin, plus a few hours of sewing, compared to the joy and satisfaction of owning such a tricky two-piece as this.



White Satin Two-Piece Frock.

Perhaps you do not feel the urge to do your own sewing or to hire a seamstress these midsummer days. That need not stand in the way of acquiring a costume like the one in the illustration, or similar, for the sports-wear departments everywhere are making a specialty of white satin apparel, now that there is such a call for it.

The vogue for white satin sports-wear fits in so snugly with the tide of summer style doings—for all the fashionable world is wearing white these days. It is a case of white from crown to toe if one would be "tres chic." One's coat is either white cloth, or knit or of crepe or satin to match the white frock underneath. One's shoes of white suede or glace kid, one's handbag also—those of baku straw are charming and they can be scrubbed to look as immaculate as you please. White millinery? Of course! Maybe white felt, or white crochet visca, or a big floppy white crin transparent of brim.

As to popular white fabrics for the frock — white wash satin—there's nothing finer for sports wear unless it be tubable white georgette in heavy weave. If for formal evening wear then choose white crepe satin, or filmy white chiffon or tulle.

Yes, the shoulder flower, on the blouse in the picture is of white satin, too, as it should be, considering that the mode is so enthusiastic over corsage florals made of the identical material as that used for the frock. Some folks, on the other hand, prefer one of the handsome white kid gardenias which are now so popular.

"Prepare for a rainy day"—just what Dame Fashion is doing! For proof of it, behold the array of smart waterproof apparel which appears as if by magic, at the coming of every summer shower. The vivid notes of color which these gay ensembles of coat and hat and umbrella add to the scene act as an antidote to the gloom of mist and lowering clouds and downpour of rain.

No wardrobe is complete these days without its quota of stylish rainy-day apparel and what stunning equipment the mode is turning out to protect from the rain. One of the very latest summer items is the rainbow cape. This is a long modified circular silhouette of gossamer weight and in dainty coloring which looks as if it had caught the tones and tints of the rainbow on its blue-of-the-sky background.

The striking rain ensemble in the picture is of handsome ombre plaid rubberized crepe de chine—something very new and distinctive brought out this season, which is proving popular.

It is fashionable to wear a hat to match the coat. The model which tops the coat in this illustration has a ripple brim and is warranted to add a touch of color beauty to even the most dismal of rainy-day scenes.

Attractive three-piece sets for rainy weather include a coat and hat plus an umbrella. These are not necessarily expensive, for they are styled, some of them, very simply, to meet a thoroughly practical side of the question. Perhaps the greatest attempt toward fancifulness is in the umbrella handle, some of them being amusingly grotesque and highly colorful.

For the Rainy Day.

Lovely for summer are light-weight rubberized satin coats, to be had in fascinating pastel tints. Snakeskin patterned waterproofs declare a last word trend.

In these rainy weather ensembles children are also well provided for. Cunning juvenile sets are available which feature hat, coat and tiny umbrella.

If you are planning to trade-in your present car for a new car, remember these facts:

1 When you trade-in your used car for a new car, you are after all making a purchase, not a sale. You are simply applying your present car as a credit toward the purchase price of the new car.

2 Your used car has only one fundamental basis of value; i. e., what the dealer who accepts it in trade can get for it in the used car market.

3 Your used car has seemingly different values because competitive dealers are bidding to sell you a new car.

4 The largest allowance is not necessarily the best deal for you. Sometimes it is; sometimes it is not.

5 An excessive allowance may mean that you are paying an excessive price for the new car in comparison with its real value.

6 First judge the merits of the new car in comparison with its price, including all delivery and finance charges. Then weigh any difference in allowance offered on your used car.

FRUIT AND FRUIT DRINKS FOR PICNICS

Watermelon Is a Good Fruit for a Picnic.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

More fruit and less pastry for picnics this summer, and there will be fewer chances of bad after-effects for the children. A great many fruits come in "individual packages," like oranges, apples, bananas, peaches, plums and pears. These are easy to transport from home and for the most part easy to eat from the hand. The children in the picture, which was taken by the United States Department of Agriculture, are being regaled with watermelon, cut up in convenient-sized pieces for handling in this fashion. A watermelon helps to quench thirst instead of causing it, as cake and candy do, and the flavor is popular and refreshing. The watermelon should be thoroughly chilled before the party starts and kept cold until wanted by being well wrapped up in paper or burlap. Various berries in season can be used at picnics, too, if paper plates are provided. They should be picked over and washed at home.

Fresh fruit juice is an excellent means of quenching thirst, and also adds to the day's supply of important food elements. Vitamine C in particular, so necessary to the growth and development of children, is abundant in orange and lemon juice, and present in appreciable amounts in fresh raspberry, grape and other juices that can be prepared at home and carried in bottles or glass jars. Lemon juice can be mixed with the necessary sugar and diluted at the place where the picnic is held if the water supply is known to be safe. Otherwise all water and beverages should be carried from home.

MILK OR ORANGE JUICE FOR CHILD

Glass of Fruit Juice Is Excellent for Youngsters.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A rapidly growing child who is very active may well have food in the middle of the forenoon and afternoon if it does not spoil the appetite for other meals, according to the United States Department of Agriculture. But the patronage of the ice cream cone vendor and the everlasting munching of candy, half-ripe bananas, and pickles form vicious habits to which American children are particularly addicted.

Fruit Juice Provides Part of Vitamine and Mineral Content Needed.

The nickels given to children for concentrated sweets might better be thrown away. They ruin appetite, digestion, disposition and good teeth.

That child is fortunate who has been brought up to enjoy without question a glass of milk and a simple bread-and-butter sandwich, while the neighbor's children are eating all-day suckers. An apple, an orange, or other fruit in season, or a glass of cool fruit juice is especially desirable because it provides a part of the vitamine and mineral content of the diet needed for proper growth and good health. At the same time it does not take the edge off the appetite in the way that more concentrated foods do. For the child who needs a more substantial lunch, a chopped raisin sandwich or glass of dilute cocoa, chilled, may be a pleasing surprise.

Selection of Foods and Meal Plans for Family

Send to the United States Department of Agriculture for bulletins on food selection and meal planning. Get the whole family interested in the relation of food to health and what constitutes a well-balanced diet. The taste of food is no guide to its value in diet, but a pleasing flavor aids in getting the properly selected day's foods eaten by everybody. Have plenty of each kind of food, well seasoned and carefully cooked, but not too many kinds. Point out that on succeeding days there will be new combinations of meat, vegetable, fruit, dessert, and so on, so that eventually each preference will be catered to in turn.

PEARS EASIEST FRUIT TO CAN

Flavor Is Delicate and Are Good for Salads.

Pears are one of the best and easiest of fruits to can at home. Their flavor is so delicate that they are good seasoned with ginger or other spices, or canned plain they never come amiss for salads or for fruit cup combined with other canned or fresh fruits. If you have many pears, put them up in various ways. The general method of canning is the same for all.

Pare, core and quarter or halve the pears, and then cook them from 4 to 8 minutes in boiling medium sirup, made by using 1 part of sugar to 2 parts of water. The size of the fruit will determine the length of time they should be cooked. This cooking makes the hard varieties of pears pack better and enables one to pack the pears hot into the containers. They are then filled with boiling sirup. Process containers of all sizes in the water-bath canner for 20 minutes.

The water-bath method of canning is recommended by the United States Department of Agriculture for fruits and tomatoes. You may use a wash-boiler or any vessel with a tight-fitting cover that is deep enough to hold the jars completely immersed in water, standing on a rack or false bottom. The pressure canner at 212 degrees Fahrenheit may also be used for pears.

Adjust rubbers, tops, and springs on the jars, or seal tin cans and place in the canner. Remove from the boiling water at the end of the time, seal glass jars air tight, invert, and place out of drafts. Plunge tin cans in cold water to cool quickly.

CREAM PIE HAS UNUSUAL FLAVOR

Popular Dessert Is Made of Very Simple Ingredients.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Here is a dessert that has all the merits of festive appearance and unusual flavor, and the additional virtue of reflecting very favorably on the housewife's culinary skill. Butterscotch cream pie is one of those certain-to-be popular desserts that can be made of simple materials usually on the pantry shelf.

The recipe below is from the United States Department of Agriculture. The chief points about making it successfully are to cook the flour and milk thoroughly before adding the sweetening and to be careful that the melted butter and brown sugar become just waxy, not caramelized. If you like individual tarts for a "dress-up" dinner use the filling in that way instead of making a whole pie. The filling is also good served as a pudding with cream, plain or whipped.

Blend the flour and salt with the cold milk, add to the hot milk and cook in the double boiler for 15 minutes. Meantime cook the brown sugar and butter until waxy, and add to the mixture in the double boiler. Then gradually stir in the beaten egg yolks, and cook for a few minutes, remove from fire and add the vanilla.

Place this mixture in a baked pastry shell and when slightly set cover with a meringue made by adding one tablespoonful of sugar to each beaten egg white, and a little salt and vanilla. Place in a slow oven until meringue is a golden brown.

Bringing up Children

"MY sisters, my sister-in-law and myself all have families, and for years we have all given our children Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. We have recommended it hundreds of times and think it just wonderful, not only to bring up children but for ourselves. At the slightest sign of stomach trouble, colds, constipation and when out of sorts, a dose or two is all they need. Truly, it is a family medicine and the stitch in time that saves nine." (Name and address sent on request.)

Constipation, Colds, Coughs, Fevers and Other Perils of Childhood

One dose and mother's anxiety is lifted. The sickest stomach craves the taste of Syrup Pepsin. From infancy to old age the result is certain. Droopy, listless, feverish children respond as if to magic. Headache, stomachache, biliousness, coated tongue, constipation—these are the daily perils for which a host of mothers say Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the safeguard. Sold and recommended by all druggists.

Pecans

The bulk of the commercial production of pecans is at present in Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, Mississippi, Georgia and Florida. But the tree is native to river bottoms from Indiana and Iowa southwest into Mexico. Southeastern states and California have taken up pecan growing to some extent, but there has been little commercial success with these trees north of latitude 40 degrees.

The tree attains a height of 75 to 170 feet. The crop is harvested when the great majority of the nut husks have opened. As a rule it is disposed of before Thanksgiving.

A New Way to Make Jellies

Without Staining Fingers—Without Long Hours of Boiling—Without Depending Upon Berries or Fruit Being in Season.

One of the most interesting and yet one of the simplest new products in the food field is called minute jelly. It is pure fruit or berry juice already boiled down and concentrated. To this concentrated juice, fruit pectin in the right amount has been added. The pectin is that part of fruit which makes jelly "jell." It is as pure and wholesome as the fruit juice.

To make the jelly take the little bottle of concentrated juice, pour in a sauce pan, add water and sugar according to directions on the bottle and boil a few minutes. Then pour into jelly glasses and when it has become cold you have the most delicious pure fruit jelly you ever tasted.

A few bottles kept on hand, selected according to your taste for jellies, and you can make up a few glasses just as you want it. One small bottle makes two glasses of jelly. If you wish to try two bottles send us twenty-five cents and we will give you your choice of grape, mint, pineapple, orange, raspberry, strawberry or blackberry. Or four bottles—all different—for fifty cents. Address Department WU, General Packing Corp., Cranford, New Jersey.—Adv.

Duration of Soviet Rule Easily Proved

"Comrade" Kalinin is president of the soviet union. He is a peasant by origin. Like all good presidents Kalinin makes a speech occasionally. He makes a specialty of addressing peasant audiences. Not long ago he made a speech at a farmer's reunion not so far from Nignix. The president was drawing a grandiloquent picture of life under the soviet regime. At the outset he told his peasant-listeners that Russia was the first country to throw off the yoke. Suddenly he was interrupted. Interruptions are not infrequent in peasant districts. "We have land and freedom," cried one farmer, "but under the czar some of us had three pairs of pants and now we have only one." "Comrades," replied the comrade-president, "the negroes of Africa have no pants at all." "How is that?" came back the voice from the audience. "You told us we were the first to be sovietized, but if those people in Africa have no pants at all, they must have had soviet rule for at least 20 years."—Pierre Van Paassen, in the Atlanta Constitution.

Ladies First

They were playing in a mixed foursome and Percy was very much off color. It annoyed him because he wanted to put up a "show" before the girl of his heart.

After a particularly bad miss he felt compelled to indulge in a mild expletive.

"Sorry, Susie," he apologized to the girl. "I didn't mean to say that. Forgive me for swearing like that before you."

"That's all right," returned the maiden sweetly, "you didn't."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

I. U. SUMMER SCHOOL CLOSES AUGUST 5

Fourteen DeKalb county students have been enrolled in the 38th annual summer session of Indiana University which closes Friday, August 5. The total enrollment was 1829.

Fifteen hundred and ten students were enrolled in the summer session at Bloomington; 94 students at the school of medicine, 141 at the nurses' training school, 24 students in laboratory work at the school of dentistry, Indianapolis; and approximately 60 students at the Winona Lake biological station.

Following the close of the regular summer term Friday a three weeks' session will be conducted. This session will consist of intensive work especially designed for teachers and graduate students. The law courses will not end until August 23, while the work of the biological station will be finished August 19.

Practically all departments have been open this summer and a majority of the department heads of the University have been here to carry on the work of the summer session. Dr. H. L. Smith, dean of the I. U. school of education, has served as director of the summer session since 1920.

DeKalb county students attending I. U. summer session are as follows:

Auburn: Marie Bauer.

Butler: Ruby Shultz, Marguerite Kosht (nurses' training school, Indianapolis.)

Garrett: Ruth Gehrum, Mabel Hicklin, Harlan Moore, Aubrey Stanley, Zeller Williams, Mildred Painter (nurses' training school, Indianapolis,) Mary Elizabeth Stoner (biological station, Winona Lake, Indiana.)

Hamilton: Glenn McClellan.

Spencerville: Florence Berry.

Waterloo: Georgia Isabel (nurses' training school, Indianapolis,) Emerson Walker (biological station, Winona Lake, Indiana.

BIG SHORTAGE IN GRAIN CROPS, SILOS LIFE SAVERS OF CROPS

A marked shortage in the grain crops fed to farm animals is shown in a survey on the feed situation just completed. This coming year, because of the grain prices likely to prevail, will call for the use of more intelligent feeding practices than are ordinarily used during average crop years. During the next twelve months he who feeds best will profit most. The outlook for corn is the worst feature in this situation. The acerage has been cut materially. Most of the planting was from two to four weeks late and the weather has tended to retard its growth. The crop had a poorer start than in 1924, when only 2,309,000,000 bushels were produced. The best that can be expected this year is 2,200,000,000 bushels. That would be the smallest crop since 1901. Oats and barley are five to seven percent under the ten year average, but about as good as last year. Cottonseed probably will be under last year's figure. Hay and pasture crops, however, are better.

In its summary of the feed crop situation of the country we point to the following salient features:

1. Grain crops promise to be smaller especially corn.

2. Carryovers of grains are light.

3. The small cottonseed crop, higher prices for feed grains and stronger demand from mixed feed manufacturers probably will result in higher prices for protein feeds than last year.

4. Supplies of hay and other rough feeds may be ample.

5. The decline of 161,627,000 head of cattle and 500,000 horses on farms compared with a year ago will be counterbalanced by the increase of 481,000 hogs and 2,045,000 sheep. As hogs are great corn consumers, the shortage of this crop will be further accentuated.

The corn crop supplies as much sustenance for livestock as all the other harvested crops combined. In the past five years production has averaged 2,767,000,000 bushels. The crop this year may fall 500,000,000 to 600,000,000 short of the average. This means a decrease of 15,000,000 to 17,000,000 tons of concentrates compared with the consumption of all concentrates by livestock of close to 100,000,000 tons annually.

There are other factors which tend to put the price of feed grain higher in the next twelve months than they have been in the past year. Surveys show that stocks of old corn on farms are much smaller than last year, especially in the usual surplus states. The visible supply which reached record proportions in the winter have been greatly reduced. The new crop situation is the worst in the sections which sell most of the corn entering commerce.

Fortunately for the dairy farmers, there should be enough corn in most sections to fill the silos, and this is the most effective utilization of the crop and should be used to capacity.

One way to overcome the shortage of feed supplies, is to dispose of the "star boarders," the non-producing animals on the farm.

Dairymen and stock growers who use better feeding methods within the next twelve months may have no worry about net profits, but the farmers who feed just any old way will likely find the higher feed costs cutting down their profits over a year ago.

A man pleases himself when he can and a woman when she must.

SIMPLY COULDN'T PLEASE HER HUSBAND

All of her efforts to please her husband proved in vain, Pearl Cochran says in a complaint for a divorce against Charles A. Cochran that has been filed in the DeKalb circuit court.

The divorce court has been resorted to after a married life of thirty years, the couple having wed in 1897 and separating last month. They have a daughter, Arietta, who is twenty-six years of age. The plaintiff is operating a restaurant in St. Joe.

Mrs. Cochran alleges that her husband nagged and scolded her for weeks at a time and that nothing she did pleased him. His mistreatment of her, she avers, has caused her to be broken in mind and spirit and life with him became unbearable and intolerable. Her attorney is Howard S. Grimm. —Star.

NEW AND TESTED RECIPES FOR LADIES OF THE NEWS

BAKED BACON

Of all methods of cooking bacon, baking probably gives the most delicate and delicious flavor. Place a baking rack in a baking pan, lay slices of bacon on the rack, and cook it gently to the preferred degrees of crispness. The fat running into the baking pan will be perfectly clear and can be used for many cooking purposes while the bacon itself will be exceptionally digestible due to the fact that it has not lain in the fat at all while cooking.

MOVES TO FORT WAYNE

Frank W. Rhoades and family are now residents of Fort Wayne, moving Tuesday from their farm home north of Spencerville. Miss Doris has entered the International Business College for a nine months course in typewriting and short hand, and as Mr. Rhoades works in Fort Wayne, moving was the logical thing. Mr. and Mrs. Florence Buchanan will join them later to spend the winter. They are located at 3530 Piqua Ave.

Alvin J. Smith, superintendent of high school with Miss Ida Reed, Spencerville and Miss Ruth Miller of Indianapolis. C. L. Whitacre Muncie, Junior high teacher and the grades will be in charge of Miss Bina Zimmerman, 5-6 year; Miss Minnie Walker, 3-4 years and Miss Garnet Beams, primary.

TO HAVE FUNERAL HOME

The report of the sale by Merritt Sechler, administrator of the estate of the late Addie Filley, of lot No. 6 in block No 1 in the town plat of St. Joe to Elza R. and Mayola Kinsey for $800 has been filed in the DeKalb circuit court.

As soon as possession is obtainable Mr. Kinsey will remodel the property, so as to be made into a modern funeral home.

DOING SOME BUILDING

The Nathan Lumber company reports a number of repair and new jobs in the community as follows:—Vince Squires of Jackson township is repairing granary; W. H. Farner, Jackson is building a new garage and Abner Trostel of east of town also built a new garage. Ed Howey of north of town is repairing his house. Bert Jackson, who is the local manager, reports many new prospects for building in the near future.

HOME COMING COMMITTEES ARE SELECTED

Home-Coming chairman, E. R. Kinsey, has been extremely busy for some time appointing committees and completing arrangements for the Annual Home-Coming, held at St. Joe, Saturday, September 3rd.

The following heads of committees have been selected:

Finance—Ed Miser.

"Miss South Bend" is Now "Miss Indiana"

Through the courtesy of the Gary, (Ind.,) Post-Tribune, we are permited to reproduce a number of its articles under date of July 29-30-31, relative to the selection of "Miss Indiana," and of which we were most particularly interested as being the winner, was that of Miss Hilda Koch, who was selected as "Miss South Bend." The accounts are as follows:—

"Miss Hilda Koch ("Miss South Bend") who won the "Miss Indiana" title in Gay-Mill ballroom last night where she competed with fifteen other beauties for the honor of representing the Hoosier state in the Atlantic City pageant and National beauty tournament September 6 to 10. "Miss Indiana" is a brunette, 19 years of age, and is five feet five inches in height."

Miss Hilda Koch ("Miss South Bend,") 19 years of age, bobbed and a brunette, won the right to represent the Hoosier state in the Atlantic City pageant and National Beauty tournament, September 6 to 10, in the Indiana staee contest sponsored by the Gary Post-Tribune in Gay-Mill ballroom Sunday night where she was chosen as "Miss Indiana."

"Miss Indiana" is an employe of the Industrial Acceptance Corporation, a subsidiary of the Studebaker Automobile company, in South Bend. The winner of the Indiana state contest is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Koch of St. Joe, Indiana.

In her first interview immediately following her selection as "Miss Indiana," the winner said that first of all she wanted to thank J. R. Snyder, publisher of The Post-Tribune, whose name she forgot to mention in the little speech she made when she was introduced as "Miss Indiana," and that she also wished to thank Mayor Floyd E. Williams and all the others who had been so kind to her during the contest.

"Miss Indiana" said the honor conferred upon her "was the most wonderful thing that had ever happened to me," and that she was happy and proud to be chosen as "Miss Indiana." The Indiana candidate for the "Miss America" title is a typical American girl.

"Miss Indiana" scored 440 points, according to the official verdict of the judges. Miss Harriet Rouse ("Miss Muncie,") who was chosen as the alternate scored 366 points. Miss Hazel Grant ("Miss Hammond") placed third with 341 points.

The selection of "Miss Indiana" closed the three-day festivities in honor of the visiting state beauties. Several thousand people were present at Gay-Mill ballroom last night to witness the grand finals in the state contest. Coronation of "Miss Gary" took place Saturday night.

"Miss Indiana" rested at the Lake Hotel until late this afternoon when she returned to her home in South Bend. Other state contestants departed for their homes during the day.

Fifteen of the most beautiful daughters of Indiana arrived in Gary on board the Indiana Beauty Special of the South Shore liner at 1:30 today and were met at the station by Mayor Floyd E. Williams, William P. Gleason, executive chairman, Capt. J. R. Smith chairman of the entertainment committee, Frank Kickles of the Kickles Auto Sales company, and other officials.

The state beauties who will compete in the "Miss Indiana" contest and who will be the guests of the city during the contest are: Miss Helen Stein ("Miss Indianapolis"); Miss Ruth MacDonald ("Miss Anderson"); Miss Hazel Grant ("Miss Hammond"); Miss Marietta Albright (" Miss Newcastle"); Miss Harriet Rouse ("Miss Muncie"); Miss Loretta Donnelly ("Miss Kokomo"); Miss Evelyn Figel ("Miss Ft. Wayne"); Miss Elma Oliphant ("Miss Vincennes"); Miss Helen Edwards ("Miss Logansport'); Miss Althea Bennett ("Miss Terre Haute"); Miss Mary Wilson ("Miss Michigan City"); Miss Hilda Koch ("Miss South Bend"); Miss Irene McKenzie ("Miss Lebanon"); Miss Lucille Pance ("Miss Lafayette") and Miss Eva Green who will represent Gary in the state contest.

Miss Anna May Owens who was selected as "Miss Gary" will act as hostess to the state beauties during their sojourn in Gary. She is being assisted by Miss Lee Tucker, Miss Josephine Rukas, Miss Betty Dick, Miss Elsie Nelson and Miss Grace Mentzer.

On Tour Over City

Following the official greeting at the station the beauties entered the beautiful LaSalle cars placed at their disposal during their stay here and paraded throughout the city and were escorted to the Lake hotel which is the official headquarters during the contest.

Fire Chief Frank Parkey and Captain J. R. Smith were the official marshals of the parade. Members of the fire and police departments selected because of their ability as expert drivers acted as chauffers for the state contestants.

Late this afternoon the state contestants were to moor to the home of H. B. Snyder at Dune Acres where they were to be entertained at a beach party and dinner.

The state beauties will be guests of honor at the Indiana Beauty Ball which will be held at Gay-Mill ballroom tonight where Mayor Williams will extend official welcome. The contestants in the local "Miss Gary" contest will act as chaperones for the state beauties and introductions will be arranged for all those desiring to meet Gary's guests or dance with them.

Plan Shopping Tour

On Saturday morning between 10 and 12 o'clock the beauties will visit the leading stores of the city. This will be the only time they will appear in public during their visit in Gary. Following the tour of the stores they will be entertained at luncheon at the Gary Commercial club.

A theater party at Gary's million dollar Palace theater will be the feature on Saturday afternoon. The beauties will attend the afternoon performance as guests of V. U. Young. Following the performance at the Palace the city's fair guests will motor to the Gary Country club for dinner.

Cars For Their Use

Jack Erhardt of the Erhardt Sign company is chairman of the automobile committee and will make the assignment of the various cars to the state contestants, their escorts and chaperones. Each car will have the visiting beauty, her chaperone and official escort. No others will be permitted in the cars in the parade.

The entire arrangement for the entertainment for the beaties is under the persenal direction of Captain J. R. Smith who is acting in the official capacity of representing Mayor Williams.

Each car will bear the name of the city which the contestant represents and will be at her personal disposal during her entire stay in Gary.

They Get City Keys

Following the dinner at Mr. Snyder's home the beauties will attend the Indiana Beauty Ball at Gay-Mill. Mayor Williams officially will present each contestant in the state contest with a key to the city and offer the official welcome of the city of Gary. A portion of the ballroom will be set aside for the contestants and their escorts personally will introduce the beauties to all of the guests who desire to become acquainted or dance with the young ladies.

During the evening an elaborate program of entertainment has been arranged with dancing as the main feature of the evening, continuing from 8 o'clock until the early morning hours.

Thomas J. Johnson announced today that more than 1,000 special seats have been furnished through the courtesy of Bob Marshall of Marshall and Good and the Miller school for the accomodation of guests. A special stage has been erected in the center of the ballroom where the contest will be held.

Rev. J. F. McKnight is at Marion Camp Grounds this week attending the annual conference of the M. P. Church. Wm. Bleeks is the delegate from the local charge.

OPTOMETRY—ITS VALUE TO THE PUBLIC

By Ed W. Hicks, Optometrist and Optician

How may a person learn if he has not an error of vision?

The Optometrist could give him the facts regarding his eyes.

Would this information be valuable?

Yes, if an error of vision exists its correction would improve the patient's health and efficiency.

What is the greatest handicap Optometrists have to overcome?

The lack of knowledge on the part of the public as to the value of Optometry.

CHOPS ARE QUICKLY AND EASILY COOKED

Chops Must Be Carefully Cooked to Retain Their Juiciness and Tenderness.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Serve chops for dinner once in a while—especially on the days when you want something that is quickly and easily cooked at the last minute. You can choose mutton, lamb, veal, or pork chops—whichever you can get most easily, and you will have a further range of choice since veal, mutton, and lamb chops may be cut from either the ribs or the loin, and many butchers cut lamb and mutton into shoulder and leg chops, also.

Any of these chops may be either broiled or pan-broiled. They must be cooked carefully to retain their juiciness and tenderness. Select chops personally from a good grade of meat. Do not have them cut too thin or they will toughen and dry out in cooking. Chops three-fourths of an inch thick are best when cooked. Sometimes it is necessary to cut chops according to the width of the rib or loin bones, but if this results in thin chops, allow two bones to each chop.

Start Dinner at Once.

Dinner should be served the moment the chops are done, whichever way they are cooked. If you try to keep chops warm after they are done to a turn they will be overcooked or greasy. All vegetables and other dishes should be timed slightly ahead of the chops. Plates and the chop platter should be very hot. Serve currant or other tart jelly or mint jelly with lamb or mutton chops. Peas, fresh or canned, are often served with lamb chops, but there is no ironclad rule requiring this combination, and many other vegetables in season will be equally enjoyed. Tradition calls for applesauce with pork dishes, including pork chops, but a baked apple, tomato, tart jelly, or any other slightly acid food that offsets the richness of the pork may be served. Catsup or sweet pickle, or tomato or onion gravy—something with a pronounced flavor—combines well with the mild flavor of veal chops.

The chief point about any method of cooking chops is to sear the outside at once at a high temperature to prevent the juices from escaping. Then if they are to be cooked until well done, as pork chops must be, the temperature should be reduced and chops allowed to cook slowly.

To broil chops in a gas oven, put them on the rack in the pan that slides under the flame and turn them several times. Many people think that a chop broiled over live coals or a wood fire has no equal. For this a greased wire broiler is used. Pan-broiling is done in a heavy iron skillet heated hissing hot. The chops are put in, turned as soon as the under surface is seared, and seared on the other side. Then turn them often, lifting them between two forks to avoid piercing the surface and losing the meat juice. They will be well done in 10 or 12 minutes.

Prevent Drying Out.

Tender veal chops are often protected from drying out by a coating of egg and bread crumbs. They are then fried in deep or shallow fat. If veal is dry or tough it must be cooked a little differently to develop tenderness. Dip the chops in flour and cook in shallow fat until a crust is formed on both sides. Then add hot water and simmer the meat slowly until tender. A rich brown gravy containing all the goodness that cooks out of the meat is formed, and should be served with the chops, slightly thickened if necessary. Veal chops may be seasoned with lemon and worcestershire sauce before cooking, to give a more zestful flavor.

MATURITY AFFECTS QUALITY OF CORN

Toughness Increases Rapidly as Kernels Develop.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Quality in canned sweet corn is due to both factory and farm influences. The conditions in the factory which affect the quality of the canned product are generally understood, says the United States Department of Agriculture, and canning methods are fairly well standardized. Improvement in canned sweet corn is most likely to be brought about, therefore, by a better understanding of the factors on the farm which make for a better quality of the raw material delivered to the factory.

For several years C. A. Magoon and C. W. Culpepper, of the department, have been making a special study of the growing of sweet corn to determine the factors which have a bearing on its quality. From the considerable knowledge already gained it appears that one of the most important factors is the tenderness or toughness of the kernel hull. This, they find, varies to some extent with the different varieties, but is particularly affected by the degree of maturity of the corn. Toughness increases very rapidly as the kernels develop toward maturity, being most rapid during seasons of high temperature. In cool weather the increase is much less rapid. From the standpoint of toughness the period during which first quality corn can be packed is very short.

Consistency, sweetness and natural flavors are likewise of importance. When corn is too mature the desirable flavor disappears and one less desirable takes its place. Tests have shown that any of the standard varieties yield a first-class product if canned at the proper stage of maturity.

Cedar Chests Protect Clothing From Moths

Experiments conducted by the bureau of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture on the storage of clothing in chests made of the East Indian woods known as "kamfer" and "lagan," to protect it from clothes moth damage have been completed with negative results. Chests made of the heartwood of red cedar, however, killed the newly hatched or young larvae of clothes moths when tightly constructed. They could not be depended upon to kill the moths or millers, or their eggs, or the worms after they were one-half to full grown, or after they were three to four months old. Neither did the cedar chests kill all the pupae.

Watermelon Pickle Has Several Excellent Uses

A very good pickle can be made from the rinds of watermelons. When it is being made some of the pieces may be placed on waxed paper and allowed to dry out. They should be turned every day until dry enough to store. This melon peel can be used in place of citron in cakes and puddings, and may be dipped in chocolate or covered with fondant.

The bureau of home economics supplies these directions for making watermelon pickle:

Watermelon Pickle.

3 pounds watermelon	1 cupful water
Limewater made from 1 quart water and 5.6 grams, or 1 tablespoonful lime	5 cupfuls sugar
4 cupfuls vinegar	1 tablespoonful allspice
	1 tablespoonful cloves
	6 small pieces of stick cinnamon

Pare and remove all green and pink portions from watermelon rind. Put it in the desired shape or size, and cook for two and one-half hours in the limewater. Drain the watermelon and place it in fresh water to cover well, and cook for one and one-half hours or until tender. Let the watermelon stand overnight in the water. Make a sirup of the 4 cupfuls vinegar, 1 cupful water, sugar, and spices. Allow the sirup to come to the boiling point, add the drained watermelon and boil gently for two hours or until the sirup is fairly thick. Seal and store. If desired some of the pieces of watermelon may be placed on waxed paper and allowed to dry out, turning every day or two until dry enough to store.

Swiss Chard Among Most Satisfactory Vegetables

Swiss chard is one of the most satisfactory of the green-leaf vegetables available in the summer. The United States Department of Agriculture suggests several ways of preparing it:

Select fresh, crisp chard; if at all wilted, crisp by allowing it to stand in cold water for 10 to 15 minutes. Trim the leaves from the stalks, and cut the stalks into inch pieces. Cook for about 20 minutes in unsalted boiling water in an uncovered pan. Chop the leaves and add them to the stalks and continue the cooking until the stalks are tender. Drain; season with salt, a little pepper, and butter, and serve very hot.

An attractive dish can be made by cooking the stalks and leaves of chard separately, making a cream sauce for the stalks, and placing the seasoned leaves around the edge of the serving dish. Another variation is crisp bacon chopped, and served on top of the cooked chard. Or a hard-cooked egg may be sliced and used to garnish the top. Lemon juice and vinegar are liked by many persons as a seasoning for swiss chard.

Has He Good Judgment?

to

Very Thought.

First we must find a person who is poised and calm as well as analytical. So the writing must be steady, simple, firm and clear. This means poise.

When there are triangular shapes visible in the writing, such as a terminal brought back to make a t cross, then we have the man who returns to the first premise to make his deduction. This is the analytical type. His writing will also be small and frequently the terminals will turn back above the line. Words will often be connected.

T bars will be in proper place—not flying away from upright. Down strokes will have few loops. Y's will have the down stroke brought back on the right-hand side.

There will be few indications of embellishment. The man with good judgment writes and talks to the point, consequently does not waste time putting on airs.

He takes the shortest cut and thus writes the quickest and plainest way.

Writing will be on the level or slightly ascending.

Responsibility

Look at the letter m. If the middle section rises high, then you will find the writer who has some real responsibility, such as taking care of a family, invalid, mother or business. Often in my lectures I have questioned a writer who made his m this way and I found that he had been an orphan for years, thrown on his own resources.

The letter s will be closed tightly in the writing of one who has to watch out for others. There is no sign of the spendthrift in one who knows what responsibility means.

T bars of this type of writer are well placed and sometimes slant slightly upward.

Words are often connected.

As a rule their writing is not very large. It has become small through the necessity to concentrate for sure results because of the others dependent on returns of the writer. His mind has been tied down to the problem at hand and he has positively not had time to rush here and there mentally. Thus you will find orderly writing made in the quickest way.

How Is Heart Organically?

live and let live

Romantically and organically seem to be related as far as appearance goes. However, the former must rely on the latter for existence. If a heart is not organically right, there is little else that is right. Here are some of the signs of a heart that is working under difficulties. Often relief can be experienced through diet alone. When writing appears shaky, the condition is usually the outcome of hardened arteries. This puts a strain on the heart, although it itself might be normal. But it will not remain normal long if it has to work twice as hard because you have allowed deposits of calcium to settle in your joints and thus squeeze the flow of blood.

If there are breaks in certain down strokes, resembling a gnarled stick, the heart should be given attention and not put to unnecessary strain.

If pressure of writing is heavy and whole appears dirty, the heart should be considered and writer should avoid anger and dispute.

Note.—Do not make final judgment until other signs in writing are studied.

The Carillon

A "carillon" is the name given to a set of bells so hung and arranged as to be capable of being played upon either by manual action or by machinery, as a musical instrument—i. e., so as to give out a regularly composed melody in correct and unvarying time and rhythm in contradistinction to the wild and irregular music produced by the change-ringing on a peal of bells hung to swing in the more usual manner.—Washington Star.

"Let me smoke this in peace and make up my mind, before we go back."

They sat, saying nothing, Ned's thoughts busy with his own future. The woman beside him was facing the long years to come, honestly, for the first time. She knew that her position was untenable. She knew also that Claude Dabbs asked only the privilege of watching over and caring for Mary, for Ned and for herself. He would ask nothing of her, grateful if she would stay near them for Mary's sake, grateful that the children loved him.

Polly's mind leaped to its fine conclusion. Here was her opportunity. It might even be that in Claude she would find the friend and companion she had missed and longed for, since Mary had gone her own way. Did not Claude face middle age, too, but with philosophy, and brushing aside its disillusions, neither grudged youth its due nor shrank from life. Claude was alive, very much so, but of life he expected little; of himself, much. Polly wondered if she would ever grasp life as serenely and as firmly as he did, taking what it gave, grudging nothing that it withheld.

Polly threw away her cigarette. "Ready to go back, Ned?"

In the library at Claude's home, Claude and Mary were turning over plans for the new factory and the proposed public library and recreation room.

"Mother and Ned take a long time on that drive," Mary observed, finally. "Oh, Dad! do you think anything's happened?"

"Not a bit of it," Claude told her tranquilly. "They've just gone a bit further than they intended. Why, daughter, what's wrong?" Mary had clutched his arm.

"Nothing, only I get so worried nowadays. I never used to. But Ned's a little reckless, don't you think?"

"No." Claude rose to Ned's defense sturdily. "Ned's a splendid driver." Then he laughed. "Is it Ned, or your mother, who's so precious that you think the Almighty may be jealous?"

"Oh hush, Father, don't say it," Mary implored, and then laughed at herself, helplessly. "See how primitive I'm growing, like the heathen who give ugly names to their best-beloved to shield them from the wrath of the gods."

"It's queer," Claude began, more to himself than his daughter, "but the old folk were so often right. My mother used to say that love made women savage and men gentle. I wonder."

"There they are!" Mary ran to the doorway leading to the garden. She stopped astonished. "Father, something must have happened. Mother's getting out."

Claude looked over her shoulder. "Let me past, Mary. If Polly's coming into my store, I must be there to wait on her."

Mary watched him go, but stood waiting. She felt a little sad and alone. Ned came into the room from the hall behind her.

"Ned," Mary said as she turned, "has anything happened?"

"Something nice. Mother's coming in."

"Mother!" Mary echoed, her lips parted to ask a question.

"And before she gets here," Ned told her hurriedly, coming very close, "I want to give you your freedom. I think what you wanted is coming about. Mother's going to be reasonable and settle down for awhile here, and you're free to do as you like about—about that engagement of yours, Mary."

He paused, and as she remained silent, continued, slowly: "I can't go on this way. I want you to know that, and to know that I'll keep on working with Claude, no matter what happens. You see, I simply can't stick this, Mary. I'm just an ordinary able-bodied man, who wants to be married soon, and expects to be loved, not just tolerated and dodged and held off. The woman I marry will simply have to want me as much, and as near, as I want her."

Mary looked at him, her eyes on that mouth that was so like Loren Rangeley's now, so hard, so straight, so determined. She had certainly not meant to do it, but there seemed to be just one shameless thing to do. At the touch of her hand on his arm, Ned turned to her, and Mary pulled his head down and kissed him, knowing that after that she would never escape from any engagement he made. Ned held her tightly, his eager lips against her own, then hot against her pulsing throat.

Claude and Polly could be heard in the hall coming toward them. Ned put Mary on her feet, but she clung to him, still, dizzy and speechless. He put his arm about her.

"Oh Mary," he whispered. "How could you torture me so long?"

"I didn't—know. But I'll make it up to you, Ned. I'll marry you—"

"Tonight," Ned told her.

Polly Johnston, a little pale from the effort, came toward the library door. Her eyes changed as she saw Claude's own room, and read from it deeper into Claude's self. She blamed Mary that she had not been told this side of the man, forgetting how she had refused to listen. She was surprised now that Mary did not move toward her.

"Mary," she began, "I'm going to be good and stay—"

"Mary!" Claude had seen his girl's face and moved toward her.

"Mother—Father!" Ned's voice stopped them both. "Mary and I ride to town tonight—to be married. We think that will make it easier all round. You see, Mother's friends would embarrass Father's. And as for my respected parent—well, it would be awkward all round. You can have any sort of a big time you like, when we come back, but now we want no fuss, and nobody but each other."

"Sensible idea," Claude admitted, to give Polly time. "Got the license?"

Ned nodded. "Got it this morning." He smiled down into the blue eyes set in the white face against his shoulder. "Mary, you tell them it's all right."

"Yes, Father—Mother, you'll understand and let me go with Ned?"

Polly Johnston stepped forward and folded her darling in her arms. "Of

"Oh, Mary," He Whispered, "How Could You Torture Me So Long?"

course, dear," she murmured. "Your bag's in Ned's car. I packed it, at the house, while Ned waited."

Mary's eyes were as wide as Claude's.

"You must have been very sure," and Mary looked at Ned, and blushed.

"I wasn't sure," Ned told her, humbly enough.

"I was," Polly Johnston said, and kissed her daughter, released her and stood back watching her run to her father to be held close in his arms.

"That's to be my lot now," she told herself, "to stand back and watch." But evidently it was not to be so yet, for two strong young arms were about her and Ned's voice whispered in her ear: "You beautiful old darling, I'll never forget this!"

They were going, and at the last Polly had her reward, for as her girl went down the steps, radiant, she suddenly turned and left her lover to run to her mother.

"Oh, Mother! I can't bear you to stay alone in that big empty White house. Promise me to telephone to—"

"Don't worry, darling. Aunt Lyddy's putting me up here, tonight."

"Mother, behind the grocery store!" Mary gave them both such a rapturous look of pure content that Claude, meeting Polly's smile, laughed aloud and warned Ned to drive off or he would have to take along with him both father and mother.

They were gone. Polly followed Claude into the dim and shadowy library. As his hand groped for the matches, she caught and held it. Through the dusk Claude could see her eyes, gleaming with mischief, as she went back twenty years and asked for the shibboleth:

"Wait, Claude. This house of yours—is it lit by 'alabaster lamps'?"

Claude turned on her swiftly. In twenty years he had learned his lesson.

"No, but it will be—if you stay."

[THE END.]

London Mansion Long Abode of Noted Men

London's most famous gathering place for men is Albany house, where Gladstone, Disraeli, Henry Irving, Byron, Canning and other notable figures have lived. Albany was purchased from the spendthrift duke of York during the reign of George III by Alexander Copland, a London builder, who had conceived the idea of turning the duke's Piccadilly mansion into an apartment building of 62 suites. The freeholders of the building, all of whom have always been men, number 50. Under the rules the suites are occupied almost entirely by bachelors or widowers and none may carry on a business or profession within its walls. It is operated by men of social and political prestige along business lines without idea of profit, and the trustees have turned down offers of millions for the site.—New York Times.

Lesson for August 14

DAVID BRINGS THE ARK TO JERUSALEM

LESSON TEXT—II Sam. 6:1-19; Ps. 24

GOLDEN TEXT—We shall be satisfied with the goodness of thy house even of thy holy temple.

PRIMARY TOPIC—David Worships God.

JUNIOR TOPIC—David Worships God.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Worship God.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Exalting God in Individual and National Life.

I. David Made King.

1. Over Judah (II Sam. 2:1-14).

Upon the death of Saul and Jonathan, David knew that the time had come for the fulfillment of God's purpose, but he carefully inquired of the Lord as to the proper movement to make. God directed him to Hebron whereupon the children of Judah anointed him to be their king.

2. Over Israel (II Sam. 5:1-5).

After the death of Ishbosheth, the children of Israel came and formed a league with David, anointing him as their king. They assigned as their reasons:

(1) He was their brother (v. 1).

This is true of Jesus Christ, who has become our kinsman through the incarnation.

(2) He was their leader in war even in Saul's time (v. 2).

(3) He was the Lord's choice (v 2).

II. David's Unsuccessful Attempt to Bring Up the Ark (vv. 1-5).

This is an example of a wrong way of doing a right thing. That the Ark of the Lord of Hosts, the symbol of God's presence, should be brought to the center of the nation's life was a decision worthy of all praise. David gathered together the representative men of the nation in order that the movement might be a national one. That David was sincere in this measure cannot be doubted, but he was hasty and inconsiderate, for the procedure was an express violation of God's statutes. The dictum that it matters little what you do, just so you are honest and sincere is one of the devil's blackest lies.

III. God Vindicates His Law and Holiness (vv. 6-9).

The people were very joyful as they moved on toward Jerusalem with the ark, but suddenly there was a stop to the jubilant voices and music. At some rough place in the road the oxen stumbled and Uzzah, anxious for the precious freight on his cart, reached forth his hand to steady it. This resulted in his being stricken to death, as a man who touches a live electric wire. Ignorance does not make a man immune from the death which is in the touch of the heavily charged electric wire; neither does it in the case of the violation of God's laws. Since the ark was God's dwelling place among men, they needed to know that He was holy.

IV. The Ark of God in the House of Obed-Edom (vv. 10-12).

The homes where God is welcomed are always blessed. Obed-Edom was not better personally than Uzzah and David, but he openly received the Lord and properly related himself to Him. What had been death and dread to others was life and blessing to him. This was all because of his attitude toward it.

V. The Ark Brought to Jerusalem With Great Joy (vv. 13-19).

1. Sacrifices were offered after going six paces (v. 13).

David made the start and when convinced of God's approval, he made offerings. These were both burnt and peace offerings, typifying the self-dedication of the offerers and their thanksgiving (I Chron. 16:1).

2. David's great joy (vv. 14, 15).

The people joined him with great shouting and with the sound of the trumpet.

3. Michal's criticism (v. 16).

Even though David went to excess in his expression of joy, it was wrong in her to criticize, for God seems to have sanctioned David's rebuke of her (v. 28).

4. The grand celebration (vv. 17-19).

As a token of his gratitude to God David generously treated the people.

5. The King of Glory, the Lord Jesus Christ, coming (Ps. 24:7-10).

This was not the psalm composed by David for the occasion of bringing up the ark; that was Psalm 105. (See I Chron. 16). It is strange that such a suggestion should have been made. This 24th psalm pictures Christ as the coming and triumphant King. At that time the gates shall open to Him and the King of Glory shall come in

God Gives Us Power

God gives us power to bear all the sorrows of His making; but He does not give the power to bear the sorrows of our own making, which the anticipation of sorrow most assuredly is.—Ian MacLaren.

Asking

Asking" of me" is the one appeal of the most high. It is not enough that we should be able to vindicate a promise signed by the divine hand; we must plead it.—F. B. Meyer.

Passionate Love Song Fatal to Capercailzie

The male capercailzie ends his love song with such a passionate note that he is deaf to the world for its duration of about two minutes and hunters of this bird take advantage of the fact. In their quest of this largest variety of grouse found wild in wooded sections of Europe and Asia, the hunters operate only in the breeding season, for "the deaf one," the bird is called in Russia, normally has acute hearing. When the song is first heard the hunter advances as quickly and as close as he can before the love-call ends, then waits until the next period of song and deafness. It is said that the capercailzie can hear the snapping of a twig half a mile away when he is not singing and it sometimes takes a hunter hours to get close enough to shoot.

Ruminating Animals

Ruminants are a group of animals distinguished from all other animals by the fact that they "chew the cud." The chief ruminants are camels, deer, giraffes, antelopes, sheep, and goats. Their food, after being partially masticated and swallowed, is later brought back to the mouth to be further masticated.

One on the Bishop

At a dinner party a bishop was seated next a woman who made a somewhat lavish display of her charms. When dessert arrived the bishop placed an apple on her plate.

She expressed surprise, whereupon he said, "You must eat it. When Eve ate the apple she knew what she looked like, and was ashamed!"

The woman was equal to the occasion. She quietly asked the bishop, "Who gave Eve the apple?"—London Tit-Bits.

If you were busy being kind,
Before you knew it you would find
You'd soon forget to think 'twas true
That some one was unkind to you.

If you were busy being glad
And cheering people who are sad,
Although your heart might ache a bit,
You'd soon forget to notice it.

SUMMER DISHES

As the summer season is with us we need to find foods that are appropriate to the season and serve our meals with as little waste energy as possible. Juicy fruits, leafy vegetables, cooling dishes and ices of various kinds are always welcome during the warm days.

Veal Croquettes.—Put a pint of veal through a salt and a generous sprinkling of paprika, a tablespoonful of lemon juice. Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter, add two tablespoonfuls of finely minced onion, three tablespoonfuls of flour and three-fourths of a cupful of veal stock or milk. Cook together five minutes, add two well-beaten eggs, stir until well mixed; mix with the veal. Shape, allowing a tablespoonful of the mixture for each croquette. Dip in egg and crumbs and fry in deep fat. Serve with a white or a tomato sauce.

Lemon Sherbet.—Take the juice of three lemons, two cupfuls of sugar and one quart of milk. Mix and freeze as usual.

Vegetable Dish.—Cook together young onions, new carrots and green peas in as little water as possible, adding small cubes of fried salt pork, a half cupful to a pint of vegetables. When the vegetables are cooked add seasoning with enough milk to serve as a sauce with the vegetables.

Picnic Lunches.

During the picnic season we are looking for foods easy to carry and prepare for serving, which will be otherwise popular.

When one is planning for a trip of several days and wishes to take food for the entire trip, nut bread will be found a good one, as it keeps moist for several days.

Nut Bread.—Take one cupful of sugar, one egg, three-fourths cupful of walnut meats, two and one-fourth cupfuls of flour, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt. Mix the dry ingredients, beat the egg, add one cupful of milk, mix and beat well and add the nuts. Let stand twenty minutes before putting into the oven. Bake forty-five minutes in a moderate oven.

For a doughnut that keeps moist the following will be a good one to use:

Potato Doughnuts.—Cream three tablespoonfuls of butter, add three-fourths of a cupful of sugar, the yolks of three eggs and one white, one cupful of freshly mashed potato, one-fourth of a cupful of milk, two and one-half cupfuls of flour, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt and flavor with grated nutmeg. Cream the butter, add the sugar, then the eggs, stir in the potato which has been lightened with the egg white, beaten stiff, add milk and the flour gradually. Chill on ice before rolling out and less flour will be needed. The less flour used the more moist will keep the doughnuts.

Lunch Cake.—Take one-third of a cupful of softened butter, add one and one-third cupfuls of brown sugar, two beaten eggs, one-half cupful of milk, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of cinnamon, one-half cupful of raisins and one and three-fourths cupfuls of flour. Put all together and beat three minutes. Bake forty minutes in a moderate oven.

Beef Fricadelles.—Take two cupfuls of cold cooked beef minced fine, season with salt, pepper, sage and thyme, lemon juice and grated rind and a tablespoonful of grated onion. Add one-half cupful of bread crumbs or cold cooked rice and one egg well beaten. Add water if needed, form into flat cakes and fry in hot butter.

Fricaded Beef With Eggs.—Cut into strips a few slices of dried beef, fry in a little butter and two or three eggs and a few tablespoonfuls of milk; stir until cooked and serve with buttered toast for breakfast. Bacon served in the same way is especially good.

Photos of All Killed

Photographs of all of the thirty-three New Brighton (Pa.) men who were killed in the World war or who died in service, are now hanging in the hall of the New Brighton post of the American Legion. Two years' work on the part of post members was necessary to obtain all the photographs, the families of a number of the men having moved away from the city. The pictures were enlarged to a uniform size and placed in attractive frames.

Just a Little Smile

PROFESSIONAL INSTINCT

A tailor had a great desire to hear one of his customers, a celebrated tenor, sing. Obligingly, the tenor gave him a couple of tickets for his next appearance at the opera house.

Meeting him a few days later, he asked whether he had enjoyed the performance.

"Oh, it was awful!" replied the tailor.

"Awful! What do you mean?"

"Your coat," the other groaned, "it was too tight under the arms."

WHEN IT RAINS

She—Dad says you don't know enough to go in when it rains.

He—Does he?

She—He sure does.

He—Well, you tell him I stay in in the first place.

Limited Appreciation

A very pretty play I saw.
Its morals no one could deplore.
I clapped my hands and said "Hurrah!"
With only half a dozen more.

No Interest in Life

Husband (anxiously)—My wife seems not to have the slightest interest in life.

Doctor—What makes you think that?

Husband—Well, I've tried her with golf, billiards, football and racing, and it's just like talking to a stone.

Explained

Smith—Saw you and your wife out walking yesterday and, funny thing!—when you had to cross the street she went over first, then you waited your chance and followed.

Smart—O, that' easily explained. You see, we've just made our wills in each other's favor.—The Pathfinder.

WOULD SOON IMPROVE

Dad—Look here, Dorothy, I don't like the way these youngsters are bugging you!

Dot—Don't you know they're scarcely more than boys, daddy? They'll soon improve.

Intelligent Cornfed—in Style

She looks as if she is "all there."
But goodness knows,
That is more'n I could truthfully say
About her clothes.

Difference

"How much do you ask for this place?"

"Ten thousand dollars."

"Thanks. I'm the tax collector."

"You are? Well, I never was offered more than three for it."

Boy, Shoot This

Reporter—I know a person who has lived in one room all his life!

Editor—Good! Get an interview right now. Who is he?

Reporter—Our three-weeks-old baby!

Amassing Riches

"I saw an old Egyptian tomb filled with priceless treasures."

"Yes," commented Senator Sorghum. "Those ancient kings remind me that graft was one of the world's earliest institutions." — Washington Star.

Golden Opportunity

"By the way, I met Dupont. His wife is very hoarse and can't sing."

"Oh, what about inviting them both to dinner tonight?"—Pele Mele, Paris.

by ordering your SUNBEAM CABINET HEATER during

$unbeam $aving $eason

August 1st. to 31st.

Order your Sunbeam Cabinet Heater before August 31st, instead of waiting until a few weeks later—and save $10.00. Make a down payment of $5.00 and receive, in accordance with the $unbeam $aving $eason offer now in effect, a credit of $15.00. Start paying the balance, when your Sunbeam is installed.

The Sunbeam thoroughly heats the home with 5 to 7 rooms, but requires no basement. Only a heater constructed like the Sunbeam with a cast iron heating unit of the furnace type; an 84 pound fire-pot; one joint above fire bed; an inner casing that doubles the heating surface, can give this result. For the heating capacity, economy, efficiency and long life of a cabinet heater depend on these parts, which you do not see. Everyone can afford Sunbeam whole-home warmth. Sunbeam prices are now the lowest in Sunbeam history.

The body will be shipped to his Maryland home for burial.

The corn borer clean-up in Defiance county revealed the fact that their farmers were a "stiff in the bit" bunch and now checks are coming in amounting to $78,881. The work was approved on 2,556 of the 2,610 farms under inspection and of these ten farmers refuse to sign the vouchers. They sure are going the limit, but they lose the money. There ought to be more stringent regulations, and perhaps will be this year, that where a man refuses to comply with regulations and is forced to do so, ought not to receive his pay per acre as other men. Guess DeKalb had a few men nearly as bad as Defiance.

POGUE WILL ADDRESS TWO DEKALB FARMERS MEETINGS, AUGUST 22-26

Chautauqua Lecturer to Appear On Picnic Program Monday And At Courthouse Friday Evening

Barton Rees Pogue, poet, humorist, chautauqua lecturer and author of "Songs of the Soil," a series of poems on Hoosier farm life published weekly in The Farmer's Guide, will address two audiences in DeKalb county during his speaking tour this summer, according to announcements just received by The News. F. E. Weller, chairman of the County Farmers' Federation and Community Club, states that Mr. Pogue will appear on the program of the Federation's picnic on Monday afternoon, August 22. The celebration is to be held 4 miles south of Garrett on U. S. Route 27. Besides Mr. Pogue the program, which will begin at 1:30 P. M., includes piano solos by Thelma Hawer and Neva Mowery, vocal solos by Robert Beber and Mrs. Grace Shenk, a violin duet by Kenneth Long and Harold Beber, several favorite selections by a male quartette and readings by Evangeline Balliet. A short play will be given by ladies of the Community Club.

On Friday evening, August 26. Mr. Pogue will speak before a county-wide meeting of the Home Bureaus of DeKalb county to be held in the assembly room of the courthouse at Auburn. This affair, according to Mrs. Josie Grate, is an open meeting and all farm families of the county have been invited. The members of each township club will contribute to the program supporting Mr. Pogue and which will begin at 8 o'clock.

The program committees of both events feel particularly fortunate in being able to secure Mr. Pogue for usually he can not be booked for more than one appearance in each county. He is heralded as a headliner for rural programs throughout Indiana and is known through his verses by more than half the farmers of the state. His admirers in DeKalb county will be pleased to meet the author whose works they have read each week. The arrangements were made possible when it was found that this widely-known entertainer would be in the district while making a summer lecture tour under the auspices of The Guide.

Mr. Pogue is a genuine Hoosier poet through and through. Reared at Greenfield, the home of James Whitcomb Riley, and the son of a Hoosier schoolmaster, his talks are full of Indiana wit and rural philosophy which appeal to every member of his audience. This master of rhyme seems to have absorbed the talent of Riley and the popularity of his works is second only to his former townsman.

JUST TELL 'EM AND SELL 'EM

F. W. Anderson Big Grocer in Small Town, Gives Advice To Brother Merchants

"If you don't tell 'em, you can't sell 'em!"

Fred W. Anderson, whose merchandise store in Cozad, Neb., a town of 1,200 does an annual business of $300,000, is responsible for this business epigram. It's the advice he gave to the National Retail Grocers' Association at its recent convention.

Every grocer should spend at least two per cent of his gross receipts during 1927 for advertising, he said, adding that the success of his business depended largely upon carefully planned advertising campaigns.

Grocery Bill—Good Night!

I have an automobile,
It's nice as nice can be,
And best of all my grocer
Is buying it for me.
When upon the road I drive,
I do not let them pass,
And best of all my grocer
Is helping buy the gas.
And if I break an axle,
No need for me to care,
I have a willing grocer
Who always treats me fair.
Some day I am to pay him,
That is if things go right,
But if in trouble I should get,
It's grocery bill—good night.

LINDBERGH DID NOT WISH

Young men the world over have, with mingled feelings, read of the achievement of the youthful Charles Lindbergh. Admiration and pride in the glory of his feat has been most generously given by all—still what young man is there who has not "wished" that the opportunity had been his—and that he could have "zoomed" through to such everlasting glory?

The now "Colonel Lindbergh" MADE his opportunity. An unknown air-mail pilot, he SAVED part of his earnings. When the hour arrived he had $2,000 saved to offer on the altar of sincerity—and obtain the support of young business men of St. Louis. He was the largest individual contributor to the fund which made the flight possible.

CHRIST FOR ALL—ALL FOR CHRIST

The Word of God

Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path.—Psalm 119: 105.

SAFE FROM ALL EVIL:—The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil: he shall preserve thy soul. Psalm 121: 7.

PRAYER:—We will say of the Lord, He is our Refuge and our Fortress: our God; in Him we trust.

THE PERFECT TENANT

The landlord was asking the prospective tenant a few questions.

"Of course, you have no children?"

"No, sir."

"Any dogs or cats?"

"No, sir."

"Piano, phonograph or piano-la?"

"No, sir; I have no musical instruments, though I should explain that my fountain pen squeaks rather badly, but I am willing to get rid of that if you say so."

ASKING BIDS FOR GRADE

Commissioners of DeKalb county are giving notice that they will receive proposals up to the hour of 10 o'clock on September 6 for the improement of the highway in Spencer township known as the Harvey Kimes improved road. The road is to be straightened, graded and filled in at a point known as the Kimes mill race. The work is to be completed within a time to be fixed by agreement between the commissioners and the successful bidder.

RADIO

New Antenna Is Aid to Reception

Cleaning Connections and Attention to Ground Wire Improves Set.

By DON C. WALLACE

The tendency nowadays is to add tubes to the radio set. Sets are now using five, six or eight tubes with results. The average fan, however, is not able to add tubes to his set by merely going to the nearest radio store, purchasing the necessary equipment and then putting them together.

His pocketbook would not stand for that sort of a process. Nevertheless, he would like to improve his set. The question then changes its nature and becomes, "How can I improve my set with the least expenditure?"

Tubes are expensive, but not so expensive as they were a year ago. The main expense in connection with the addition of tubes is not actually the tubes themselves but the other materials necessary to make them fit in with the rest of the set. The addition of tubes will improve the operation of the set provided this addition is done in the proper manner.

Improvement Difficult.

It is rather difficult to improve a set. Generally speaking, the set is made well and as efficiently as possible at the start. This is especially true of a manufactured set, so it would be folly to try to improve the set itself. The accessories can well be improved, however. Under this head we can classify the batteries, both A battery and B battery. If the set uses a C battery it will be well to test out this at regular intervals. The C battery should be tested with a voltmeter in the same manner as is the B battery.

When a dry cell type of set has been purchased, this does not mean that dry cells must of necessity be used with the set. Storage batteries, which give the same voltage, have been developed and in addition they are almost the same size. The cost of batteries such as these is not great and it would be well for each set owner to look into the matter of storage batteries of a good B-power supply when purchasing a new set of batteries. This would be in the nature of an "accessory" improvement.

Clean Connections.

Another form of improvement, which lessens the likelihood of stray noises and racket, is the thorough cleaning of all the contacts and connecting wires. Each connecting wire should be disconnected (preferably one at a time), thoroughly sandpapered or scraped where contact is to be made, then replaced and the binding post screwed as tightly as possible. Incidentally, it is well to remove the tubes from the set before doing any sort of connecting or changing. This is in the nature of a "caution" as many a tube has been unwittingly burned out while connecting or disconnecting batteries. The merest sort of a tick or momentary connection will cause the burn-out.

The ground connection should be thoroughly cleaned and tightened. When this has been done no one should be able to move the ground clamp, even if it is roughly jerked. The antenna connection should also be tightened. Little details such as these may not even be noticeable, but they are theoretically correct, and if attention is given to them the resistance of all the circuits involved is automatically lowered. There is then less opportunity for scraping noises and satisfaction is bound to be more consistent.

New Aerial Best Change.

All of the foregoing is general. The real improvement will come when the antenna is improved. Dollar for dollar, there is nothing which will improve the volume, the clearness, and consistency of radio reception quite so much as a good antenna. Almost no antenna is as good as it can be made. Suggested improvements are as follows: Make it higher. If it comes near the building, make that distance greater. In other words, just because the antenna misses a building four feet, or even fifteen feet, there is no reason for supposing that the antenna is as good as it can be made.

Many an otherwise good antenna is spoiled because the insulators have been in use for a year or more. A thin coating of soot and dirt has been formed. The texture of the insulators is often really changed as a result of air, heat and cold. It is advisable to change the insulators for new ones every year.

Last of all, the antenna wire itself should be changed. New insulators, new wire, a better support, can be purchased for less than $2 in all. The complete renewal of these items will increase the volume of the received programs, add to the consistency of the range of the set and decrease the quantity of extraneous noises heard.

Use of Battery Charger

Try not to put the battery charger in action until late in the evening or early in the day when few stations are on the air. The charger causes a continuous buzz in the neighbors' sets and is very annoying to them.

Radio Beacons for Ocean Flights Seen Possible

This summer's onrush of nonstop flights over the Atlantic has revived the idea of establishing radio beacons across the ocean to make such air travel safe.

So great a radio authority as Dr. J. H. Dellinger, head of the radio laboratory of the United States bureau of standards, foresees this possibility.

"Such a proposal," says Dellinger, "is entirely feasible, and while these beacon stations will not be established in midocean this year or next, it is not unlikely that they will be constructed within ten years."

Cost of putting these up, however, would be high. They would have to be anchored 500 to 1,000 miles apart, to radiate double-beam signals for passing aircraft, or a powerful station, radiating 100,000 watts of energy, would have to be built on either side of the Atlantic.

Transatlantic airplanes taking advantage of these directive radio beacons would have to be equipped with a radio receiving set operated by one dial, a visual indicating device for denoting when the aviator is traveling in a zone of safety as outlined by the double-beam radio waves, and a means of shielding the airplane engine ignition system so as to prevent interference with radio reception.

At present most of the experimental work of the radio laboratory of the bureau of standards centers about the receiving apparatus for use on airplanes. Experimentally, there has been developed at College Park, Md., a simple one-dial receiving outfit which is practically automatic in operation, and vari-colored lights flashed on the instrument board of the flying craft indicate to the pilot when he is on or off the signal zone or path of safety.

Esthonia's Radios Must Not Cause Interference

If the radio laws of Esthonia, that small country in the heart of Europe located between the Gulfs of Finland and Riga and bordered by Russia and Latvia, were enforced in the United States, a large number of the radio receivers now in use would be antiquated. In that country the radio regulations make it illegal to operate a receiver that interferes with reception.

In Esthonia it is the bureau of posts and telegraphs which has control over radio and this department of the government rules that all radio receivers must be maintained below the point of oscillation at all times. Sets employing radio-frequency amplification which use two or more tubes must be balanced before they are approved and super-heterodyne receivers must be operated with a loop antenna. All owners of radio receivers are required to take out a license, and a violation of the radio law results in a revocation of the permit to own or operate any type of radio apparatus.

Lack of Volume Often in Failure of Tubes

Lack of volume at the output does not always indicate battery weakness. It may be closely linked up with the failure of the audio amplifier tubes to do their customary work.

Many set operators take volume weakness as an indication that there is something wrong with their batteries. Often they will stop reception, and without taking the trouble to test the "B" battery, will switch on the charger. They are very apt to blame the eliminators if they use such devices as the power source.

Little consideration is given to the tubes, yet these may be to blame for the lack of normal volume. One way to test the amplifiers is to tap them while the set is in operation. Do this with a pencil, lightly. If the tubes are amplifying properly there should be a ringing noise heard in the loud speaker.

Burnt Out Transformer May Still Be Utilized

In many radio junk boxes will be found burned-out audio-frequency transformers. As it is almost always the primaries of these transformers which burn out, the instruments can be utilized very satisfactorily by connecting a 100,000-ohm fixed resistor across the primary terminals and a .006 to .01-mf. condenser between the "grid" and "plate" terminals of the transformer.

This connection effects resistance-capacity coupling with an impedance leak, and will be found to give unexcelled tone quality, from even cheap and inefficient transformers, says Radio News Magazine. It is a relatively simple matter to make clips of spring brass for the resistors.

Radio an Aid to Those Who Are Hard of Hearing

Radio dealers have found that deaf persons are often purchasers of radio sets. This can be more easily understood by the recent surveys made by experts.

Specialists in diseases of the ear have said that they not only know of very deaf persons who heard the radio perfectly but that the condition of deafness has actually been improved by treatment with the radio.

A four or a five-tube set has been prescribed by many ear specialists as the best suitable for a deaf person. A single tube will amplify the vibration 25 times; the second increases it about 625 times, the third about 15,000 times, and proportionately more with each additional tube.

POULTRY

CHICKEN POX IS VERY CONTAGIOUS

Chicken pox (sometimes called sorehead) is a very contagious disease. It makes its appearance in the form of irregular whitish patches or festers which later develop into brown spots or crusts (resembling a scab or sore) on the comb, wattles, eyelids, and around the beak and nostrils. In severe cases these patches or sores increase in number to such extent that the birds have difficulty in opening their eyes and beaks, and if neglected many will die.

The best way to prevent birds from this as well as many other diseases, is to keep all roosting quarters clean, dry, and well disinfected. During the summer, when the disease is most common, mix 3 pounds of powdered sulphur with each 100 pounds of dry mash, allowing the birds to eat all they want. Chicken pox usually attacks late-hatched chicks more often and more severely than early hatched ones, which makes it advisable to hatch as early in the season as possible.

If, however, a flock becomes infected in spite of all precautions, no time should be lost in treating the birds be applying a liberal quantity of carbolated vaseline to the affected parts. This treatment after a short time will cause the patches or crusts to soften and drop off, when the tissue or sore underneath should be painted with tincture of iodine of a 5 per cent solution of carbolic acid. Five pounds of fine-powdered sulphur mixed with each 100 pounds of dry mash is also beneficial in effecting a cure.

As soon as the disease makes its appearance spray the houses and coops thoroughly with some good disinfectant (preferably some wood preservative or coal-tar preparation), and scald the drinking fountains and feed dishes thoroughly with boiling water. Repeat every two or three days until after all the birds have fully recovered.

Poultryman Should Cull All Loafers From Flock

Because egg prices are going down and feed prices are going up, poultrymen cannot afford to keep "star-boarders," according to the poultry department at the New York State College of Agriculture, which says that about 25 per cent of the hens in the average farm flock in New York state are loafers that do not pay their own way, and at the same time eat food and occupy room in the poultry house that the laying hens should have.

For several years poultrymen from the college have spent much of their time during the summer months culling poultry for the farmers in New York state, and last year a total of 252,000 birds were handled. The men who do the culling are trained poultry judges, and the cost of the service to the farmer is about one and one-half to two cents for each bird handled.

On the basis of the number of birds actually discarded, the cost to the poultryman is about five or six cents a bird. The department says that it costs 20 to 30 cents a month to feed a hen, therefore, the saving for the farmer is evident.

Any farmer in the state may have his poultry culled by a poultryman from the college by applying to his local farm bureau agent or by writing directly to the poultry department at the State College of Agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y.

Poultry Notes

Sell broilers and fryers promptly.

* * *

Keep the poultry house clean and the birds are more likely to keep healthy.

* * *

Chicks to be used as breeders or layers should be provided with plenty of green range.

* * *

Chickens with good capacity and good appetites are the ones that fill the egg basket.

* * *

Produce clean eggs so none will have to be washed to give a good appearance.

* * *

Eggs that have been washed will spoil quicker than those that have not, so produce them clean at the start.

* * *

A green feed is essential to egg production. To raise green feed successfully is one of the greatest problems of the poultryman who wishes to have eggs when the price is high.

* * *

Market the surplus cockerels or keep them separate from the pullets for most satisfactory growth.

* * *

The young chickens should be kept comfortable. Get them on perches early, as crowding retards growth and causes crooked breast bones.

* * *

A hen cannot very well feed mites at night, lice in the daytime and have much time to lay eggs. Sanitation, plus good feeding and management are all essential for best results.

SICK WOMAN SOON RECOVERS

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

"A neighbor advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound which she said had helped her so much. So I bought a few bottles and tried it out. It sure helped me wonderfully. I felt much better. My work was no longer a dread to me. If I hear of any one who is troubled the way I was, I will gladly recommend the Vegetable Compound to them and I will answer any letters in regard to the same."—Mrs. Bertha Meacham, 1134 N. Penn. Ave., Lansing, Mich.

"I had been sickly ever since I was fifteen years old. After taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I got so I could do all my housework and I am in good health."—Mrs. Mabie K. Williams, Ketchikan, Alaska.

From Michigan to Alaska, from Maine to Oregon and from Connecticut to California letters are continually being written by grateful women recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

The Compound is made from roots and herbs and for more than fifty years has been helping to restore run-down, over-worked women to health.

Wandering Alligator

Finding an alligator in a rosebush in her garden, a Kansas City woman had what she described as the thrill of her life. The woman was clearing shrubbery from the rosebush when "something" snapped at her hand. She called neighbors. A crowd congregated. Some one obtained a rake and a "baby" alligator was taken from under the bush. The alligator was put in a box and turned over to the police department.

A New Way to Make Jellies

Without Staining Fingers—Without Long Hours of Boiling—Without Depending Upon Berries or Fruit Being in Season.

One of the most interesting and yet one of the simplest new products in the food field is called minute jelly. It is pure fruit or berry juice already boiled down and concentrated. To this concentrated juice, fruit pectin in the right amount has been added. The pectin is that part of fruit which makes jelly "jell." It is as pure and wholesome as the fruit juice.

To make the jelly take the little bottle of concentrated juice, pour in a sauce pan, add water and sugar according to directions on the bottle and boil a few minutes. Then pour into jelly glasses and when it has become cold you have the most delicious pure fruit jelly you ever tasted.

A few bottles kept on hand, selected according to your taste for jellies, and you can make up a few glasses just as you want it. One small bottle makes two glasses of jelly. If you wish to try two bottles send us twenty-five cents and we will give you your choice of grape, mint, pineapple, orange, raspberry, strawberry or blackberry. Or four bottles—all different—for fifty cents. Address Department WU, General Packing Corp., Cranford, New Jersey.—Adv.

A Just Man

Pretty Things that are Made at Home

GINGHAM! This once scorned fabric, at least from an esthetic standpoint, is now being put to use in the pretty things girls are making for their personal adornment.

First of all there are the colorful gingham jackets so popular for wear with the sleeveless tennis frock of white pique, or with any white skirt, for that matter. Designs in blue are especially popular.

The stylish little jackets may be made from any pattern desired, purchasable in the nearest department store, and will require but a few yards. For two dollars or less any girl who knows how to sew can make herself one of these jackets that will tub perfectly without changing color. The gingham should, of course, be shrunk before it is made up.

Collar and cuff sets that give just the right touch of color to the plain one-tone sports frock or jersey or flannel, are another of the season's novelties the girls are making. Many of the new novelty ginghams have superimposed thread designs and silky dots that look like embroidery. Some of these on white grounds really look like linen. Then there are the tiniest of checks in a myriad of colors that look as though they were especially made for collar and cuff sets. The sets are very pretty, with organdie edges in tiny ruffles or points like that shown in the sketch. The organdie may be white or in color to match the predominating shade in the design. Organdie and gingham are very good in combination and are being much worn this season.

Hand bags of gingham to carry with summer dresses are smart, especially for seashore and other summer resort wear. These are very easily made, and require so little gingham the cost is but a few cents. They are sewed to a frame of imitation tortoise shell.

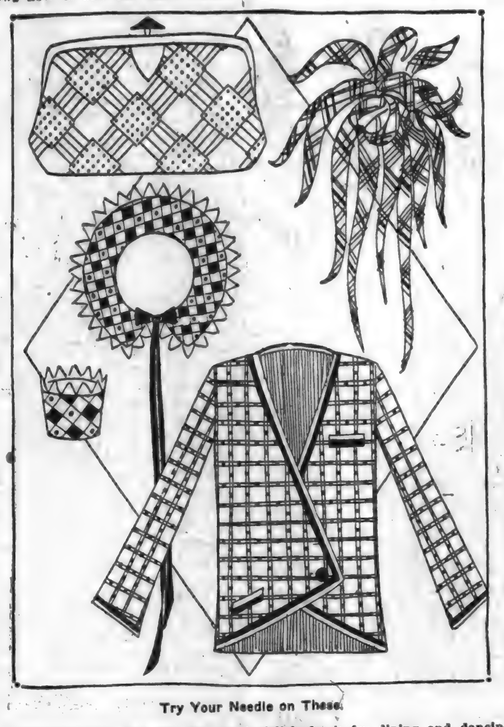
But most popular of all is the gingham shoulder flower. The shoulder flower, as you know, is being made from everything from woolen materials to kidskin this season, and it is not surprising that the humble gingham that affords such beautiful colorings should be called into service for this purpose. The one in the sketch is fashioned from a novelty plaid of violets and white, on a peach ground.

Why fret and fume as to how one's frock should be trimmed? Why trim it at all? The smartest frocked women are wearing dresses which show not a vestige of trimming, all the glory of embellishment being reserved for the shoulder bouquet and corsage.

There is this adorable frock in the picture, for instance. It is simply fashioned of violet chiffon, with exquisite Parma violets at neckline and waistline. The young debutante will find nothing more charming than this girlish frock for dining and dancing. Frocks and flowers carried out in this matching way are of outstanding importance this season.

Then, too, there is the vogue for the all-white frock with a touch of color. The "touch of color" very often expresses itself in a cluster of novelty flowers. Lately fancy turns to wearing trailing bouquets on the shoulder, a few of the blossoms suspended with "accidental-on-purpose" careless grace. It is also good style to wear a generous bouquet (white violets are choice) placed at the shoulder line, up very close and snug to the throat.

For the coming fall, stylists predict even a greater popularity for the nosegay.



Try Your Needle on These.

An Adorable Frock.

For summer evening wear, huge fluttering pastel-toned chiffon flowers are favored.

Centenarian Last Man of Grand Army Post

Washington post, G. A. R., of South Boston, passed out of existence, when its last surviving member, John Connors, died at his home at the age of one hundred one. A native of Ireland, he joined the navy before the outbreak of the Civil war, fought in the battle of Mobile bay, and remained in the service for many years.

It is not extraordinary that a Grand Army post should come to an end through the death of all its members. There were many that have been so terminated, and in most of them the membership has been reduced to a handful. The Civil war ended 62 years ago, and that means an approximate age of eighty for even the youngest of the surviving veterans. But John Connors was close to forty years old at the end of the war, old enough to have been the father of some of the boys in blue. Even among his South Boston comrades there must have been some who were young enough to be his sons. Yet it was his fortune to outlive them all. To him fell the unexpected distinction of being the Last Man.—Providence Journal.

"Only Girl's" Idea of Lover Not Flattering

District Attorney Wallace, discussing the punishment recently meted out to immoral plays, said at a luncheon in New York:

"These people expected praise and pelf. They got instead—well, what they got instead must have made them feel worse than the young bond salesman.

"The young bond salesman said nervously to a pretty girl at a dance:

"'I'm all shot to pieces over Helen. Can't sleep or nothin'. I'd give the world if I could find out whether she cares for me or not.'

"'Helen often speaks of you,' said the pretty girl. 'She calls you her "good resolution."'

"'By gosh, but that makes me happy,' said the bond salesman; and then he added, 'I wonder what she means by that?'

"'She tells me,' laughed the pretty girl, 'that she means you're always broke.'"

Flyosan has killed all his millions of friends and relatives

NO WONDER he's blue. He knows he's next.

Flyosan has killed every single fly and mosquito in thousands of homes this summer. Flyosan is the modern best way of fighting flying pests. It kills them by the wholesale—not one at a time.

Flyosan is the original liquid insect spray (non-poisonous). Use Flyosan itself, not one of its imitations. Flyosan not only kills all the flies and mosquitoes in your home but also rids it of the millions of deadly, disease-bearing germs which each one carries.

"Swatting" only scatters these germs into the air which you and your family breathe.

Here is the right insecticide for each insect:

FLYOSAN, Liquid Spray—kills flies and mosquitoes.
PETERMAN'S ANT FOOD—exterminates ants.
PETERMAN'S DISCOVERY, Liquid—exterminates bed-bugs.
PETERMAN'S ROACH FOOD—exterminates that cockroach army.
PETERMAN'S MOTH FOOD—protects against moths.

You must have a specific insecticide for each insect. No single insecticide will exterminate them all. We have had nearly 30 years' experience. We know that is true.

Peterman's has the right insecticide for each insect. On sale wherever drugs are sold.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND GAME

Issues Bulletin of Information That Sportsmen Should Know

On April 1st, on which date the files of the Department annually close on the acceptance of applications for fish to stock public and private waters in the State of Indiana, it was found that applications filed for public waters numbered 987, and for private lakes, ponds and gravel pits, 333, making a total of 1,320. To make the deliveries to the various waters applied for, requires considerable time. Becoming apprehensive and believing that they were overlooked, quite a few applicants began writing the Department asking about the fish they applied for. The prospects are favorable for a delivery to all applicants. Those receiving a late delivery may not receive as many, but will get larger fish than those who receive them early. Deliveries from the hatcheries will extend into September, as is annually the case. In 1919, the year in which the Department of Conservation was created the applications for fish received numbereed but 274, of which 40 were for private ponds or pits. The increase to 333 shows a greater interest existing in the building and stocking of private fish ponds. Within the last year two sportsmen's organizations interested themselves in acquiring ponds and have propagated some black bass for stocking waters in their counties. The Division will gladly co-operate with and assist any sportsmen's organization that desires to engage in the propagation of fish for stocking public waters. Three such organizations have for years carried on such work much to their credit.

On June 1st two crews of men were placed in the field to remove gar and dogfish from lakes in Northern Indiana. The work was started in a preliminary way two years ago. The experience gained in the past two seasons has been very valuable. It was necessary to learn what sort of equipment to use and how to operate with it. From June 1st to September 30 in 1926 a crew of two men worked on four lakes. They removed 1,067 gar, 77 dogfish and 55 large carp. Some of the gar destroyed were very big, a number being taken in the nets weighing up to 14½ pounds. It is claimed that a ten-pound pickerel will consume a half ton of fish in acquiring that weight, and that three pounds of fish a day would be but a mere luncheon for him. If this be true, one can well see why the continued stocking of certain waters apparently does but little good. Gar and dogfish are equally destructive. In waters where they exist in numbers along with the pickerel, the game fish such as the bass, bluegill, perch and crappie are without doubt being devoured in large numbers. No one can deny that the taking out of several hundred gar and dogfish from a body of water infested with them will help to preserve thousands of valuable game fish. The question is would it not be well to remove the large pickerel? No less authority than Sir Izaak Walton said: "All pikes that live long enough prove chargeable to their keepers, because their life is maintined by the death of so many other fish, even those of their own kind." One of the foremost fish culturists of this country has declared that it was his belief that the country would be better off if all the pike tribe were exterminated. Under Indiana fish laws pike or pickerel receive protection. The question is if it would not be well to do away with that protection. The late General Assembly removed protection from the common sunfish which, like the English sparrow, has become somewhat of a pest. The pickerel may not be a pest; it is far worse; it is a real menace in some of the lakes in this state. This is a matter that anglers may well give some thought to.

A number of arrests made for violation of the fish and game laws in June was 293. Convictions numbered 266. Twenty-three cases remained to be tried, 4 three cses remained to be tried, 4 were dismissed. Fines and costs amounted to $6,959.52. As usual all the money paid in fines goes into the school fund in the counties in which the offenses were committed. The leading offenses were as follows: Hunting or fishing without license, 75; taking or possession of fish in close season, 64; taking undersized fish, 63; taking squirrels in close season, 35; seining or netting fish or having illegal seins or nets in possession, 15, and dynamiting fish, 10.

Records for nine months, October 1 to July 1 in this fiscal year show that 1,520 persons so far have been arrested for violating game and fish laws. Convictions number 1,433. The fines and costs in the cases amount to $30,426.02. This is an increase in the nine months this year of 295 in number of arrests, and 208 in number of convictions. The amount of fines and costs show an increase of $4,565.57.

From May 16th up to this date approximately 700 persons have taken out licenses from this office to take mussels for commercial purposes from Indiana waters. All except 12 were issued to residents. A resident license costs $2.00; a non-resident license, $15.00. The number of licenses issued to residents to use seines, nets and traps in the Wabash river where it forms the boundary to date is but 49. The number of seines licensed is 7; gill nets 1; trammel nets 5; hoop nets 113 and traps 5. No non-resident licenses have been issued for the Wabash river to date.

Inquiries are being received from persons desiring to know whether a person if rowing a boat for another person fishing, must have license if out of his own county. The answer is that any person who in any way assists another in fishing is taking part in such fishing, and needs a license. This has been decided by action in court.

The Department has often been asked what constitutes a lawful turtle trap. Under the fish laws here is no section permitting one o set a trap for turtles which has ts opening underneath the water. Such a trap would be an unlawful levice, as it could catch fish as well as turtles. The only lawful rap that can be used is one having its opening above the water. A very successful turtle trap can be made with the opening on top and out of the water. It is a wire box with trap doors on top which fall in when the turtle goes out on top of the box to sun itself. The doors fly back after the turtle is precipitated into the box. A trap of this kind is in use at the State fish hatchery at Indianapolis, and has proven to be a great success. It is necessary to nail tin or galvanized iron around the sides of the box, flanged inward to keep the turtles from climbing out of the box.

The Department will this year again distribute a limited quantity of wild rice seed to organized bodies of sportsmen. Organizations desiring this seed should notify this Division not later than August 10th, as to their wants. The seed will be delivered to applicants in September as heretofore.

The season for taking squirrels opens August 1st and continues until November 1st. The bag limit is 5 per day. Sale of squirrels except alive for breeding purposes is now unlawful, except on the red or pine squirrel, which is not protected under state laws.

MANY FROM DEKALB COUNTY TO HEAR CONGRESSMAN DICKINSON

Many DeKalb County people are planning to hear Congressman Dickinson at Trier's Park on the afternoon of August 20th. Congressman Dickinson who is an outstanding leader in Washington, is making a tour of the entire Nation in the interest of farm legislation. His addresses are educational, rather than political.

Trier's Park, Fort Wayne, where the meeting will be held, is the largest and most complete amusement center in northern Indiana. Free tickets will be given out in abundance to all children and adults attending the picnic. These tickets will give continuous admittance to the amusements and rides. Senators, Congressmen and State officials have signified their intention to be present. Anyone wishing to attend, who has not automobile facilities to do so, should report to their Precinct Committeeman, or to County Chairman, Clark Springer, Butler.

FARMERS PAID FOR BORER CLEAN-UP

Total of $150,000 to be Paid Out in This Part of State—DeKalb County to Get $50,000

Farmers of the northeastern Indiana corn borer area will receive approximately $150,000 from the United States government in recompense for extra labor in making the clean-up campaign in corn fields last spring. This figure was announced today by P. T. Ulman, Indiana deputy entomologist, in charge of the corn borer office near Auburn.

Allen county farmers will receive the largest share of this sum, owing to the big corn acreages in the quarantined district, the approximate sum being $65,000. DeKalb county farmers will receive about $50,000 and Steuben county farmers about $35,000. Whitley and Noble counties were infested to a limited acreage last year and farmers will receive smaller sums.

The federal government allowed farmers up to $2 an acre for extra labor and Mr. Ulman estimates that the average figure to be paid over the entire district will approximate $1.50. Payment is now being made by the government to farmers from the $10,000,000 fund appropriated for the corn borer campaign by the national congress.

The force of guards on state and county roads entering the corn borer district has now been increased to 50 men. Eight of the more important roads are guarded day and night so that corn from the infested area will not be transported to free territory. A new station has been established on a county road in Thorncreek township, Whitley county.

The federal force of borer scouts has also been increased, the number of men now engaged in this work totalling 56. The scouts are working free territory bordering in infested area.

GOES TO LAKE GENEVA

Annise Harding of Corunna, county superintendent of the Young People's division of the DeKalb County Council of Religious Education, Rose Smith, also of Corunna, the Richland township young people's worker of the organization and May Schwartz of Jackson township, left Tuesday to attend the Girls' camp at Lake Geneva, Wis. They will be gone until August 21.

BIRTHDAY SURPRISE

Monday evening Mr. and Mrs. Thayer Northrup and son and Cecil Shilling and family came to the home of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Shilling, to remind their mother of her sixty-eighth anniversary. A lovely birthday cake was presented to Mrs. Shilling and home made ice cream was served. An enjoyable evening was spent together.

ANNUAL HOME COMING AND CELEBRATION

The first Saturday in September of each year is looked forward to by all as the one big day in St. Joe, as the annual home coming event, and this year, September 3rd is the date.

Arrangemenets are being completed daily for the event by the several committees that Chairman E. R. Kinsey has selected.

Advance reports are that the concessions are being secured in good numbers and that when the program is ready for printing it will exceed anything ever held in St. Joe. And if this be true those in charge will not leave a stone unturned to make the event a banner one.

Whoop it up for the home coming, and talk it wherever you go. Let's go!

SECHLER REUNION

The thirty-seventh annual reunion of the Sechler family was held at the pleasant home of Mr. and Mrs. B. E. Widney on Sunday, August 14. At the noon hour seventy members enjoyed the bounteous dinner in picnic fashion. After a social hour an inspiring program consisting of orchestra and vocal music, readings and devotions were given. As a family we were grateful for God's goodness to us and were made to rejoice and be glad.

Under business the following officers were elected: President, Ralph Sechler; vice president, Merritt Sechler; secretary, Avis Staman; treasurer, Sam Mumaw.

The next reunion will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Sechler, the second Sunday in August.

FORMER SPENCERVILLE BOY DIES IN WEST

Owen William Rummell, Jr., son of O. W. and Nancy Rummell, was born in Spencerville, DeKalb County, Indiana, February 14, 1877 and departed this life July 11, 1927, at the age of 50 years, 4 months and 25 days.

His father and one brother preceded him to the great beyond. He was united in marriage to Lucy Sandefer, to which union were born seven children, all of whom are living. He also leaves his aged mother, one brother, Mr. H. Rummell of Oklahoma City and two sisters, Mrs. Louie Beam and Mrs. Lizzie Fredericks of Spencerville.

His boyhood days were spent at Spencerville after finishing the school course at that place, he evinced a desire to prepare himself to enter the ministry, and to that end spent five years in college at Greencastle, Indiana, three years at Evanston and one year at Boston. He spent twenty years in the ministry and lectured in chautauqua for many years.

He was a lover of the Bible and an interpreter of its truths and he served his Master and followers with an unselfishness and tirelessness which often proved detrimental to his health.

His death occurred in Nebraska where the family resided. The body, accompanied by his wife, was brought to Spencerville where private funeral services were held at the Walter Funeral Home, with Rev. Roy S. Brown, officiating. Burial was made in White City cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank friends and neighbors for their sympathy and floral offerings.

OBITUARY

Hariett, daughter of Aaron and Mary Paff, was born in Cedar Creek Township, Allen County, Indiana, March 6, 1845 and died at her home in Spencerville, Indiana, August 13, 1927. Aged 73 years, 5 months and 7 days.

She was married to John Bair, October 15, 1874. He departed this life December 9, 1917. To them were born five children: Aaron E. of Palo Alto, Calif; Mamie E. and Ross B. at home; Addie C. Miller of near Hicksville, Ohio; Lillie P. Boger of Fort Wayne; four grandchildren and one great grandchild; one brother, Andrew J. Paff of Fort Wayne, Indiana and many other relatives and friends to mourn her departure.

She united with the Evangelical Lutheran Church at Spencerville, Indiana, more than forty years ago. She was a great lover of her home and found great comfort in reading her Bible. She bore her suffering patiently, never complaining but often expressed her desire to go and be at rest.

Funeral services were held at the home Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, the Rev. Roy S. Brown, officiating. Burial in White City cemetery.

BEATING THEM TO IT ONLY SOLUTION

Our mails are going to commence to get heavier now, because the concerns that depend mail patronage for their profits are mailing out their fall catalogues and announcements. They're the smartest advertisers in the world, these mail-order folks, and they never let any grass grow under their feet. If they are advertising for business now there is nothing to keep the man at home, who has to compete with them, from doing the same thing. Where the home man loses out is in waiting until the mail-order and catalogue men have jumped in ahead and skimmed the cream. Time waits or no man, and neither does the fellow who wants to buy something and has the money to pay for it. The first one that gets to him is usually the one who sells him. The man who has something to sell and who wants to beat the mail-order man to it can do so by advertising NOW, while the catalogues are just commencing to flood the mails. He will also be the one with the least to complain of when the fall and winter seaseeon has passed.

The facts are, no merchant has the right to complain about his competitor, when he is not advertising or writing the buying public to trade with him. People usually spend with the fellow who shows his goods with illustrations and prices and all this the local merchant can do. One man said the reason he did not advertise was that just as he would get asleep, in would come a customer and bother him.

"Miss South Bend" is Now "Miss Indiana"

Again we come to our readers with some interesting bits of news concerning the selection of Miss Hilda Koch of South Bend, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Koch of St. Joe, as "Miss Indiana" at Gary, Indiana, on July 29-30-31. Each one of the extracts are written by Mrs. Dorothy Konold, her chaperon.

Previous To Gary Meet

"Miss Koch has been busy for the past few days collecting the wardrobe which she will wear at the pageant. The girls are to be judged in three costumes, evening gown, sport outfit and bathing suit.

"Miss South Bend' traveled in a dark blue georgette dress, fashioned on straight lines, trimmed with tiny pleating, donated to her wardrobe by Greene's Wearing Apparel Shop. With this she wore a dark blue handkerchief felt hat and black patent leather pumps.

Will Attend Ball

"Friday evening Miss Koch with her chaperon, will be a guest at the American beauty ball to be given at the Gay Mill gardens in Gary. For this occasion, Miss Koch has selected a white taffeta period frock, made with a tight bodice and deep full flounces of taffeta picoted in silver. She is wearing a dainty white lace shawl, donated by Robertson Bros. Co., and silver slippers with this gown.

"Her sport costume is a peach colored crepe two-piece frock, banded in white, with which she will wear a white handkerchief felt Vagabond hat, and white kidskin pumps given to her by the Blackstone bootery.

"She has also chosen white for her bathing suit, and white opera length stockings and white kidskin pumps. Her bathing cloak is green and gold, fashioned on the order of a Spanish shawl, which was donated for the occasion by the George Wyman Co.

Personality Counts

"The famous Atlantic City pageant, which begins Sept. 6, is more than a beauty contest. Personality and poise, character and refinement—all these are points to be considered and scored by the disinterested judges. It is a remarkable test, and the title is certain to go ultimately to the girl who has the greatest amount of that intangible something we call charm.

"Hilda has much of this.

Monday while walking through the Gary Municipal beach pavilion, a policewoman slipped thro the crowd and lightly touched Miss Koch on the arm.

"You win, my dear," said she, "You have everything!"

"And that was in the afternoon sun! Hilda needs no spotlight to accentuate her lovely natural coloring.

South Bend will honor her many times in the next few weeks before we leave for Atlantic City.

Accepts Honors Modestly

"Hilda is not the sort of girl who causes one to turn and stare in quick and involuntary admiration. Most of the people who are instantly striking are a disappointment when analyzed. Hilda has the sort of beauty which dawns gradually. You look and look, pleased, gratified and finally quite overwhelmed. You say to yourself; "What a perfect little thing she is! She has face, figure—"

"Then she speaks, and her voice does the rest. It is low and quiet and unassuming. No matter what I asked of her as chaperon she smiled up at me and said sweetly; "All right! I surly will!" Her willingness to take advice, her appreciation of anything and everything which is done for her, gives her a decided advantage over the modern know-it-all young lady.

"Yes, our Hilda has taken her upward climb on the ladder of fame so modestly and quietly that everyone who meets her will be glad to boost. And that's how they get to the top!"

Introduction at Terre Haute

"Miss Indiana" made her first bow to the public in Terre Haute Saturday evening. The Atlantic City pageant management has wired her to be in readiness for her introduction in all the larger cities of the state between now and September 6.

Hilda Koch remains sweetly unconscious of the importance which is now attached to her name and title. Lunching with her today she told me in detail of the little things her friends have done for her, adding again: "Why should everybody be so kind?"

Hilda is particularly delighted with the attitude her family has taken. In the beginning she worried for fear her mother might disapprove of her appearance in the state-wide contest. A last minute telegram carrying parental sanction rolled the clouds away, however, and sent Hilda to the stage with a light-hearted smile."

Busy Selecting Wardrobe

She said today:

"Grandmother and grandfather are simply delighted, too, and you've no idea how much that helps me to go on. If they were not all behind me it would be difficult, no matter how much the outside world might approve.

There is much shopping to be done, of course, for Hilda will require quite an extensive wardrobe for this trip through the state, as well as for the Atlantic City pageant, and "Miss Indiana," being a normal 19-year-old girl, is having the time of her life "trying on" various costumes.

"I have noticed one truly remarkable thing throughout it all. Hilda never inspires jealousy in anyone. Her modesty is a shield which quickly turns aside all poisonous arrows. Usually a girl thus feted is so bitterly envied by other girls that there is a tendency to belittle her attractions. Not so in Hilda's case. In every instance her own sex boosted her."

Proud of "Lucky Penny"

If you asked her how these events came about she would probably pull out the lucky penny she carries in her pocket and tell you that her talisman had something to do with it. And perhaps that's true, for there is an unusual story connected with the copper.

When Miss Koch was selected by the Atlantic City management to represent South Bend in Gary, the girls in her office at the I. A. C. rushed out to buy some things for her wardrobe. And when the bill was paid there was just one cent left. This was brought back to Hilda, bidding her keep it.

"All our best wishes and love are represented by that coin," they told her, "so it ought to bring you luck."

"Hilda smiles as she tells the story, but you can see that she will cherish the lucky penny always."

THE STONE AGE

Ardent Suitor: "This ring I offer you is a symbol of the love I bear for you. It has no end!"

Haughty Damsel: "It is also a symbol of the love I bear for you. It has no beginning."

OPTOMETRY—ITS VALUE TO THE PUBLIC

By Ed W. Hicks, Optometrist and Optician

Explain the Optometrist's services.

An error of vision is usually caused by a defect in the size or shape of the eye. It is impossible to alter the eye itself, so by the use of lenses ground especially for each case the Optometrist corrects the error.

Does the Optometrist make a specialty of comfortable vision?

Yes, he strives in every case to give his patient the most comfortable vision possible.

You Can't Buy a Better Fence Post at any Price

NO matter where you go or what you pay, you can't beat the quality that is built into RED TOP Steel Fence Posts.

It is the pioneer steel fence post. It has always been made from tough, springy, railroad rail steel—that's why you see so many RED TOPS lasting so long in the fence lines in this state—that's why hard-headed buyers like the Railroads and the U. S. Government are steady buyers of RED TOPS.

This quality of steel together with the special features of these posts are reasons why we recommend them to you—our farmer customers in this vicinity.

Red Top Steel Fence Posts

If you want to get your fence post job done once and for all—get it done in the shortest possible time and at least expense, and get all the possible service out of the fencing you buy, come in and let us show you all the features of the RED TOP post, how easy it is to drive and how it is the cheapest post in the long run.

FASHION'S FAVORITE ENSEMBLE; MILLINERY TAKES UP FLOWERS

WOMEN of fashion are indulging in the luxury of all-white this summer. One has only to count up the cleaner's bills at the end of a "white season" to agree that it is no misnomer to refer to the all-white costume as a luxury.

Somehow both madam and mademoiselle appear at their most charming, clad in pure white. Not only is the allurement of all-white due to its becomingness, but its immaculate daintiness ever bears the appeal of the exquisite. So it is that the vogue for white is with us, particularly so these late midsummer days.

White coats posed over white frocks, topped with chic white felt hats, such is fashion's favorite ensemble. Coats range from the simplest tailored types of white flannel, also the knitted kind, to most elegant modes, the latter frequently cuffed and collared with white fox.

Meet, if you please, in the picture, Gertrude Olmstead, the youthful film actress, who is of the newer generation of stars, wearing an adorable all-white costume just such as is the envy and admiration of all who behold. White faille is the chosen medium for this ravishing model with a wealth of snowy fox fur. A bright red heel on a white kid pump and a smart petit-point embroidered bag are the chic accessories which enhance this lovely costume.

The return to favor of the separate has only to view the latest models from Paris to appreciate the fact that flowers are decidedly in the millinery picture, but in ways most unique and distinctive.

The tendency is marked toward flat flowers for they lend themselves so successfully to the idea of being built into the structure of the hat without interfering with its original contour. The method of applying trimming so as to maintain an undisturbed silhouette must be observed, in order to secure a proper styling, according to the modern conception of good designing.

A flat flower treatment is carried out adroitly by forming a semi-crown of roses for the black straw hat shown at the top to the right in this picture.

The little bonnets in this collection are quaintly flower-trimmed. The one to the left flattens a few velvet daisies against its side crown with outreaching sprays of heather. Also note the fact that two wee ribbon ruffles becomingly frame the face.

The other cloche adopts an intricate working of flowerets of every hue and kind from artificial to those of metal-ombre ribbon, touches of hand painting blending the entire into an artful color symphony.

With flowery print frocks whose multitudinous panels and jabots flutter and sway at the touch of every breeze, likewise with the picturesque frill-skirted organdies, which have reappeared upon fashion's screen, gauzy hats, broad-brimmed and flower trimmed are the natural accompaniment.

There is, on the large hat to the left, the usual chiffon flange, which so gracefully serves to make this wide brim look wider. Flat flowers elaborate the crown with a summery transparent rose resting on the brim. The vogue of huge brims has revived the fashion of posing a single large flower underneath next the face, as evidenced in the concluding hat in this group.

Lesson From Old Negro

An old negro taught a motorist a real lesson over near Auxvasse the other day, the Review says. The motorist crashed into a rickety wagon being driven by the negro. The man in the car started to speed on without reckoning of the damage he had done. He had gone only a short distance when there was a loud explosion and a tire went flat. The negro crawled from the wreckage of the wagon, and went over to the motorist.

"Boss, you seems t' be in a heap o' trouble. Kin Ah be uv enny help to yer?" The motorist wilted, took a billfold from his pocket and peeled off several bills. Handing them to the aged negro, he said, "Yes, old man, you have helped me; take this money."—Kansas City Star.

TWO HOMES MADE HAPPY

By Women Who Used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I think it is the most wonderful medicine I ever tried," is the statement made by Mrs. Goldie Shoup of St. Joseph, Illinois. She declares that after taking the Compound she is in better health than before.

Mrs. J. Storms of 29 Lane Street, Paterson, N. J., writes: "I cannot speak too highly of your medicine and I recommend it to all my friends."

These statements were taken from two enthusiastic letters which tell of the help that has been received from using the Vegetable Compound. Both Mrs. Shoup and Mrs. Storms were in a run-down condition which caused them much unhappiness. When women are suffering from lack of strength and from weakness, their own life and that of their family is affected. When they feel well and strong and are able to do their housework easily, happy homes are the result.

Machine That Talks Is Recent Invention

The astonishing experiment of constructing artificial lips, palate and tongue, and making them utter words, phrases, and even sentences by driving a current of air through them with a foot bellows, has been successfully carried out by Sir Richard Paget, an English barrister, who since the war has devoted himself to phonetic experiments. It is said that Sir Richard can literally talk with his fingers—not after the familiar fashion of the deaf mutes, but by making them take the place of the ordinary vocal organs.

Sir Richard has developed an astonishingly new theory of the origin of speech. Primitive man, he holds, began with gesture as his sole language. Later on he found it was convenient to imitate the gestures of his hands by using lips, tongue and palate. Then he accompanied these by cries, and so speech gradually developed.—The Forum.

The KITCHEN CABINET

(©, 1927, Western Newspaper Union.)

"Eggs are not the only things that are given added life and power by being brooded over. If we want to enlarge and multiply everything unpleasant or that which has offended us, brooding over it will do it."

SEASONABLE FOODS

During the summer months we enjoy other foods than meat: occasionally a day of steaks or chops will be enjoyed, but the bulk of the meals are better for us with little meat.

Onions on Toast.—Cook a bunch of young green onions in enough water to cover until tender. Drain off the water, add a tablespoonful of butter with salt and pepper. Prepare buttered toast and pour over the hot buttered onions, moistening with a bit of the liquor in which they were cooked. Serve hot.

Nuts With Cheese.—Beat to a cream one tablespoonful of butter, then add one-half cupful of cottage cheese which has been well seasoned with salt and cream. Cream cheese may be used if at hand. Add one-half cupful of chopped hickory nut meats and serve, adding a bit of lemon juice and make into balls. Serve as a salad with lettuce, or with crackers as a dessert, with coffee.

Nut Cutlets.—Take one cupful of bread crumbs, one-fourth cupful of finely chopped almonds, a little onion or chives, season well with salt and pepper. Put over the heat one cupful of milk; when boiling add the bread crumbs and four tablespoonfuls of butter. Cook until thick. When cool add the nuts, a little parsley; shape into cutlets, roll in egg and crumbs and fry in deep fat. Serve with tomato sauce.

Seasonable Good Things.

During the summer weather we enjoy light foods and those which are the least tax upon the digestion. Salad is a dish which is found on most menus.

Egg and Vegetable Salad.—Take five hard cooked eggs, one small green pepper, one-half cupful of finely chopped celery, four tablespoonfuls of tomato catsup, one tablespoonful of lemon juice, two tablespoonfuls of oil, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of paprika, two cupfuls of shredded cabbage.

Cut eggs into halves crosswise, remove the yolks and mash them. Cut peppers, remove veins and seeds and mince the pepper fine. Combine the celery with the pepper and egg yolks seasoning and add enough mayonnaise dressing to moisten. Fill the whites of the eggs with this mixture. Mix cabbage with French dressing, using three tablespoonfuls of oil to one of vinegar, with seasonings. Serve the eggs on a bed of cabbage.

Egg-Cheese Custards.—Butter four ramekins. Divide two cupfuls of bread cubes among the cups. Heat two cupfuls of milk and add one-half pound of good rich cheese cut into bits, or better grated; add a teaspoonful of salt, paprika to taste and two beaten eggs. Pour over the bread in the ramekins and set them into a pan of hot water to bake in a moderate oven until the custard is set. Serve hot. Nice for luncheon dish with a lettuce salad.

Baked Fish With Shrimp Sauce.—Prepare a stuffed fish for baking and bake as usual. Serve with the following: Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter in a saucepan, add one tablespoonful of flour; when well blended add one-fourth of a cupful of tomato soup, one and one-half cupfuls of boiling water, one teaspoonful of paprika, a dash of cayenne and salt to season, with three tablespoonfuls of lemon juice and one pound of cooked shrimps; simmer for five minutes. Nice with broiled or boiled fish.

Onion Salad.—Chop or cut into fine cubes a large Bermuda onion, add enough cubed apple to make up the desired amount to serve, cut up a half dozen dates and serve with a good salad dressing, after seasoning well.

Pineapple Souffle.—Melt one-fourth cupful of butter, add the same of flour and blend well. Add one cupful of milk gradually and bring to the boiling point, then add one cupful of drained pineapple, the crushed or grated kind. Beat the yolks of three eggs, add one-fourth cupful of sugar, cook until thick. Cool slightly and fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites, add a dash of nutmeg and a few drops of vanilla. Bake in a slow oven until well puffed. Serve warm with whipped cream or a hard sauce.

Photos of All Killed

Photographs of all of the thirty-three New Brighton (Pa.) men who were killed in the World war or who died in service, are now hanging in the hall of the New Brighton post of the American Legion. Two years' work on the part of post members was necessary to obtain all the photographs, the families of a number of the men having moved away from the city. The pictures were enlarged to a uniform size and placed in attractive frames.

POULTRY FACTS

POULTRY NEEDS CARE IN SUMMER

Though egg production drops in hot weather the poultry flock should receive attention so that best results may be secured when production starts on the upgrade again.

"The decline in egg production begins in June," says Dr. B. F. Kaupp, head of the poultry department of the North Carolina agricultural college. "We estimate that each hen will average about 13 eggs during this month. The breeding season is also over in June and it is a wise plan to sell all the old male birds not needed for another season. Those males that are wanted should be placed in a separate field with plenty of range and a comfortable small house. The male is not needed for egg production, and when he is kept away from the flock, infertile eggs are produced. An infertile egg keeps better in hot weather than a fertile egg. In any case, it is wise to gather the eggs frequently and market them at least twice each week. For best prices, they should be kept clean and cool."

Doctor Kaupp suggests that it might be a good idea to caponize a few of the early cockerels and grow them out on range this summer for the holiday trade. Capons are in demand around Thanksgiving and Christmas, and with a little care, a good trade in capons may be built up.

When birds are dipped to control body pests, a warm day should be selected and a solution of 1 per cent coal tar dip used. The house should be well ventilated. Open the rear ventilators but do not permit a draft to blow across the birds.

Red mites play havoc with the vitality of the farm flock, states Doctor Kaupp. For this reason it is not a bad plan to paint the perch poles with pure dip or some used cylinder oil that has been diluted with kerosene.

All birds need plenty of shade and fresh clean water during summer, and the poultryman who does not provide these simple necessities makes a serious mistake, advises Doctor Kaupp.

Cause of Heavy Death Rate of Young Chicks

Ninety per cent of the sick and dead chicks received by the veterinary department of Purdue university during March and April of this year, had bacillary white diarrhea. These chicks came from 1,000 flocks. In most cases the letters that accompanied the different lots indicated that the owners did not suspect the true cause of the heavy death rate, and most of them believed that the feed was responsible for the loss.

The name "bacillary white diarrhea" is somewhat misleading. Many poultrymen believe that it is a disease of the intestines and the sick chicks always show a diarrhea. As a matter of fact, there is very little evidence of bowel trouble, either in the form of symptoms or lesions, in the most destructive outbreaks and the highly acute cases. Birds that survive the infection for several days or a week show lesions in the liver, lungs, heart and intestines. The lungs are commonly affected. This gives rise to difficult or labored breathing, and poultrymen have frequently mistaken bacillary white diarrhea for brooder pneumonia, a less common disease.

Teaching Chicks to Roost Prevents Crooked Bones

Teach the chicks to roost. Crooked breast bones may be the result of too early roosting on roosts which do not support the body, but a 2 by 2 inch scantling with the upper edges slightly rounded, placed at about a foot from the floor at first, will not cause crooked breast bones and will prevent huddling in corners and piling up. Teaching the chicks to roost is bother; it means going to the brood coops before dark and putting up the chicks that have gone to the corners. But once they are roost-trained, there is little danger of chicks piling up even though we have the occasional cold night which plays havoc with chicks in cold coops.

Time to Caponize

The time to caponize is when the cockerel is 1½ to 2½ pounds in weight or two to four months of age. Slips result when a part of one of the testicles is not removed. Beginners sometimes have as many as 50 per cent of slips. Next year you will probably have better success. When a capon fails to develop it is not because they were caponized too young but probably due to worms or some physical defect not apparent to a casual glance or examination.

Intestinal Worm Cure

Tobacco dust may be used in the treatment of intestinal worm infestation of young chicks after they are six or eight weeks of age. It should be used as it is with older birds, 1 pound of dust of not less than 1 per cent nicotine content to each 50 pounds of mash. It should not be assumed that either chicks or older fowls have worms in sufficient numbers to do harm without an examination of the interior of the intestines of one or more dead birds.

Deadly Mushroom Is Enjoyed by Squirrel

Poisonous mushrooms seem to have no terrors for the lively red squirrel of the woods, according to Robert T. Hatt of the biology department of New York university. He noticed during his researches in the field that red squirrels fed freely on two poisonous species, and that they seemed to prefer them also when they came to store food for the winter. Incredulous, he tried mushroom diets on caged red squirrels, and found that they selected the same two species out of a variety of edible fungi offered to them. The poisonous mushrooms are the so-called fly agaric, Amanita muscaria, which is reputed to be almost invariably fatal to human beings and is sometimes used as a fly poison, and a reddish-colored species known as Russula emetica, which has a disagreeable peppery taste and if eaten raw will provoke violent vomiting. The reason for the immunity enjoyed by the squirrels is as great a riddle as their apparent preference for these two toxic species.

Poisonous in Part

A word of warning: Many flowers are poisonous or semi-poisonous. Those of the daffodil, for instance, are powerfully emetic. It is not generally understood that many plants may be poisonous in one part. Make a down payment of $5.00 and receive, in accordance with the Sunbeam Saving Season offer now in effect, a credit of $15.00. Start paying the balance, when your Sunbeam is installed.

The Sunbeam thoroughly heats the home with 5 to 7 rooms, but requires no basement. Only a heater constructed like the Sunbeam with a cast iron heating unit of the furnace type; an 84 pound fire-pot; one joint above fire bed; an inner casing that doubles the heating surface, can give this result. For the heating capacity, economy, efficiency and long life of a cabinet heater depend on these parts, which you do not see. Everyone can afford Sunbeam whole-home warmth. Sunbeam prices are now the lowest in Sunbeam history.

Regular Sunbeam Prices, $90, $100, $110

Mr. Cooley and son Billy, arrived from Blytheville, Arkansas, Friday and all returned to the lake Sunday.

The first real visible move toward cleaning up for the big event, Home Coming, September 3rd, is the scraping of Main street and it sure is in a very fine shape. Chas. Koch is the fellow who did the work and it is a creditable job. Now there is a number of other noticable places that ought to be shaped up before the big day. Take for instance, the alleys and side streets, in fact they are in the worst condition in years. Come on, let's get a little pride.

Mrs. Burl Rude very pleasantly surprised her husband Sunday when the following relatives came to help celebrate his thirty-second birthday anniversary: Mr. and Mrs. Dolpha Dove and five daughters of Coldwater, Mich., Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Hartsough, Mr. Will Haverstock and Mrs. Coyle of Goshen, Ind., Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Vanzile and daughter, Fern, of Auburn, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Rosenberry and son, Lavon of Moores and Mr. and Mrs. Oren Rude of St. Joe.

Joe Placid, an Austrian who is tenant on the H. W. Mountz farm south of Garrett, was fined $10 and costs and sentenced to the penal farm for thirty-one days by Acting Judge James T. Mountz in the DeKalb circuit court Monday afternoon. Placid, it was reported, has been drunk much of the time and mistreated his children, driving one of his sons away from home. On complaint of neighbors, a search warrant was issued Sunday by Justice E. A. McClintock and the Placid home was searched by Sheriff John C. Armstrong, Deputy Sheriff Russell Dove and Chief of Police Charles Davis of Auburn. The officers report that they found Placid drunk and that they located a half-pint of moonshine liquor and five bottles of home brew. Placid was placed in the county jail.

Look at the people around you and size them up according to their deeds. How many of them have a ghost of a chance of getting to heaven, unless they make a radical change in their mode of living? Very few, you think. Now look in the mirror and study the one you see. What better chance has he?

Mr. and Mrs. D. C. McCann have just returned from a trip in Ohio, making visits at Deshler, thence to Dayton, Xenia and Jamestown, with friends. They also visited at Washington Court House and Jeffersonville. At Dayton they visited the aviation field and the Putnam dam that keeps the flood water from overflowing Dayton. This dam is 50 ft. high and on top is 40 feet wide and extends for ¾ of a mile and is used as a highway. Many interesting sights were theirs on this trip.

The Fish and Game Club picnic last Saturday was not well attended because of the people being so extremely busy, and in the afternoon the shower kept some away. Only a portion of the stunts were pulled off. In the evening A. E. Bodine, field organizer of the department of conservation made a short talk before the band concert, giving the public some of the high spots of the value of the local club in our community. Pictures were shown after the concert on Indiana and a reel on fishing for bass with live bait. A good crowd was present in the evening.

A complete surprise was pulled off Sunday on Jesse Lofjus when forty-eight relatives came in the morning to remind him of his 48th birthday. Not until someone asked him how old he was, did he really tumble to the fact that he had a birthday. All brought well filled baskets. Those present were:—Charles and James Hilton and their families. Art Stalhood and Miss Lucy Briner, all of Camden, Mich., Earl Robison and family of Ossian, Ohio, Dan Johnson and faily of Waterloo, Fred Reeder and family of Auburn, Jay Bleeks and family, Silas Reasoner, Mrs. Harriet Haifley and son, Milton of St. Joe.
